Since the smashing of the "gang of four" and particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the party Central Committee has led vast numbers of revolutionary literary and art workers to bring order out of chaos and to energetically correct leftist mistakes on the literary and art front. This is aimed at restoring the true colors of Mao Zedong Thought and enabling the guiding ideology for our literary and art work to retake the path of historical materialism. Under the guidance of historical materialism, the great majority of literary and art workers have emancipated their minds, proceeded from the fundamental interests and the needs of the masses of the people, proceeded from the common experience in life and reality as shared by themselves and the masses of the people, produced large numbers of works that truly reflect the livelihood and aspirations of the masses of the people, portrayed a number of images of new socialist people and more artistic images of every description, enabled our country's socialist literature and art to flourish on an unprecedented scale and also enabled our literary and art front to become one of the very successful departments in our country. Over the past 2 years, under the situation in which the leftist pernicious influence has not been completely eliminated, some phenomena of bourgeois liberalization have emerged once again within the literary and art sphere. An important ideological reason for this emergence is this: A few comrades do not understand that real freedom can only be achieved by acting in accordance with the law of historical development. Therefore, after breaking through the leftist confinement, they not only have not returned to the path of being under the guidance of historical materialism but have made another error in being subjective and self-willed. An important way to overcome the existing phenomena of bourgeois liberalization is to assist all revolutionary literary and art workers in conscientiously upholding historical materialism as their guidance. Party leaders of our literary and art departments must shoulder this important responsibility.

There have been great changes in historical conditions since the publication of the "Talks" 40 years ago. It is imperative to revise some of Comrade Mao Zedong's specific conclusions on literature and art and to develop Mao Zedong literary and art thought. However, the fundamental tenet of historical materialism as expounded by Comrade Mao Zedong in the "Talks" is not obsolete; on the contrary, it has been borne out by the literary and art practice during the new historical period. Although contingents of the masses of the people have been greatly expanded during the new historical period, there is no change in the law that the masses of the people are the force in the making of history; although the exploiting class no longer exists as a class, class struggles still exist within a certain scope and the viewpoint of class analysis still provides guiding leads; although the great majority of intellectuals including literary and art workers have become a part of the working class, the practical activities carried out by the masses of the people in the forefront of production and reform are still the aorta of life and still combine the spirit of this age, and immersing oneself among the masses of the people is still the only correct way for socialist literary and art workers to produce their works. If we depart from the guidance of historical materialism, we will commit errors and take roundabout courses in handling these fundamental issues of literature and art. Moreover, the new historical situation has made new and higher demands on vast numbers of literary and art workers in upholding historical materialism as their guidance and has also made new and higher demands on the whole cause of literature and art. In the face of the shift of the work of the whole party and new changes in class and human relaitons, in the face of continuous emergence of new problems in people's livelihood, and in the face of the improvement being made in people's material life and the development of people's spiritual demands, how are our literary and art creation and criticism to become the "faithful spokesman of the masses"? How are we to correctly reflect new human relations? How are we to depict the beauty of socialist human nature? How are we to truly and correctly depict all types of social contradictions? How are we to handle relations between singing praises and exposing and revealing? How are we to meet all types of cultural needs of the masses of the people while heightening their spiritual state and capacity for appreciation? How are we to use the spirit of the new age formed by the masses of the people during their building of socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization to illuminate literary and art works of different contents, forms, themes and styles so as to do a still better job of assisting the masses of the people in promoting our modernization program? To do these things, we must regard historical materialism as our guidance, use some basic prinicples of Marxist literary and art thought-Mao Zedong literary and art thought as our guidance, and progressively approach and settle issues during the course of new practice. The process of progressively settling these issues under the guidance of historical materialism is also a process of continuously developing Marxist literary and art thought-Mao Zedong literary and art thought. This is the only way to enable our country's socialist cause of literature and art to further flourish during the new period. Developing the cause of literature and art under the guidance of abstract human nature, the "new principles of aesthetics," the "subjective reflex," existentialism," personalism, and other forms of historical idealism will certainly run counter to the fundamental interests and needs of the masses of the people, go against the demands set on the building of socialism during the new period and fall onto the wrong road which is out of line with the path of socialist literature and art. Only by unceasingly and conscientiously upholding historical materialism as one's guidance can one advance along with the advance of history and maintain one's position in the forefront within the socialist literary and art army. If one departs from the guidance of historical materialism, one will lag behind the times. This is beyond doubt.

With the advance of history, historical materialism will increasingly show its incomparably powerful vitality.

We believe that under the leadership of the party Central Committee, after conscientiously studying and summing up experience, vast numbers of literary and art workers will certainly heighten their awareness of upholding historical materialism and Marxism as their guidance, enable our country's socialist literature and art to unceasingly flourish and develop along the orientation of "serving the people and socialism," play greater roles in building socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization, and inspire the masses of the people to have high morale for the making of new history!

DING LING DISCUSSES MAO'S CONCERN FOR WRITERS

[Article by Ding Ling [0002 3781]: "Chairman Mao's Letter to Us"]

[Text] During the Yanan period, Comrade Mao Zedong left an impression on me that he was one of the party leaders who was most capable of treating others as equals. He was always able to get us to speak without any inhibition, to speak our minds freely. There was no need for us to worry about the possibility that he would regard himself as a sacred and supreme leader, commander, helmsman or someone who commanded a powerful army. He possessed a manner of being courteous to the wise and condescending to the scholarly. He talked cheerfully and humorously and very often hit the nail on the head, and what he said was convincing. When he talked about our good qualities, he also pointed out our weak points. When he talked about our shortcomings, he used a consultative tone and even humorous language so that we would not feel bad. What he said provided much food for thought and made us ponder it carefully. In the spring of 1937, he once dropped into my dwelling place and met a number of youths who came from the Kuomintang-ruled areas and were studying in the Yanan anti-Japanese university. He said to me smilingly: "Ding Ling, I think that these intellectuals like to get close to you. Here it is more or less like a club of cultured people." I knew that he was criticizing me because I did not persist in going deep among workers, peasants and soldiers. At that time, I had just resigned the post of deputy director of the political department of the central guard regiment and was busy with the work of the writers' association in the Soviet area. Later, Chairman Mao said that I had a manner of being an unconventional and self-indulgent intellectual. I realized that I was being more severely criticized, but I felt comfortable because he truly understood me and knew that I had such a shortcoming. Afterwards, I told other comrades of Comrade Mao's impression of me; they said that they agreed with his assessment.

Chairman Mao read my articles and discussed them with me. Later, after reading my articles, he commented on my articles. Although our discussions were ordinary ones, I regarded him as a most wise man and an intimate friend, and engraved his pleasant voice in my mind forever.

On the morning of 1 July 1944, I received the letter. At that time Comrade Ouyang Shan and I were engaged in writing for the writers' association of the border region located outside the southern gate of Yanan. We attended a meeting on cooperatives in the border region. I wrote an article entitled "Tian Baolin" and Ouyang Shan wrote "Living in the New Society." Tian Baolin and Liu Jianzhang were model workers of the cooperatives in the border region. On that afternoon, Ouyang Shan and I were invited to visit Chairman Mao at this dwelling in Zaoyuan. After talking briefly, we ate dinner together. I still remember that Comrade Ouyang Shan drank a lot of wine. After it got dark, we rode horses from Zaoyuan. Chairman Mao's letter was kept thereafter by Comrade Ouyang Shan. In the spring of 1979, I returned to Beijing. Comrade Bai Ye of RENMIN RIBAO learned from me the whereabouts of this letter. He made a long-distance call to Comrade Ouyang Shan in Guangzhou and this information was confirmed. When Comrade Ouyang Shan came to Beijing to attend a meeting, he gave me the copy of the letter. Not long after that, the museum also gave me a copy of it.

Comrade Mao's praise of "Tian Baolin" was not limited to the letter alone. I learned that in meetings of senior cadres he also mentioned it. In early July 1944, due to the fact that I was dashing off an article "The 129th Division and the Shanxi, Hebei, Shandong and Henan Border Region," I asked Comrade Chen Geng for some materials. He told me happily that in a meeting of senior cadres, Chairman Mao had said: "Ding Ling is now going deep among workers, peasants and soldiers and her 'Tian Baolin' was well written. As long as a writer goes deep among the masses, he is able to write good articles." Other comrades also told me that they heard the same opinion. After hearing that, I was of course grateful to Chairman Mao. But I thought that "Tian Baolin" was not a well-written article. It was not the article which I like most either. I realized that Chairman Mao was encouraging me and had given the green light to me so that I could further identify myself with workers, peasants and soldiers. What he said helped me a lot so that I would march forward without any obstruction. He had opened up a smooth and broad path for me so that I could write my articles, be a disciplined writer and engage in creative literary and art work. What he did was not for me alone, but for many, many literary and art workers. Over the past 40 years, I have experienced many vicissitudes of life. When I reread this letter, it gives full vent to my feelings; at that time, Chairman Mao knew people very well. He showed every concern for others and always thought about his work and other people. He was very eager to help others!

In 1942 I wrote an article "My Thoughts on 8 March Festival." Although I was neither seriously criticized nor punished, there was much gossiping going on behind my back. In 1943 a campaign to examine cadres' personal histories was launched. My fate was the same as those comrades who were once arrested by the Kuomintang. We could not escape being suspected of this or that. Only a few people said things to our faces, but there were a number of people who gossiped about us behind our backs. Gossip is a fearsome thing and the onlooker sees the game best. Chairman Mao knew this very well. Chairman Mao commanded the great army and exerted arduous efforts for the revolution. He needed intellectuals and writers and knew the weak points and shortcoming of these people. Personally he might not have linked these people, but the revolution needed people, a great number of intellectuals and talented people. Proceeding from the needs of the revolution, Chairman Mao made friends with and helped these people so that they would consciously change their former individualist stand of the petite bourgeoisie and bourgeoisie. He intiated the campaign of rectification and study and held a forum of literature and art. All these were good things. It was too bad that Kang Sheng availed himself of the opportunity to launch the so-called "rescuing campaign," rescuing those who "have taken a wrong step in life" and frenziedly harming a number of comrades and the cause of the party. At that time, Chairman Mao was very wise and put forth the important guiding principles such as "leading cadres should be responsible and do their work personally" and "not a single individual should be killed and most of them should not be arrested," and so forth. At the same time, he took measures to carry out the work of screening. As a result, a great number of comrades were emancipated and readily returned to their former posts. I believe that Chairman Mao's remarks expressed in this letter and other meetings were, at least, to rehabilitate my personal reputation among the masses. I admired and was grateful to him.

At dusk in Zaoyuan in Yanan, a new moon was hanging in the sky. The summer breeze was spreading the remanent fragrance of jujube flowers. His walk, pleasant talk, dignified bearing and gentle and elegant manner left a most beautiful impression on me. Those who are the loftiest must be most modest and open-minded. Those who have meager learning must be those who behave most affectedly. I think that Chairman Mao's manner of treating others as equals and being easy to get along with are things that I should emulate all my life. I should urge myself to earnestly practice what I have advocated and persist in doing so unremittingly.

YANGCHENG WANBAO CARRIES BAI HUA ARTICLE

[Article by Bai Hua [4101 2901] "The Erhai Is Yearning"]

[Text] In the 1950's, I climbed Cangshan Mountain twice and went boating on the Erhai. Thereafter Cangshan Mountan and Erhai have appeared vaguely in my dreams for the past 20 years or so. In the spring of 1954, I went from Xiaguan to Dali city by a horse-drawn carriage for the first time. The scene is still fresh in my mind just as it it had happened yesterday evening. At that time, my state of mind was like that of Yang Shengan, a scholar of the Ming Dynasty: "Once I look at Cangshan Mountain, it seems as if I am flying over the mountain cheerily and gracefully.... The mountain is dark green and luxuriant and the sea is in a shape of a semicircular orchid. The city walls stand between the mountain and the sea. A tower stands out against the sky. Fragrances spread far and wide and the sweet aroma of flowers pleases people around. At this time it seems that I have just awoken from drunkenness and dreams. I am like a person who gets up after a long sleep." A girl of Bai nationality, in the same carriage and whom I had not met before, told me the story of the "cloud on which a woman stands to wait for her husband with eager expectation." The roaring of the 18 streams rushing down from the 19 mountain peaks of Cangshan Mountain and the clattering of the horse's hoofs were like charming music accompanying her narration. The sun, setting on the sloping peaks of Cangshan Mountain, cast its golden rays on her eyes which were full of fantasy. The flower of the ornament on her hair and her tassel quivered. After hearing the story, I gazed at Yuju peak for a long time. Due to the fact that it was not autumn or winter, the "cloud on which a woman stands to wait for her husband with eager expectation" did not appear. Dali, a city famous for its history and culture, is located between Cangshan Mountain and Erhai. It is also, without any artistic exaggeration, a city of flowers. The dark blue Erhai wears a gigantic garland all the year round. In the city of Dali, rare camellia and azalea flowers are planted in front of the doorwarys and windowsills of almost every household! The night business of tea houses is carried out amid flowering shrubs and under the violet vines. The red flowers, green branches and lamplight set one another off. Very often I sat there late into the night. A cup of puer tea which tasted bitter first and sweet later was infused with fresh spring water boiled by pine firewood. While leaning against the vines, looking at the vast silver river and listening to the billowing water, I recalled the false prosperity of the Tang empire during the years of Tianbao. General Xianyu Zhongtong and Li Mi sent expeditions to the west to punish the Nanzhao regime on two occasions. When they were defeated on the first occasion, they were exempted from punishment. Later a high official in the army called Yang Guozhong and made a false report on the victory of the expeditions. Xianyu Zhongtong was promoted to be a major of the capital. Li Mi had been drowned and it was thus impossible to promote him to a higher office. More than 200,000 troops of the Tang Dynasty died in vain. There are two mass graves in Fengyi and Xiaguan and poets of the subsequent dynasties wrote a number of poems unanimously accusing Emperor Ming of the Tang Dynasty of waging war against the Nanzhao regime. With the support of the great Tang empire, the king of the Nanzhao regime unified the Liuzhao regime. In a history of 165 years, the Nanzhao regime was faithfully obedient to the Tang Dynasty for 122 years. For a period of 43 years, the regime betrayed the Tang Dynasty. There were quite a great number of moving stories of making peace and of distressing tragedies of the war...which have been handed down from generation to generation in both oral and written forms. Some of the historical facts have been turned into beautiful fairytales in accordance with the fine desires of the people.

The rises and falls, the prosperity and decline over the past 1,000 years or so have left us with countless sorrows, deep pains and bitter memories.... Sometimes when I sat quietly with a cup in my hand, it seemed that I heard the evening drumbeat from a temple on Jizu Mountain located to the northeast of the Erhai. The first temple on Jizu Mountain was built in the Tang Dynasty because Buddhism prevailed at that time. During a long period covering the Song, Yuan, Ming and Qing Dynasties, a total number of 108 temples were built, including 36 monasteries and 72 Buddhist convents with Zhushen temples as their core. Although numerous wars and famines occurred during that period, these temples remained unchanged -- "fragrant smoke spread all through the golden temples and breeze from the pine forests blowing from as far as 10 li away never stops." Xu Xiake, a great Chinese traveler, set out from Jiangsu in 1636 and traveled with a monk called Jing Wen from the Ying Fu temple in Nanjing, who was determined to pay religious homage to Jizu Mountain. They were attacked by robbers in Xiangshui and Jing Wen was wounded and died in the Chongshan temple in Nanning. Xu Xiake scrupulously abided by Jing Wen's last words to take his bones and continue the arduous journey. He eventually arrived at Jizu Mountain on the 23d day of the 12th month of 1638 and buried his friend in the Xitan temple. All the monks on the mountain were deeply moved and built a stupa for the deceased. The epitaph on the tomb read: "He aspired to make the journey, during which he laid down his life. Who brought his remains here? It was the Honorable Xu Xiake." Two traveling companions met by chance, trusted each other with their own lives and deaths! I am proud of our great nation.

The years of youth are the most unforgettable! The clouds like a jade belt danced for me around Cangshan Mountain and tens of thousands of butterflies flew in a row to to salute me beside the butterfly spring. I once tried for a long time to identify and copy the faded characters on the "Yubei stele," "Dehua stele of Nanzhao" and the "stele in commemoration of the first emperor of the Yuan Dynasty who conquered Yunnan." Year in and year out, these steles stood on the roadside, combed by the wind and washed by the wind, explaining the long history to the latter generations. More than one-quarter of a century has already passed. It elapsed both swiftly and slowly. Gaiety always streaks past, whereas sufferings always linger on....

It happened to be the grand gathering of "the March fair" when I made the trip to Dali this time. There was a sea of people and I could only inch my way forward through a crowd of people of various nationalities in their festive dress. Traditional horse racing was held at the foot of Changshan Mountain. Although the horsemen of Xizang and Bai nationalities were gaily dressed and wrapped around with colorful flowers, most of the audience could not see them because the area was packed with people. They could only hear. The most regrettable thing was that some horses were lazy and not interested in competing for honors. They always tried to squeeze in among the crowds. It was really disappointing and funny. The open-air bazaars were unprecedentedly magnificent. There were shops in tents, trucks and carts and on bicycles and stalls.... Goods from inside and outside the province were piled up mountain-high. It was a pity that many state shops underestimated the purchasing power of the people of various nationalities in the western part of Yunnan. They came here for the purpose of selling slow-selling goods. As a result, their goods did not sell well. I was afraid that they could not even cover the cost of the freight. There were a great number of visitors but only a few customers. Some people of Xizang nationality from Kangba and Diqing areas sold a small amount of valuable traditional Chinese medicinal ingredients at high prices. A piece of "caterpillar fungus" which was not of high quality was sold at 30 cents. The price was much higher than that of the state shops in Beijing. The business at food and wine stalls was the best and they had a full house. Whether they could sell their goods or not, people ate and drank their fill. In the evening, the open-air cinemas showed some old and dull motion pictures, but there were great crowds of faithful audiences. I thought that if the director of any film studio was personally on the scene, he would have been very proud of himself.

Dali is a gigantic encyclopedia. This time which part should I turn to first? I do not know why I particularly liked to visit Jinsuo Island in the Erhai. It was probably because when I stood on the island, I had a broader line of vision. In the past, I only heard that the King of Nanzhao built a summer palace on Jinsuo Island. More than 20 years ago, I gazed out at it from the west coast of the sea. It was like a green cloud floating on the waves. This time, I could not see it. It was probably because my eyesight is getting poor! Due to the fact that the east coast was the nearest to Jinsuo Island, we had to take a car to go there first. There were five people taking the same car, including Comrade Peng Jingfeng, a writer from Yunnan, his daughter, a young wirter, Peng Gezhi, Comrade Yang Meiqing, a historian and expert on folk customs, who has been living in Dali for many years and our driver Xiao Wang. Yang Meiqing offered to undertake the task of being a guide. However, his enthusiasm was in inverse ratio to his memory. Whenever the car crossed a junction of three roads, we had to stop the car to ask the way. Old Yang spoke with a very heavy accent of a northern Anhui dialect. The more he asked, the more confused we became because the villagers of the Bai nationality did not understand what this old fellow, who was sweating all over with anxiety, said. We had to get out of the car to act as his interpreter. Lao Yang was severely short-sighted and a locust seemed to be deliberately teasing him. It flew by his eyes and landed on the window of the car. Lao Yang stretched out his hand and tried to grab it quickly. He nearly seized a lightbulb in the car. Little Gezhi took the lead in laughing aloud and the driver was also convulsed with laughter, even though he was not supposed to laugh. After arriving at the east coast of the Erhai, Lao Yang was compelled to admit bluntly: "Today, instead of being your guide, you acted as my guide." He never expected that such an honest remark would excite another burst of loud laughter.

Jinsuo Island was before our eyes. How could we get there? Was there any boat? As we were hesitating about the matter, two men of the Bai nationality passed by. One of them was a fisherman called Zhang Ruhua. He said: "We have a boat. We are returning to the island." There is no story without a coincidence. We jumped into a motorboat and it took only 10 minutes or so to draw alongside Jinsuo Island. What a small isalnd it was! It lay across the deep blue sea like a weaving shuttle. A fishing village with a population of more than 800 was located in the low-lying party in the center of the island. There was also a primary school. Just like other towns and villages in Dali Prefecture, new houses were constantly being built on the island. The houses of the Bai nationality are built on the same design -- single-color two-story buildings, single-color painted walls and single-color carved doors like six-piece painted screens engraved with designs of flowers and birds. The stone walls enclosed small yards. Half of these were used for vegetable plots and the other half were used for planting flowers. Without asking other people, we knew that the occupants of these houses were getting rich.

We, the unexpected guests, followed Zhang Ruhua and visited his house. We got excited after talking with his family. Of his 10 family members, 6 worked. Every night that he and his wife went to the sea to catch shrimp, they could catch about 150 jin. Every 4 jin of fresh shrimp would, after drying in the sun, become 1 jin of dried shrimp. The state purchasing price for fried shrimp is 90 cents per jin. This means that husband and wife could earn more than 30 yuan for 1 night of hard work. This is a considerable figure, indeed!

Just like cats which have a liking for fish, we kept on talking about fish. The host turned around and went out and, in about 10 minutes, had bought half a bucket of crucian carp for us. I myself roasted the fish in the kitchen and the host fried the shrimp and cooked the rice. The host and the guests ate their lunch together. It was a pity that the hosts did not appreciate my cooking. While eating he stubbornly maintained that if the fish had been cooked in the Bai nationality style, in a soup full of salt and chilli powder, the taste of the fish would have been more delicious. We eventually finished that half bucket of fish. Although our driver Xiao Wang knew that he had an allergic reaction to fish, he took a risk and ate the fish to his heart's content. As a result, swollen rashes occurred on his skin within 5 minutes. He was so itchy that he went to the clinic with Xiao Gezi for some "chlorpheniramine." He was all right after taking the tablets. Otherwise, both we and he would have been worried on our way back to Dali.

When we left Jinsuo Island, the host sailed his motorboat on a circuit of the island. After that we landed on the east coast. When I reviewed the situation of Jinsuo Island, I suddenly realized that originally it was a desert island and only several ugly chinaberry trees were planted on the edge of the village. I also recalled that along the coast of the island, there were barren hills and bare forests. It was thus not strange that we could not recognize its true features from afar.

Due to a lack of trees on Cangshan Mountain, of the 18 streams, only 3 or 4 are still roaring and the rest are quiet. There was one thing which I particularly could not understand; Every sapling planted in the soil of Dali or every anywhere in Yunman, will grow into a tree. No delicate or famous flowers need special care here. However, the number of trees is getting smaller and smaller. Trees along the newly built roads are being continuously chopped down. Useful timber is cut into firewood. The grand but distressing brush fires can be seen against the sky. A whole green mountain will be burned in order to plant some low-yield corn and tartary buckwheat.

Famous and precious bow fish in Erhai have nearly vanished. I believe that one of these reasons contains truth: The name of bow fish was given to the fish by Yang Shengan after careful examination. He discovered that bow fish always swim against the current and jump about and even the small ones acquire this unique skill and heroic spirit. Therefore, no fierce fish can harm them. Today, the number of trees on Cangshan Mountain is getting smaller and stream water has decreased. There is no scope for the bow fish to exercise their abilities and people can easily catch them.... I believe this is the reason.

On my way back I remained silent for a long time and gazed at Juzu Mountain far afield. The temples built there in the past dynasties were damaged in an organized way during the 10 chaotic years and trees several hundred or thousand years old were chopped down arbitrarily. At that time, the Red Guard movement had not spread there. Therefore, we should not attribute this to the Red Guards. A figure of Buddha weighing several thousand jin was blasted and sold as scrap copper at a price of only 110,000 yuan! Oh! I trust that nobody will misunderstand me and wrongly think that I, an atheist, have felt sorry about the destruction of a holy Buddhist place! Any part of that scrap copper -- or any gold or copper ornaments of half a kilo -- might possibly be a priceless treasure to our nation and mankind. This was a catastrophe in the past and we should let bygones be bygones if they have been recorded in history as a lesson! However, we should not refuse to formulate plans for the future because of bitter hatred and disheartenment.

We should invite those who are able to speak to make some civilized remarks to our comrades and compatriots. Without constantly green mountains, there will be no spotlessly white clouds and constantly green waters. Imagine: Without "the cloud on which a woman stands to wait for her husband with eager expectation" and the cloud in the shape of a jade belt, will Cangshan Mountain still be able to be called a dark green mountain? Will Hudie Spring without its butterflies still be called a spring of butterflies? Can soil without green water be full of life? If things remain unchanged, people will be struggling in the desert even if each and every household builds a new house and has savings deposits in the bank amounting to 100,000 or 1,000,000 yuan!...

We should invite those who can work to do a most civilized thing for our descendants: Let us plant a green branch in the beautiful land so that every piece of green leaf will retain a drop of fresh water and the 18 streams on the Cangshan Mountain will sing heartily! Let Haixin Pavilion in Xizhou return from being on the dried up shore to being in the bosom of the Erhai! Let those brave bow fish swim against the current, jump about and breed!

The Erhai is yearning!

FUJIAN LEADERS MARK INTERNATIONAL CHILDREN'S DAY

JIANGXI'S BAI DONGCAI VISITS CHILD CARE CENTERS

OW280558 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0123 GMT 28 May 82

[Excerpt] Nanchang, 28 May (XINHUA) -- After visiting the Shengli child-care center run by the Nanchang neighborhood yesterday, Bai Dongcai, permanent secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CCP Committee and Jiangxi governor, said that a child-care center run by the local people to take care of the children locally is a good way to provide convenience to the masses and should be promoted. All departments and units concerned should support child-care centers run by neighborhoods.

Yesterday, leading party, government and military persons of Jiangxi Province and Nanchang municipality Bai Dongcai, Di Sheng, Wu Ping and Xu Qin visited the children's park, the Shengli child-care center, nursery schools under the Youzheng Lu primary school and the provincial CCP Committee organ, the Baihuazhou child-care center and the nursery school of the Nanchang diesel engine plan in Nanchang municipality and extended holiday greetings to the little friends and best wishes to those diligent child and youth workers.

SHANDONG'S BAI RUBING VISITS CHILD-CARE WORKERS

SK310336 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 30 May 82

[Text] According to DAZHONG RIBAO, on the afternoon of 30 May when he was on a drought observation tour in Jimo County, Comrade Bai Rubing, first secretary of the Shandong Provincial CCP Committee, visited the kindergarten and nursery run by the county's (Yaotou) brigade to extend regards to children, teachers and child-care personnel on the occasion of Children's Day.

As soon as he entered the kindergarten, Comrade Bai Rubing was warmly welcomed by the children. He happily responded, saying: How have you been? I wish you a happy Children's Day.

He also urged the children to study hard so as to become men and women of good health, healthy thinking and abundant knowledge. Comrade Bai Rubing distributed candies and toys which he had brought among the children. Upon receiving gifts, the children happily sang songs, and Comrade Bai Rubing also happily raised his hands to beat time for them.

Comrade Bai Rubing also inquired of teachers and child-care personnel about the children's living and studying situation and encouraged them, saying: Your work is very important and toilsome, and efforts should be made to expand activities suitable to children so as to enable them to become new successors full of ideals, morality, cultural knowledge and enthusiasm for ardently cherishing the party, the state and socialism.

SHANDONG SPONSORS FORUM ON MAO'S YANAN SPEECH

[Text] According to our sources, to study again Comrade Mao Zedong's speech at the Yanan litarary and art forum and his 15 letters on literary and art work, conscientiously research Mao's literary and art thought and achieve further success in literary and art and theory research the provincial federation of literary and art circles sponsored a forum on Mao's literary and art thought on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the promulgation of Mao's Yanan speech.

The forum was opened in Jinan on the morning of 29 May. Attending the opening ceremony were Wang Zhongyin, permanent member of the provincial CCP committee, deputy provincial governor and director of the provincial federation of literary and art circles, and Lin Ping, permanent member of the provincial CCP committee and director of the propaganda department of the provincial CCP committee. Also attending the forum were specialists and scholars of the provincial-level cultural and propaganda departments and some universities and colleges, responsible comrades of various prefectural and municipal federations of literary and art circles and cultural bureaus and workers engaged in the theory of literature and art, over 100 people in all.

Comrades Wang Zhongyin and Lin Ping spoke at the opening ceremony. Comrade Wang Zhongyin pointed out: Mao Zedong's literary and art thought is an important part of Mao's thought as a whole. The basic guidelines of Mao's literary and art thought was, is and will be a guiding principle for developing China's revolutionary literary and art. We should adopt a scientific attitude toward it and uphold and develop it. We should apply Mao's stand, viewpoint and method to guide the literary and art creation and comments to promote the flourishing and development of socialist literature and art.

Comrade Lin Ping put forward three demands in his speech. He urged the forum participants to regard Mao's literary and art thought as a guiding principle, implement the principle of integrating theory with practice, and oppose erroneous ideological trends and evil tendencies. The forum will last for 5 days. The participants will exchange and discuss what they gain from studying Mao's literary and art thought.

GUANGDONG ALLOCATES FUNDS FOR DISASTER AREAS

[Text] The provincial people's government has continuously allocated special funds and materials for the calamity-affected areas of Shaoguan and Zhaoqing, in order to enable them to resume production and rebuild homes. As of yesterday, a total of 12.3 million yuan had been provided for various special relief funds. Of that amount, 5.5 million yuan was set aside for emergency relief, 5.1 million yuan for the prevention of insect pests and medical care, and 1 million yuan for mending or rebuilding primary and middle school buildings. In addition, to meet the special needs of calamity-affected areas, 8.160 tons of cement, 7,800 cubic meters of timber, [passage indistinct], 10,000 tons of chemical fertilizer and 1 million meters of cloth were handed out.

To handle the current relief effort well, the provincial agricultural committee, provincial commercial bureau, provincial supply and marketing cooperative, provincial financial bureau, provincial food bureau, provincial agricultural bank, provincial sanitation bureau, communications bureau and other organs and units organized a total of 32 work groups to head for the seriously affected areas of Shaoguan and Zhaoqing to check local conditions. At present, in line with the spirit of the relief work conference recently called by the provincial people's government, various units are supporting the flood-affected areas in various respects to enable them to resume production and rebuild homes.

Beginning today, we will continously give information about these six projects.

GUANGXI'S LEADERS AT CHILDREN'S DAY CELEBRATIONS

HK020331 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Jun 82

At 9 am the regional leaders cordially received the representatives of exemplary children from Nanning and watched their performances.

"Regional CCP committee Secretary Xiao Han spoke amid the enthusiastic applause of the children. In his speech he wished the little friends a happy and gay festival. He encouraged them to listen to the party from childhood, study hard, make progress every day and be a new generation which possesses ideals, morals, culture and discipline."

"Nanning municipal CCP committee Secretary (Wang Enhou) also spoke at the meeting."

After the meeting, the regional leaders went to the children's playground to join in the get-together.

HUBEI'S CHEN PIXIAN STRESSES CARE FOR CHILDREN

HK310307 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 May 82

[Summary] When inspecting work in Yunxi County, provincial CCP committee First Secretary Chen Pixian demanded that leaders at all levels be concerned for the healthy growth of children and expressed and hope that the children would study well and love the party, the country and their native village.

Chen Pixian said: "You leading comrades of the county CCP committee should go and see the children and talk to them. You should first talk about how good the party is. You should talk about love for the party, the motherland and socialism, and love for one's native village. The children should be told to study well. At present some children have not received enough education in this respect. Parents should not educate their children according to the notion of bringing up children as an insurance against old age. They should teach them to become people with ideals, morality, culture and discipline."

On the question of marking the cadres more knowledgeable and professional, Comrade Chen Pixian said to the comrades of the county CCP committee: "Many comrades over 50 years old who engage in agriculture rely mainly on experience, on the upper-level leadership, and on the masses. Not many of them yet rely on science and technology, and some of them understand nothing whatever in this respect. We must realize this shortcoming. In the future we must send young cadres to learn culture and professional skills.

"School education must begin with the primary pupils. Rural primary schools should teach local history, geography and climate characteristics, what can be grown on the local farmland, what treasures are underground and so on. Thus the children should be enabled to know about their native villages and taught to build them well when they have grown up."

HUNAN'S MAO ZHIYONG INSPECTS EMULATION DRIVE

OW020608 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 27 May 82

[Excerpt] The emulation drive launched by the Hunan Provincial CYL Committee among young workers of bus companies in 14 cities including Changsha and Hengyang has achieved gratifying results. The emulation drive is for decorum and courtesy and for safe driving. In the period from 5 March to 4 May, the number of buses put on extended schedules totaled 15,000. Over 96 percent of the vehicles maintained a high punctuality rate saving more than 116,000 jin of gasoline. The more than 3,000 bus drivers and conductors who worked efficiently in the past 2 months have received over 870 letters of appreciation from passengers in praise of their performance.

Mao Zhiyong, first secretary of the Hunan Provincial CCP Committee, has ridden some buses to check on the situation and give crews encouragement by showing his personal interest in the emulation drive.

YIN FATANG ATTENDS XIZANG CULTURAL FESTIVAL

HK281430 Lhasa Xizang Regional Serivce in Mandarin 0000 GMT 27 May 82

[Summary] In order to study and better implement Comrade Mao Zedong's thinking on literature and art and make literature and art in the region thrive, the first Xizang regional small-scale literature and art festival, which is being jointly sponsored by the regional culture bureau and the regional federation of literary and art circles, opened in the Lhasa municipal working people's cultural palace on the evening of 25 May. Responsible comrades of the party and the government in the region, including Yin Fatang, Yangling Duoji, Xia Chuan and Xuekang Tudeng Nima, attended the opening ceremony, before which responsible comrades such as Yin Fatang received the leaders and members of the performance team of the Chinese opera theater.

At the opening ceremony, Xuekang Tudeng Nima, regional people's government vice chairman and concurrently regional culture bureau director, spoke, saying: "The aim of this small-scale literature and art festival is that, while doing well in grasping the building of material civilization, we must also do well in building spiritual civilization so that the literature and art of nationalties in our region can continue to serve peasants, herdsmen and border-defense fighters in the grassroots, rural and pastoral areas and border areas under the guidance of the four basic pricnples of the party and along the orientation of literature and art pointed out by Comrade Mao Zedong. We must give full play to the role of literature and art in uniting, encouraging and educating the people."

Xuekang Tudeng Nima said that during this festival, performances will be given in Lhasa municipality, rural areas, factories and PLA units.

After the opening ceremony, the regional drama troupe performed.

YUNNAN SCORES RESULTS IN HANDLING ECONOMIC CRIME

HK020246 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Jun 82

[Summary] Yunnan Province has scored significant results in implementing the "Resolution of Dealing Severe Blows at Criminals Who Have Seriously Undermined the Economy." According to incomplete statistics of the provincial discipline inspection committee, by 25 May, more than 2,500 economic criminals throughout the province had given themselves up to the legal and government departments and confessed their crimes. They handed in some 2,536,000 yuan of illegal profits and some 1,540,000 yuan in illicit money.

Over the past 2 months, all localities throughout the province have seriously publicized and implemented the new regulation. They have called for the economic criminals to give themselves up to the government and advocated the policy of "leniency to those who confess their crimes and severity to those who refuse." According to information, of all the people involved, 110 are cadres at country and municipal levels, 15 people have seized more than 10,000 yuan in illicit money and 380 people have seized 1,000 to 10,000 yuan in illicit money.

A spokesman of the provincial discipline inspection committee called for implementing the two resolutions of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council in a penetrating manner in orderto wage an indepth struggle.

HEBEI MILITARY DISTRICT HOLDS MAO STUDY COURSE

HK311414 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 21 May 82

[Text] The Hebei provincial military district recently held a collective training course for cadres at and above the regimental level to study Mao Zedong's philosophical works and achieved relatively good results. In the collective training course, they all seriously studied and discussed the relationship between theory and practice, the relationship between Chairman Mao's mistakes in his later years and Mao Zedong Thought and the relationship between the growth and progress of individuals and the transformation of the world outlook, deepened their understanding of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and heightened their spontaneity for study.

In the light of the new situation of their own units in studying Mao Zedong's works, many comrades said: Mao Zedong Thought has been proved by practice to be a correct theoretic principle and a summing up of experiences. Its stand, viewpoint and method are universally significant and the guiding ideology of our acts in the past, present and future.

While solving the problem of understanding, they also paid attention to solving the problem of the method of study. On the basis of seriously studying original works, they linked study of original works with study of the resolution and the history of the party. They linked study of the stand, viewpoint and method contained in Mao Zedong's works with the solution to the problem of understanding the line, the principles and policies of the party in order to enhance the results of their study.

(Su Zhu), deputy political commissar of the Linzhang County Armed Forces Department, seriously studied works, including "On Practice," "On Contradiction" and "Problems of Strategy in China's Revolutionary War." In connection with the history of the party, he read the resolution of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and the relevant parts in the government work report made by Comrade Zhao Ziyang at the 4th Session of the 5th NPC. He compared Comrade Mao Zedong's attitude toward Marxism-Leninism with the attitude of the CCP Central Committee toward Mao Zedong Thought. He compared the Marxist-Leninist stand, viewpoint and method which Chairman Mao used in those years to analyze and solve the problems of China's revolutionary war with the stand, viewpoint and method of Mao Zedong Thought which the CCP Central Committee today is using to analyze and solve the problems of the four modernizations. In linking theory with practice, he has clearly understood their unanimity. He came to understand that, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the line, principles and policies of the party are the results of adhering to Mao Zedong Thought and of correcting Chairman Mao's mistakes in his later years, and are the application and the development of Mao Zedong Thought in the new situation.

HEBEI HOLDS FORUM ON STANDING COMMITTEE WORK

[Excerpts] On 16 May the Hebei Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee held a forum of the responsible comrades of the standing committees of the people's congresses of all municipalities, counties and districts throughout the province under the jurisdiction of the municipal government who were attending the 15th meeting of the 5th provincial people's congress standing committee as nonvoting delegates. Jiang Yizhen, second secretary of the Hebei Provincial CCP Committee and chairman of the provincial people's congress, attended and delivered an important speech to the issues of how the people's congress standing committee at the county level carries out its work and strengthens party leadership over the work of the people's congress standing committee.

Comrade Jiang Yizhen said: The CCP Central Committee and the NPC Standing Committee have given clear instructions and laid down stipulations concerning the nature, functions, works and roles of people's congress standing committees at all levels. Successfully implementing the work of the people's congress standing committees at all levels of localities is an extremely important factor in putting socialist democracy and the socialist legal system of our country on a sound basis and strengthening the building of governments at all levels of localities. Whether or not the work of the people's congress standing committee can be done well hinges first on whether or not its nature, functions, powers, tasks and roles are correctly understood.

He pointed out: The people's congress standing committee is an organ of power as well as an organ of work. It is by no means a voting machine, an honorary organ or a meeting place. It must exercise its power and carry out work.

It was recently discovered that when some individual counties were conducting elections, some people carried out unlawful activities. They did not elect good comrades who had adhered to the party line since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee but instead elected as members of leadership groups three categories of people and people with serious problems. When the people's congress standing committee encounters such a situation, it must intervene in accordance with the law. It must not allow scheming activities to be successful.

The law confers important functions and powers on people's congress standing committees at the county level. If they really want to become authoritative organs of state power of localities, our comrades who do the work of the people's congress standing committees must be relied on to do more work on their own initiative.

Comrade Jiang Yizhen said: The key to giving full play to the role of an organ of state power in a locality lies in the leadership and the support of the CCP committee. Party leadership is the core of the four basic principles. Our comrades who do the work of the people's congress standing committees must remember that relying on the leadership of the CCP committees is a guarantee for doing good work for the people's congress standing committees. However, this does not mean that the party will monopolize everything. Under party leadership, on behalf of the people, the people's congress and its standing committee directly administers to the country. The party leads the people in formulating the constitution and the laws. It can be said that relying on party leadership and giving play to the role of a people's congress standing committee coincide. We must correctly handle the problem of relying on party leadership and giving play to the role of an organ of state power. How do we successfully handle this problem? As far as a CCP committee is concerned, it must mainly be good at using an organ of state power in a locality to fulfill the proposals of the party. The CCP committees of all municipalities, counties and districts under the jurisdiction of the municipal government must strengthen leadership over the people's congress standing committees, include the work of the people's congress standing committees in their agenda and regularly listen to the reports of the people's congress standing committees. They must look into the work of the people's congress standing committees several times a year. Matters which the law requires must be submitted to the people's congress standing committee for examination and a decision. Important matters which the CCP committee holds must be submitted to the people's congress standing committee for examination and decision must also be submitted to the people's congress standing committee for examination and a decision. Party organizations at all levels must support the resolutions and decisions of the people's congress standing committee and teach party members to observe them spontaneously and serve as models in implementing them. Attention must be paid to the fact that responsible comrades of the people's congress standing committee should not take charge of the specific work of the government.

Regarding cadres who have not clearly understood the nature and role of the people's congress standing committee, the CCP committee must publicize them at relevant conferences. Leading comrades of the party and the government at and above the county level must restudy the relevant documents of the CCP Central Committee and teach cadres, particularly leading cadres at all levels, to understand the important function of the people's congress standing committee in administering major state policies.

In a word, it is necessary to support the people's congress standing committee in practical work, persist in acting in accordance with the law and give full play to the role of an organ of state power in a locality. The party group of the people's congress standing committee must promptly report the situation and its work to the CCP committee. It is essential to make arrangements for the activities of the people's congress standing committee, which are centered on the central work of the party.

Comrade Jiang Yizhen said: All comrades present at the forum will brace, strengthen their confidence, study hard, work well, justify the great trust placed in them by the party and the people and live up to the expectations of the party and the people. At present, we must do well in grasping industrial and agricultural production and financial and trade work, strike blows at the serious criminal activities in the economic field, continue to do well in building spiritual civilization and in organizing the discussion of the draft of the revised constitution.

NEI MONGGOL'S ZHOU HUI VISITS DISASTER AREAS

SK290510 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 May 82

[Text] According to our sources, on the afternoon of 25 May, Zhou Hui, first secretary of the regional CCP committee, received in Hailar municipality the participants in the Hulun Buir League conference on pastoral areas' antidisaster work. He urged the participants to go all out to make arrangements for the livelihood of the masses in the disaster-stricken pastoral areas so as to promptly restore and develop production.

On behalf of the regional CCP committee and the people's government, Zhou Hui first expressed sympathy and solicitude for the people of disaster areas and had an informal discussion with them to learn about the disaster situation. When he was told that cadres at all levels and the masses in pastoral areas had made concerted efforts to the end to fight against the strong winds and snow, he happily said: It shows that our party and the masses are single-minded.

He urged the cadres to continue to carry forward such a work style in organizing the masses to fight and tide over the natural calamities. The party's leading cadres at all levels should stay at grassroots units to help handle affairs. All trades and professions should go down to grassroots units to learn about the practical situation and help the masses solve problems on the spot so as to send the warmth of the party and people's governments to the hearts of the masses in disaster areas and arouse their enthusiasm for conquering natural calamities.

In the forum, Zhou Hui gave some instructions on antidisaster work. He said: The most important thing at present is to vigorously and promptly help the people tide over the natural disasters to stabilize the ideology and livelihood of the masses in disaster areas. Referring to ways to combat disaster and send relief to disaster areas, Zhou Hui demanded: We should first make arrangements for people's livelihood and production in the areas seriously stricken by disasters so as to provide them with sufficient foodstuffs and proper work posts. At the same time, other disaster areas should also provide for and help themselves by engaging in production.

Zhou Hui stressed: It depends on both the state and the large number of masses to combat and tide over natural disasters. The latter is more important than the former. Political and ideological work should be strengthened among the people in disaster areas. Various fraternal nationalities should support one another. Various production teams and the masses should also help each other. He said: Solution will come hand-in-hand with actions, and all difficulties will be overcome with actions. Zhou Hui also visited the people in disaster areas on 26 May.

TIANJIN FORUM ON 'FIVE STRESSES,' COURTESY MONTH

HK290246 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 19 May 82

[Summary] The Tianjin municipal CCP committee and the municipal government held a forum on the "five stresses and four beauties" campaign from 15-19 May. Principal responsible comrades of the municipal CCP committee, the municipal people's congress standing committee and the municipal people's government, including Chen Weida, Yan Dakai and Li Ruihuan, spoke at the forum. Chen Bing, municipal CCP committee deputy secretary and concurrently propaganda department director; and Yang Huijie, municipal CCP committee standing committee member and concurrently industry and communications department director, presided over the forum.

This forum summed up the achievements and experiences in the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" campaign in the municipality. The forum also made further arrangements for penetratingly and persistently carrying out the "five stresses and four beauties" campaign.

Through study and discussion, the forum further defined the guiding ideology, namely, "building socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization are two major objectives of struggle of the whole party, the whole army and the people of the whole country." The forum held: "The 'five stresses and four beauties' campaign is an important component of the building of spiritual civilization." This campaign is a good method to educate and train a young socialist generation. The forum pointed out: "the core of the 'five stresses and four beauties' campaign is to use communist ideology and morality and educate people. This is a long-term combat task of a proletarian party. Since the founding of our party and for more than 60 years, communist ideology has been consistently used to educate the whole party and all cadres and people. Today, we must inherit and carry forward this glorious tradition of our party and, in the ideological and moral field, establish a dominant ideology which suits our economic foundation and communist ideology."

The forum also laid stress on the discussion of the close relations between spiritual civilization and material civilization.

Attending this forum were 300 responsible comrades of all departments, committees and offices of the municipal CCP committee and the municipal government; all districts, counties and bureaus; trade unions; the CYL; and women's federations which are in charge of political and ideological work and the "five stresses and four beauties" campaign.

BRIEFS

BOHAI SEA OIL WELL -- Tianjin, 29 May (XINHUA) -- A new test well producing large oil and gas flows has been sunk in the area jointly explored by China and Japan in the southern part of the Bohai Sea, the Bohai Sea petroleum base in Tanggu, Tianjin, announced today. Drilling of the well began on December 8, 1981 and was completed on April 6, 1982. The well, 3990 meters deep, was drilled down to the geological stratum belonging to the cambrian system of the Palaeozoic Era. Tests made at the well for the section from 3,131 to 3,170 meters deep showed that the well produced a daily average of 390 tons of oil and 70,000 cubic meters of gas, regarded as high-yielding by experts. A preliminary test well was sunk in May 1981. The test well was sunk by China's Bohai No 8 drilling rig. [Beijing XINHUA in English 1502 GMT 29 May 82 OW]

HEILONGJIANG CHECKS ILLEGAL HOUSING TRANSFERS

[Text] According to HEILONGJIANG RIBAO, the Qiqihar municipal real estate bureau has vigorously checked the unhealthy trend of units purchasing private houses and individuals selling houses at high prices. According to an investigation, in 1980 and 1981 alone 140 units in this city purchased 380 private houses totaling 16,000 square meters with 2.85 million yuan. The average selling prices of these shabby houses built in the 1950's was as high as 5,300 yuan, several times higher than the state prices. Those purchasing houses were generous at the state's expense, and those selling them amassed ill-gotten gains.

(Li Wenhua), doctor of the Chinese medicine clinic of a hospital attached to the Qiqihar Communications Bureau, resold a house for 40,000 yuan which he had purchased several years earlier for 720 yuan. He refused to turn over the gains despite repeated education. Acting on a suit filed by the real estate bureau, the municipal procuratorial organ arrested him according to law. The bureau also sponsored courses for the leaders of the 140 units which had purchased private houses and persons concerned, explaining and publicizing group by group the policy, laws and decrees on real estate. The bureau has investigated these sales and is taking measures to deal with them.

Together with more than 2,000 children and personnel in charge of work with children, they viewed theatrical performances staged by kindergarten children and a color film entitled [words indistinct].

Specialists and children of Japan, France, England and the United States who are staying in Harbin also were invited to attend the get-together.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN AT YOUTH PARADE

SK020419 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 1 Jun 82

[Excerpts] On the occasion of the 1 June International Children's Day, over 20,000 Young Pioneers in Harbin gathered at the youth palace by the side of the beautiful Songhua Jiang bank to join a parade marking this festive date in the hope of making Harbin into a city of red-scarf Young Pioneers.

At 1000, the provincial and Harbin municipal leading comrades, including Yang Yichen and Li Lian, and the provincial and municipal model workers appeared on the reviewing stand at Youth Palace Square. The flag-raising ceremony began amid the solemn rendering of the national anthem prior to the parade. Red scarves were presented to leading comrades by the Young Pioneers after the ceremony. The provincial CYL committee sent drums, bugles and gifts to the Young Pioneers in Harbin.

Yang Yichen, first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, handed over a burning torch to a representative of the Young Pioneers and said solemnly: You must accept this beautiful torch and always prepare yourselves for the building of our great country in accordance with the orientation charted by the party.

Li Lian, second secretary of the provincial CCP committee and first secretary of the Harbin Municipal CCP Committee, delivered a speech at the parade ceremony. He set forth ardent expectations for the Young Pioneers.

HEILONGJIANG STRESSES IMPROVING PRODUCT QUALITY

[Station short commentary: "Go All Out To Improve Product Quality"]

[Text] Heilongjiang polyester fiber mill has the courage to improve its product quality to compete with the advanced level of foreign countries. Its spirit to go all out to catch up with the advanced is very valuable. We must promote this spirit if we are to improve the backward state of product quality and improve our competitiveness. There is a trend in some industrial enterprises warranting our attention: In their efforts to improve economic efficiency, once their products become slow-selling and are overstocked, they become dispirited, complaining about the objective factors of their backward situations and feeling helpless. They lack the confidence and vigor to catch up.

Admittedly, producing quality products requires necessary material conditions and advanced technology. However, this by no means implies that human efforts are insignificant. Many enterprises with roughly equivalent production conditions show sharp differences in product quality and economic effectiveness. This clearly shows that different mental attitudes toward difficulties can lead to markedly different results. The province's industry has a fairly good foundation. We must not underestimate our capabilities or be content with being backward. We must evince the spirit of scaling new heights in improving quality, go all out and catch up with the advanced.

JILIN LOCAL LEADERS OVEREMPHASIZE INCENTIVES

SK290812 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 May 82

[Station commentary: "Emulating and Catching Up With the Advanced To Open a New Phase for the Four Modernizations"]

[Excerpt] A large number of model workers and advanced personnel of various fronts have emerged among our troops marching toward the four modernizations. Taking the four modernizations as their own responsibility, they work diligently, labor in a creative way and have made outstanding contributions. Their advanced ideas and model deeds are an impetus which enables the socialist modernization of our country to advance continuously. Comprehensively and thoroughly carrying out the campaign to emulate and catch up with the advanced will doubtlessly promote the building of socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

However, it is reported that the campaign to emulate and catch up with the advanced has not been genuinely carried out in some localities and units. One of the reasons is that the leaders of these units lack a clear understanding of the need to carry out the campaign. In their eyes, bonuses are the only things that work. The campaign does not matter very much to them. This is very wrong.

Carrying out the campaign to emulate and catch up with the advanced has been our party's fine tradition in leading the revolution and construction.

Our party and government cultivated a large number of model workers and advanced personnel in every historical period of our country's revolution and construction and used their advanced ideas and deeds to encourage the broad masses of the people to vigorously work for the revolution and construction to guarantee the victory of the revolutionary war and the development of production and construction. Under the new historical period, which we are facing today, carrying out the campaign to emulate and catch up with the advanced is also an important measure and effective way to guide the broad masses of the people to do a good job in the modernization.

Marxism tells us that the people are the most active factor of productive forces. To promote production, it is imperative to arouse the people's enthusiasm. To arouse the people's enthusiasm, it is not enough to rely only on material incentives. We should enhance the people's understanding. The reason those model workers and advanced personnel of various fronts can make outstanding contributions to the socialist modernization is because they have a high degree of understanding and fine qualities of the Chinese working class. They have not only accumulated material wealth for society but also accumulated spiritual wealth. Comprehensively and thoroughly carrying out the campaign to emulate and catch up with the advanced and bringing into full play the role of model workers and advanced personnel as vanguards, backbone forces and bridges will continuously enhance the understanding of the broad masses of the people and arouse their enthusiasm to do a good job in the four modernizations.

NATIONAL CPPCC TEAM INSPECTS SHENYANG, LIAONING

[Text] According to our sources, all members of the national CPPCC inspection team including leader Wang Shoudao and deputy leaders Li Jinde, Cheng Siyuan and Wang Guangmei inspected the Shenyang No 1 machine tool plant, (Fuling) machinery company and Shenyang monosodium glutamate plant in Shenyang municipality from 25 to 27 May. They were warmly welcomed by the cadres and the masses wherever they went.

During the inspection tour, all members of the inspection team heard briefings by plant leaders and attended workshops to talk to the masses of workers to familiarize themselves with achievements and problems in production.

After inspecting the Shenyang No 1 machine tool plant, Yu Ping, standing committee member of the CPPCC National Committee, who has worked in Liaoning Province for over 30 years, said: There has been great change in Liaoning's industry. Especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, Liaoning has scored great achievements in industry. I feel especially happy.

Wang Guangmei, member of the CPPCC National Committee, has been in Shenyang three times. The masses are especially warm toward her during this trip. On the afternoon of 26 May, Comrade Wang Guangmei visited the former Manchu provincial CCP committee, (Fuan) neighborhood and Shenyang textile plant where Comrade Liu Shaoqi used to work, live and struggle. She also took souvenir photographs of the rooms and places where Comrade Liu Shaoqi used to live and work.

On 27 May, some female members of the CPPCC National Committee watched rehearsals of programs prepared for 1 June Children's Day at the hall of the Liaoning People's Arts Theater.

On the morning of 28 May the inspection team left for Anshan.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN AT RAILWAY STATION SERVICE

SK300529 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 29 May 82

[Text] According to our sources, responsible comrades of Gansu provincial party, government and army organs joined in providing service at the Lanzhou municipal railway station and the freight loading and unloading platform of the western station. On the afternoon of 28 May, Feng Jixin, Gao Jinchun, Zhang Jiangang, Nian Dexiang, Wu Jian, Mu Shengzhong, Jamyang Losnag-Jigme, Tubdain Qoigyi-Nyim and (Wang Jie), together with staff and workers of Lanzhou railway station, joined in such station services as punching passenger tickets, soliciting opinions from cargo clients, visiting passengers in waiting rooms and trains and hearing briefings on the railway service campaign made by departments concerned.

In hearing the briefing given by the responsible person of the Lanzhou railway station, Feng Jixin noted: In rendering service for the people, it is imperative to pay attention to strengthening ideological and moral education among staff and workers, keeping abreast of organizational work and improving work style. Feng Jixin stated: The Lanzhou railway station, the service showcase of Gansu's provincial capital, can fully demonstrate the failure or success of municipal social morale and railway administration. Therefore, in rendering railway service for the people, the Lanzhou station should set up higher standards and stricter demands than other stations and score more achievements in respecting passengers, taking the best care of cargo and perfecting service quality.

On the same day, over 180 cadres of the Lanzhou railway bureau and sub-bureau organs led by leading comrades of these bureaus also joined services at the stations, cargo platforms and in trains.

GANSU'S FENG JIXIN ATTENDS CHILDREN'S WORK FORUM

[Excerpts] According to our reporter, the Gansu Provincial CCP Committee held a forum in Lanzhou on the afternoon of 27 May to mark 1 June International Children's Day. Attending the forum were Feng Jixin, first secretary of the provincial CCP Committee, and Ge Shiying, deputy secretary of the provincial CCP committee and director of the provincial coordination committee on children and juvenile work. Also attending were outstanding child-care and educational workers, Young Pioneers' assistants, 3 March red-banner pacesetters, retired old workers and cadres formerly engaged in children's work, designers and workers in children's clothing and foodstuffs, representatives of writers of children's literature, writers and responsible persons of departments concerned, totalling 50 persons. They happily gathered under the same roof to speak glowingly of the achievements scored by our province in the past year in implementing the party Central Committee's directives on devoting much attention to children's work. They also exchanged their experiences on children's work.

Feng Jixin spoke at the forum. On behalf of the provincial CCP committee, he extended cordial regards to comrades in charge of children's work on all fronts. He urged CCP committees and governments at all levels to strengthen the leadership over children's work and pay attention to, inspect and help solve the practical problems existing in work. he said: None are allowed to be indifferent and shortsighted to children's work. Nor should they treat children's work lightly.

He urged the party and government leading organs at all levels to be concerned with, love, protect and foster the children as a gardener does with his flowers and parents for their children. (Luo Zhiyu), vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC committee, also attended the forum.

NINGXIA PEOPLE'S CONGRESS COMMITTEE MEETING ENDS

[Report: "The 13th meeting of the 4th Regional People's Congress Standing Committee Concludes"]

[Excerpts] The 13th meeting of the 4th Ningxia Regional People's Congress Standing Committee concluded in the afternoon of 15 May. The meeting called on the people of all nationalities in the region to seriously study and discuss the "draft of the revised constitution of the PRC," and carry through to the end the struggle against serious crime in the economic field.

Committee Chairman Ma Qingnian presided and spoke at the meeting.

Vice Chairmen Shi Yulin and Zhang Junxian respectively conveyed the spirit of the 22d and 23d meetings of the NPC standing committee.

The participants held: The draft of the revised constitution fully expresses the will and aspirations of the people of all nationalities throughout the country and is more perfect and accurate than the three previous constitutions. The meeting called on the people of all nationalities throughout the region to actively take part in studying and discussing the draft. Leaders at all levels should take the lead in this activity, bring democracy into full play, encourage the free airing of views, and ensure that the opinions of the people of all nationalities can be expressed, so as to concentrate the wisdom of the whole people and make a success of revising the constitution. The people's congress standing committees at all levels should regard this as the current central task and spend time and effort on grasping it really well.

The participants held: Hitting at economic crime is struggle between socialism and capitalist corruption, which is related to the success of failure of China's socialist modernization drive; it is a major issue related to the prosperity or decline and the life or death of the party and state. Judging by the problems exposed in Ningxia, there is serious and shocking economic crime in our region. However, at present certain leading comrades lack sufficient understanding of the importance of hitting at economic crime and fail to give enough weight to it. Some hold that as Ningxia is far from the coast, economic crime is not serious here; some harbor all kinds of apprehensions and fears and doubt whether this anticorruption struggle can be carried out well and thoroughly; others are not clean themselves, and they either take part in or support and cover up criminal activities; they dare not provide just and forceful leadership over the struggle, and minimize the gravity of the crimes. Hence at present the most important thing is to seriously study the central documents and solve problems of understanding. The meeting demanded that leaders at all levels strengthen leadership, take steps, and unswervingly carry through to the end the struggle against economic crime.

The meeting also heard a report by regional government Vice Chairman Li Zhemin on planned parenthood work, and a report by regional cultural bureau Director Ma Ruo on the region's culture and arts work and on his views on future work.

NINGXIA RALLY COMMENDS PUBLIC SECURITY WORKERS

[Report: "Regional Rally To Commend Progressive Collectives and Workers on the Public Security Front Held in Yinchuan"]

[Excerpts] A Ningxia regional rally to commend progressive collectives and workers on the public security front was held in Yinchuan on 17 and 18 May.

The rally was attended by leading members of the party, government and army in the region Li Xuezhi, Ma Xin, Shen Xiaozeng, Li Yunhe, Wang Jinzhang and Chen Jingbo; representatives of the Political Department of the Ministry of the Public Security; and responsible persons of the regional higher people's court, people's procuratorate, judiciary bureau and civil affairs bureau.

Shen Xiaozeng, deputy secretary of the regional CCP committee and secretary of the political and legal committee, spoke at the closing ceremony. He said: To protect the people, punish criminals, strike at enemies, remold criminals, preserve social order and defend the smooth progress of socialist modernization are the glorious and arduous tasks assigned by the party and people to the public security organs. At present there are two urgent main tasks facing the public security organs: To strike at serious economic crimes; and to continue to vigorously tidy up social order and hit at serious criminal activities. The most important thing in fulfilling these two tasks is to rectify and strengthen the public security force. There is a lot to be done in this respect, and it is necessary to take a whole series of effective measures. One very good measure is to convene this commendation rally. Apart from that, judging by the current actual situation, there is also another very important item of work, and that is to persistently launch the struggle against corruption by capitalist ideology, conduct education in communist ideology, preserve the purity of the public security force, revive and carry forward the fine traditions and work style of the public security organs, and ensure that every public security cadre and policeman becomes a red and expert fighter for communism. Only thus can the public security force resist corruption without being tainted, maintain the color of the people's public security organs, become a strongly combat-effective force trusted by the people and feared by the enemy, and continually win new merit in defending the cause of socialist modernization.

WANG ZHEN ATTENDS XINJIANG CHILDREN'S DAY PARTY

HK300551 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 29 May 82

[Excerpts] The regional CCP committee gave a tea party in the Kunlun guesthouse on the afternoon of 29 May. Over 300 Young Pioneers, guides, nursery workers and young children were invited to celebrate Children's Day with responsible comrades of the party, government and army in the region.

Comrade Wang Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CCP Central Committee, member of the Central Military Commission Standing Committee and head of the Central Committee Party School, who is currently in Urumqi, attended the tea party. Also present were Wang Enmao, Xiao Quanfu, Tan Youlin, Ismail Amat, Zhang Shigong, Tomur Dawamat, Huang Luobin, Li Jiayu, Janabil, Codanoff, Hou Liang, Bai Chengming, Yang Huansheng, Ren Gebai, (Zhao Yizeng), Tuohuti Shabier, Fu Wen, Yang Yiqing, Mayinuer, Tian Zhong, Liu Zimo, Xie Gaozhong, (Zeng Difu), Meng Shulin, and other responsible comrades of the regional party and government, the Urumqi PLA units, and the Xinjiang production and construction corps. Comrade Wang Zhen and the leading comrades of the region sat chatting with the youngsters of various nationalities, asking about their study and work and encouraging them to study well, progress every day and strive to become three-good students.

Comrade Wang Enmao said in a speech: The Central Committee is extremely concerned for the children. This year Comrade Hu Yaobang presided over a central secretariat meeting specifically held to deal with caring for and bringing up children. The meeting issued the call for the whole party and the whole of society to care for the healthy growth of children. We must do well in running nurseries, kindergartens and primary schools. We must step up education in the home. We must persistently carry out the decorum and courtesy drive and draw in the youngsters to take part in it, so that they can embrace communist ideology from an early age.

WANG ENMAO AT XINJIANG CONSTITUTION STUDY RALLY

[Summary] The Xinjiang Regional CCP Committee held a rally of the regional organs on 27 May to mobilize discussion of the draft of the revised constitution. The rally called on all departments and units to take action to publicize, discuss and revise the draft, and thus further mobilize people's enthusiasm to strengthen the unity of nationalities and fulfill all the year's tasks. Responsible comrades of the regional CCP committee including Wang Enmao, Ismail Amat, Tomur Dawamat, Huang Luobin, Li Jiayu and Janabil attended. Comrade Huang Luobin presided.

Comrade Tomur Dawamat addressed the rally. "He demanded that party committees at all levels strengthen leadership over the discussion of the draft of the revised constitution and fully understand the importance of this discussion. They should put it in an important Place on their agenda and unity specific arrangements for it."

He pointed out: "At present our region is launching education in implementing the party's nationality policy and strengthening the unity of nationalities. We must integrate the discussion on the draft of the revised constitution with this education. The draft of the revised constitution is imbued with the basic spirit of consolidating the unity of nationalities. It lays down more specific regulations that the three previous constitutions regarding the party's basic nationality policies such as the equality of nationalities, the unity of nationalities, autonomy for nationality areas, and the common prosperity of all nationalities. In addition, in accordance with the Central Committee's new experiences gained since the third Plenary Session in solving the nationality problem, the draft makes a number of new stipulations on expanding nationality regional autonomy, thus hallmarking the sound establishment and development of the nationality autonomy system. All these things represent excellent materials for conducting education in implementing the party's nationality policy and strengthening the unity of nationalities."

Also present at the rally were responsible comrades of the regional CCP committee, people's congress standing committee, and people's government, the Urumqi PLA units, the Xinjiang production and construction corps, and the regional CPPCC committee.

SENATOR GOLDWATER FETED, WELCOMED ON VISIT

Chu Fu-sung Hosts Dinner

OW311427 Taipei CNA in English 1416 GMT 31 May 82

[Text] Taipei, 31 May (CNA) -- Foreign Affairs Minister Chu Fu-sung gave a dinner Monday in honor of U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater and his party. Among the officials present at the dinner were Political Vice Foreign Minster Fredrick F. Chen and Administrative Vice Foreign Minister Edward Y. Kuan.

Senator Goldwater was originally scheduled to visit Hualien Monday, but his trip was cancelled due to heavy rains in eastern Taiwan. The U.S. senator and his party visited the Sun Moon Lake in central Taiwan Sunday, enjoying a pleasant day there.

Meeting With Premier Sun

[Text] Taipei, 1 June (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan Tuesday received U.S. Senator Barry M. Goldwater at the Executive Yuan.

Premier Sun extended the nation's warm hospitality to Goldwater for his current visit to this country. They exchanged views on matters concerning the two countries. Senator Goldwater told Premier Sun that most of Americans, like himself, are firmly supporting the Republic of China. Accompanying the visitor at the meeting were his military adviser, Gen. William Quinn, and Chen Chien-jen, director of the North American Affairs Department under the Foreign Ministry.

Earlier, Goldwater and his wife called on Tsiang Yien-si, secretary-general of the Kuomintang Central Committee. Tsiang gave a luncheon in honor of the senator and his wife at noon at the air force club.

LIEN HO PAO 29 May Editorial

OW011635 Taipei LIEN HO PAO in Chinese 29 May p 2

[Editorial: "Words From Our Hearts To Welcome Senator Goldwater's Visit"]

[Text] U.S. Senator Mr Goldwater, an old friend of the Republic of China, is scheduled to arrive in Taipei from the United States today to visit our country for a few days. During his sojourn he will deliver a speech at the invitation of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce here. He will also take this opportunity to meet with his friends who either work for the government or other circles in the Republic of China. Every time he has visited the Republic of China, Senator Goldwater has delivered important speeches and made us feel greatly encouraged and delighted. He is visiting Taiwan once again after U.S. President Reagan sent three letters to the Chinese Communist chieftains and prior to the visit to the mainland by U.S. Senate Majority Leader Baker, who will bring with him another letter from Reagan to the Chinese Communists. His visit to Taiwan in this time of wind and rain has fully demonstrated Senator Goldwater's profound friendship with the Republic of China and shown the significant meaning of his visit.

What we would like to mention to Senator Goldwater first is the fact that although the U.S. Government, on the surface, has time and again reaffirmed its friendship and support to the Republic of China and stated that it would fulfill its promises and obligations to the Republic of China, facts have shown that this is not really so. The most obvious thing which the U.S. Government is hard put to explain is its actual attitude toward the "Taiwan Relations Act." The "Taiwan Relations Act" is the only basic agreement determining bilateral relations since the United States severed its ties with our country.

This also constitutes a new promise and obligation towards the Republic of China, a promise and obligation undertaken by the United States itself and passed by the U.S. Congress. Such being the case, the United States must strictly abide by this law both domestically and abroad. What the Republic of China considers as most important is that this law explicitly says: The United States is concerned about the security and freedom of the Republic of China, and it must supply the Republic of China with the new weapons needed for security purposes. However, the State Department is doing its best to twist what is clearly specified and stall people. It is also willing to accept the blackmail perpetrated by the Chinese Communists. It nearly makes this law exist in name only. How can anyone possibly explain this kind of situation in which legal obligations and promises are fulfilled in such an unfaithful manner?

Senator Goldwater is a senior statesman of the U.S. Republican Party and is also the extraordinary treasure on the U.S. political arena. He has the authoritative right to speak on all the domestic and foreign policies of the United States, although he himself shoulders no actual administrative responsibilities. In particular, it is due entirely to Senator Goldwater's strenuous efforts in the Congress and his assistance from all sides that the "Taiwan Relations Act" was able to pass the Congress smoothly and contain as many passages as possible beneficial to the Republic of China. However, now it looks as if this law, which has been passed by the U.S. Congress and constitutes the least compensation made by the United States to the Republic of China, will not be put into practice. We cannot but hope that Senator Goldwater will step forward and speak up to correct what the U.S. Government is doing. It is our belief that, understanding Senator Goldwater's high prestige in the United States and his personal friendship with President Reagan, the U.S. Government should highly respect Senator Goldwater's views and opinions on the issue of China.

We also wish to frankly point out to Senator Goldwater that some of the wording and implications of President Reagan's three letters to the Chinese Communist chieftains have not only seriously damaged the status, rights and interests of the Republic of China, but have also landed the United States in a most unfavorable position. The reason the situation has come to such a pass may be because the State Department and other aides have run the whole show and have hidden the truth. With a myriad of state affairs to attend to, President Reagan may not have carefully studied the letters. Therefore, some of the wording in the letters may not represent or reflect his opinion. However, since the letters were issued in the form of the President's personal letters, the importance of the documents is therefore underscored and the President thus cannot avoid assuming responsibility.

The three letters mentioned several times that the United States will respect the Chinese Communists' "one China" stand and clearly stated that unofficial relations between the American people and the Chinese people on Taiwan will not be allowed to weaken the commitment to its "one-China" principle. Such statements have obviously gone beyond the previous scope stipulated in the "Shanghai Communique" and the so-called "communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations," deprived the Chinese people on Taiwan of the right of having a say on Chinese sovereignty, regarded the Chinese Communists as the main body and treated the Chinese people on Taiwan as its people. Hereafter, if the Chinese Communists assume a stern expression and charge that U.S. arms sales to Taiwan have violated Chinese sovereignty and run counter to international law, how can the United States respond to such charges? These letters also mentioned more than once U.S. understanding and respect for the Chinese Communists' policy of peaceful reunification and stated that the United States has responded substantively to the matter. Since the United States has openly acknowledged its "understanding" of the Chinese Communists' peace moves toward Taiwan, has expressed its willingness to "respect" such peace moves and has also allegedly made a certain "response" to the peace moves, what would the United States do if the Chinese Communists suddenly changed their attitude and resorted to force against Taiwan?

Senator Goldwater is an old friend of the Republic of China and is the guardian of American interests. We do hope that during his visit to Taiwan, he will realize that we are in urgent need of modern armament, perceive the dangers of the current U.S. moves and urgently seek ways to rectify such moves.

SYMPOSIUM ON TAIWAN-U.S. RELATIONS CONCLUDES

OW28[illegible]23 Taipei CNA in English 1350 GMT 28 May 82

[Text] Taipei, 28 May (CNA) -- The symposium on "The Prospects for ROC-U.S. Relations Under the Reagan Administration" concluded its two-day discussion Friday. Dr Han Lih-wu, president of the Asia and World Institute, summed up the views expressed by the American participants as follows:

1. American politics is rather complicated and the means of mass media, particularly the TV, exerted great influence on policy-making.

2. The two American political parties, whose opinions differ greatly on domestic policies, are more in agreement on foreign policy, thus their China policy as enunciated by the various administrations has a certain degree of continuity and consistency.

3. The U.S. considers the USSR as its number one enemy and is anxious to promote its friendship with Communist China, or at least to prevent the latter from rejoining the Soviet bloc.

4. The U.S. wishes to maintain unofficial substantive relations with the ROC but wishes to avoid any adverse relations with Communist China.

5. The ROC should take advantage of the new strategic needs of the space age and should not depend entirely or too much on U.S. arms sales.

6. The ROC should avoid its consistent negative response to the seemingly "reasonable" stance of Communist China.

Dr Han also summarized views of the Chinese participants:

1. The ROC has at all times cherished its deeprooted friendship with the U.S. as evidenced by the great interests shown in the mass media here on the symposium.

2. The ROC does feel frustrated, or even disappointed, by the hitherto Reagan administration's handling of the military sales requests but still maintains a basic faith in Reagan's friendly feelings toward the ROC.

3. With profound understanding of Communist China's trickery, the ROC cannot but firmly resist Communist China's plot to entrap the ROC through peace offensive.

4. It is more meaningful to persuade Communist China to renounce the use of force against the ROC than to welcome the "nine-point peace proposal" propagandized by Communist China. Dr Han added that even if Communist China makes such a guarantee, it is of little significance.

5. "Reunify China by the three principles of the people," though high sounding, is nothing new. As early as Oct. 23, 1958, President Chiang Kai-shek announced the intent to reunify China by the three principles of the people following his meeting with Secretary of State Dulles.

6. The ROC attaches great importance to purchase arms from the U.S., while realizing the necessity of helping itself with advanced technique in this space age.

At the end, Dr Han expressed his admiration and appreciation to all the Chinese and American participants for their serious study in the past two days, which has greatly enhanced their mutual understanding.

U.S. URGED TO BE FRANK ON RELATIONS WITH TAIWAN

OW281112 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 28 May 82

[Text] James Lilley, head of the Taipei office of the American Institute in Taiwan, or AIT, left for Washington last Saturday for consultations with AIT's head office. Although the trip is said to have been planned for a long item, it is a timely trip coming as it did in the wake of Vice President George Bush's recent talks with Chinese Communist leaders.

It is hoped that Lilley will return to Taipei with something more specific and forthright than vague assurances from the United States government regarding continued ROC and U.S. ties. It is high time for the United States to be frank with a faithful ally of longstanding. Will there be a sellout? Probably not. But it takes concrete action to show the world that the United States has not and will not compromise its principles in trying to win a new friend of dubious value who is against everything the United States stands for. Vice President Bush remarked the other day that the United States would not set a time limit on arms sales to the Republic of China and would continue to honor the Taiwan Relations Act, but he still expressed hope that a compromise solution could be worked out through negotiations with Peking [as heard].

It must be pointed out that Bush's statement is contradictory. The arms sale to the Republic of China is a key provision of the Taiwan Relations Act and, therefore, a purely U.S. affair and the Republic of China is the only foreign power having a stake in the matter. But entering negotiations with Peking over the matter the United States Government has given the Chinese Communist regime the right to interfere with the implementation of this piece of American law. No matter whether the United States will retreat or not, Washington has already undermined the strength of the Taiwan Relations Act. It must be pointed out that the United States Government has been honoring the Taiwan Relations Act largely by words. The only action that has been taken regarding the arms sales by the Reagan administration is to propose the sale of 60 million dollars worth of military spare parts to the Republic of China. There is as yet no followup action on the decision to extend the license for the Republic of China to assemble the obsolescent F-5E's, not to mention the rejection of Taipei's request for a better jet fighter and other advanced weapons for self-defense.

The United States Government made all these concessions to Peking because it still believes the existence of the so-called China card. How much is that card worth besides what James Soong, the Republic of China's spokesman, recently described as occasional anti-Soviet rhetorics from Peking. Even the most ardent China card advocates cannot give a convincing answer to this question.

TA KUNG PAO VIEWS CHINA'S FOREIGN RELATIONS

["Political Talk" column by Shih Chun-yu [2457 0689 3768]: "Revising the Taiwan Relations Act Is a New Topic"]

[Text] Zhao Ziyang's Speech in Tokyo

The talks between Premier Zhao Ziyang and Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki in Tokyo and the conversation between Vice Chairman Deng and U.S. Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, Jr. have helped people have a relatively comprehensive view of Beijing's foreign policy.

The XINHUA NEWS AGENCY has reported in detail the contents of the Tokyo talks. This is a new practice.

Both the talks in Tokyo and in Beijing touched upon the issue of Sino-U.S. relations, which has attracted the attention of people who are concerned about the world situation, especially those who are concerned about the situation in Asia. The two Chinese leaders have given a clear explanation of the prospects on this issue.

Deng Xiaoping Urges Reagan To Handle This Issue "As Early As Possible"

There are two special points about Baker's visit. One is that not long after George Bush left Beijing for home, Baker came with a letter from Reagan. The other is that when he came to Beijing, U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater went to Taiwan. This obviously shows that some people are still paying the trick of "two Chinas."

Both Deng Xiaoping and Zhao Ziyang have reaffirmed in their speeches China's stand on the Taiwan issue. Zhao Ziyang said that the crisis is not yet over and Deng Xiaoping hoped that the Reagan administration will take a wise stand and properly handle this issue as early as possible.

The phrase "as early as possible" expresses the hope that Reagan will not resort to delaying tactics and will make up his mind fairly early.

To Date, No Breakthrough Has Been Made in Sino-U.S. Relations

After meeting with Deng Xiaoping, Baker disclosed that in order to settle this issue between China and the United States, Deng Xiaoping has indicated that he is willing to meet with U.S. President Reagan.

When Reagan sent Bush to China, the United States published three letters, one of which was written by Reagan to Deng Xiaoping.

China clearly stated its stand when Bush came. Now Zhao Ziyang said has in Tokyo that on the arms issue, the United States has not made any new step and the differences between the two sides remain unsolved.

After Baker came to Beijing, Deng Xiaoping expressed his willingness to meet with Reagan directly. This clearly shows that Baker has not brought about any new breakthrough.

Revising the "Taiwan Relations Act" is a new topic put forth at the current meeting.

Three Principles for Sino-Japanese Economic Relations

Zhao Ziyang gave a clear-cut view when he talked about Sino-U.S. relations, Sino-Japanese relations and Sino-Soviet relations.

He said that there will not be any change in the policy of developing friendly and cooperative relations between China and Japan no matter how Sino-U.S. relations develop in the future. When he put forth three principles for Sino-Japanese economic relations, the third one was long-term stability. This is a manifestation of "there will not be any change."

To date, Sino-Soviet relations have not changed. He also said that the deterioration of Sino-Soviet relations was not caused by the improvement of Sino-U.S. relations and that future changes in Sino-U.S. relations would not bring about changes in Sino-Soviet relations either.

What has been expressed above is an outline of China's policy for foreign relations.

U.S. SENATOR BAKER PAYS VISIT TO SHANGHAI

[Text] Shanghai, June 3 (XINHUA) -- The Standing Committee of the Shanghai Municipal People's Congress gave a banquet here at noon today in honor of U.S. Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker, Jr., Mrs. Baker and their party. The banquet was presided over by Zhang Chengzong, vice-chairman of the standing committee of the congress. In their toasts, Vice-Chairman Zhang and Senator Baker mentioned the Shanghai Communique signed in this city 10 years ago. Vice-Chairman Zhang said that Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations were established on the basis of the Shanghai Communique, which was helped promote relations in various aspects. He said that Sino-U.S. relations can only be developed on the basis of the principles laid down in the communique for the establishment of Sino-U.S. diplomatic relations.

Senator Baker, in his toast, said: "Shanghai, as the largest city and a city of historic significance, is where we established furhter relationships between the United States and China. It was the Shanghai Communique that provides the basis for developing relationship of cooperation, mutual benefit and equality between the two countries."

Senator and Mrs. Baker and their party arrived in Shanghai from Beijing by special plane this morning, in the company of Zeng Tao, deputy secretary-general of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. The guests were welcomed at the airport by Cai Beihua, deputy secretary-general of the Municipal People's Congress standing committee, and Joseph J. Borich, acting head of the U.S. Consulate-General in Shanghai. This afternoon, Senator Baker and his party visited the Fengbang people's commune on the city outskirts. Senator Baker, in China for the first time, expressed great interest in China's rural scenery and the life of peasants. During his visit of more than an hour, the senator, an amateur photographer, shot more than 100 photos.

U.S. OFFICIALS' DIFFERENCES ON FALKLANDS NOTED

[Text] Washington, June 1 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Jeane Kirkpatrick disagree on whether the United States should take a neutral stand or should support Britain in the Malvinas conflict between Argentina and Britain.

According to a New York TIMES report, Kirkpatrick said it was a mistake for the U.S. Government to openly back Britain after Haig failed to mediate in the British-Argentine conflict. She accused Haig and his advisers of "having no solid grounding in Latin American affairs and not properly taking note of Argentina's historical claims to the Falklands." Kirkpatrick said that the United States should be neutral in the conflict between Britain and Argentina in order to prevent the deterioration of relations between the United States and Latin America. In a speech given Sunday in New York, Kirkpatrick said: "There has been a big debate in our government. This is an agonizing issue. There are powerful arguments for remaining neutral and for tilting to Britain."

In response, Haig accused Kirkpatrick "of interfering with his stewardship of foreign policy. The latest issue of NEWSWEEK magazine disclosed that Haig had a bitter, 45-minute telephone dispute with Kirkpatrick last week. The magazine reported that the debate between Haig and Kirkpatrick has demonstrated that the Malvinas crisis will affect U.S. policy in Latin America.

FURTHER MATERIALS ON ZHAO'S VISIT TO JAPAN

Details of 2 Jun Reception

OW031045 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1538 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Text] Tokyo, 2 Jun (XINHUA) --Premier Zhao Ziyang hosted a grand reception this evening at the Chinese Embassy in Japan to express appreciation for the lavish hospitality he received from Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, the Japanese Government and people of various circles in Japan. He happily announced that his visit to Japan had gained fruitful successes.

The banquet hall was brightly lighted this evening. At the center hung Chinese and Japanese national flags. The hall was permeated with a warm atmosphere of Sino-Japanese friendship. Over 300 guests attended the reception. When Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki entered the banquet hall in the company of Premier Zhao, they were given an ovation.

In the banquet hall, Zhao Ziyang met with friends from various circles and joined them in wishing the further development of friendly, cooperative Sino-Japanese relations. In an impromptu speech, he said: "My current visit to Japan is aimed at celebrating the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Japan with Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, the Japanese Government and friends from various circles; exchanging views with them on international questions of common concern; and further exploring ways to establish longstanding and stable relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries." He added: "Thanks to your considerate arrangements and friendly cooperation, my visit has gained fruitful successes."

Referring to his trip to Japan's Kansai District tomorrow, Zhao Ziyang said: On that trip we will have the opportunity to contact more Japanese personages of various circles, understand the expereince you have gained in modern economic construction, observe the traditional culture of your nation and see the historical relics which show the friendly exchange between our two countries. This will make our visit more colorful. In addition, he said: "We are happily looking forward to Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki's visit to our country. I am convinced that the exchange of visits between leaders of the two governments will surely bring about a new upsurge in Sino-Japanese friendship."

Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki said in his speech: "Tomorrow you will leave Tokyo for Kansai District. I wish our Chinese guests a pleasant trip. I also firmly believe that your visit to Kansai District will undoubtedly contribute significantly to the further growth of friendship between Japan and China." He said: "In his speech delivered this afternoon, Premier Zhao said that the tremendous development of friendly relations between our two countries during the last 10 years is unmatched by any other time in history. Personally, as I get together with Premier Zhao, Minister Huang Hua, Minister Zhang Jingfu and other friends from China this evening, I have the same feeling.

Zenko Suzuki said that he was looking forward to seeing Premier Zhao and other Chinese friend[illegible] in in September in Beijing.

At the [illegible]ception Premier Zhao met with friends -- old and new -- from various circles and had cordial conversations with them. He said to Haruko Obori, eldest daughter of his old friend Kenzo Matsumura: "The Chinese people will never forget their old friends." Konsuke Matsushita, now over 80, could not attend today's reception, but he asked Japanese female writer Sawako Ariyoshi to write a letter in Chinese to Premier Zhao. The letter stated: "Welcome to you! The Chinese and Japanese peoples are best friends." Both the Japanese friends and the Overseas Chinese attending the reception welcomed the success of this visit to Japan.

Among the guests attending the reception this evening were Foreign Minister Yoshio Sakurauchi, Health and Welfare Minister Motoharu Morishita, Transport Minister Tokusaburo Kosaka, Home Affairs Minister Masatake Seko, director general of the Administrative Management Agency Yasuhiro Nakasone, Director General of the Economic Planning Agency Toshio Komoto, Director General of the Prime Minister's Office Kunio Tanabe, Speaker of the House of Representatives Hajime Fukuda, Deputy Speaker of the House of Representatives Haruo Okada, Speaker of the House of Councillors Masatoshi Tokunaga and Deputy Speaker of the House of Councillors Chozo Akiyama.

Also present at the reception were leaders of the Liberal-Democratic Party, the Japanese Socialist Party, the Komei Party, the Democratic Socialist Party, the New Liberal Club and the Social Democratic Federation, as well as leaders and noted personages from political, economic, military, cultural, educational, academic, journalistic, literary and art circles.

Representatives from Japanese-Chinese friendship organizations, trade union organizations, youth organizations and women's organizations attended the reception.

Responsible persons of Overseas Chinese organizations were also present at the reception.

Visits to Osaka, Kobe

[Text] Osaka, June 3 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here by train this afternoon. Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki bade him farewell at the state guest house this morning.

Upon his arrival in Osaka, Zhao and his party drove to Port Island in Kobe, where he was welcomed by some 500 people in front of the memorial hall. Accompanied by Mayor of Kobe Tatsuo Miyazaki, the Chinese premier climbed to the top of the hall to have a bird's eye view of the port island. He was then shown around in the exhibition room where photos and models of the island were on display.

The mayor told Zhao that the port island, the first of its kind ever known in the world, was built with 80 million cubic meters of earth removed from nearby hills. It was started in 1966 and was completed in 1981. Praising this grand project, Zhao said, "This is a good example in which advanced equipment and a hard-working spirit are linked."

Then, Premier Zhao and his party went aboard a motorboat and cruised in the Kobe Gulf where they saw three cargo boats from China. Zhao was told there exists frequent two-way trade between Kobe and Tianjin.

Osaka Banquet

[Text] Osaka, June 3 (XINHUA) -- A banquet in honour of visiting Premier Zhao Ziyang was hosted by the governor of Osaka Prefecture, the mayor of Osaka and the president of the Commerce and Trade Chamber of Osaka in the Royal Hotel here this evening. Premier Zhao and his party arrived here this afternoon from Tokyo.

In his welcoming address, Governor of Osaka Prefecture Sakae Kishi said that Osaka and Shanghai are closely linked by a strip of water. The people in Osaka have a particularly friendly feeling towards the Chinese people. Osaka has played a role as a bridge of friendship.

In reply, Zhao Ziyang said Osaka has had close ties with China since ancient times. He noted people from all walks of life in Osaka and Kunsai area have for a long time made unremitting efforts for and made a valuable contribution to the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries, to the conclusion of the Sino-Japanese peace and friendship treaty, to the development of their economic and trade relations and to the enlargement of their exchanges in culture, science and technology. With the steady development of Sino-Japanese relations, he believed, China's economic and trade relations and exchanges in other fields with Osaka and Kansai will be enhanced day by day.

About 100 people from various circles were present on the occasion. Chinese State Councillor Zhang Jingfu and Vice-Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian were also present.

Commentary on Friendship

[Commentary from the "International Current Events" program: "The Longstanding Sino-Japanese Friendship Is Bound To Develop Ever More Vigorously"]

[Excerpts] At the invitation of the Japanese Government, Zhao Ziyang, premier of the Chinese State Council, left Beijing this morning by special plane for an official friendly visit to Japan. This visit will certainly bring about an evermore vigorous development of the longstanding friendship between China and Japan.

Japan is a friendly neighbor of ours separated from our country only by a strip of water. The people of the two countries have had contacts with each other for more than 2,000 years.

However, the development of history is tortuous. In the 50 years from the Sino-Japanese war of 1894 to the end of the war of resistance against Japan in 1945, the friendly contacts between the people of the two countries met with setbacks, which occurred due to an adverse current stirred up by the Japanese militarists. Despite the adverse current, there was still an affinity between people of the two countries who supported each other, surmounting various difficulties. Thus, they made positive contributions to the development of friendship between China and Japan.

The founding of the PRC in 1949 ushered in a new epoch in Sino-Japanese friendship. At that time, although there were no diplomatic relations between the two countries, mutual visits and trade and cultural exchanges were never interrupted. The two countries normalized their relations in 1972. The signing of the Sino-Japanese treaty of peace and friendship in 1978, in particular, created conditions for the further development of friendly relations between the two countries. Since then, government and nongovernment contacts have unprecedentedly increased.

The development of friendship between the people of China and Japan is in keeping with the objective international situation and the aspirations of the people and is a historical necessity. It is needed by the people of the two countries and is conducive to security in Asia and peace in the world.

This year is the 10th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Japan. In addition to the mutual visits by the heads of government of the two countries, friendly activities in other aspects will be carried out on a broad scale. Now the cause of friendship and cooperation between the two countries and their people has entered a new period. The flowers of Sino-Japanese friendship are bound to flourish with each passing day.

DECISION TO RELEASE SRV CAPTIVES ANNOUNCED

[Text] Beijing, June 4 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government has decided to release 12 armed Vietnamese personnel captured after their intrusions into Chinese territory. The Vietnamese side was informed of the decision this morning by Zhang Dewei, deputy director of the First Asian Affairs Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry. By appointment he met with Tran Viet Ha, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Vietnamese Embassy, and told him that the captured Vietnamese will be released on June 16.

Zhang Dewei noted that two of the armed Vietnamese, Nong Van Can and Vuong Quang Binh, were captured by Chinese frontier guards because they illegally intruded into the Chinese province of Yunnan for sabotage. Nguyen Thanh Sang and nine others were captured by the Chinese navy for their reconnaissance activities in the Xisha Islands area in the South China Sea. During interrogations, the captured Vietnamese confessed themselves guilty to have intruded into Chinese tertitory on order of Vietnamese authorities. The Chinese Government, in the spirit of humanitarianism, decided to release the 12 captives for their family reunion.

Zhang Dewei informed the Vietnamese side that the 12 Vietnamese will be escorted to the zero-signed mile-stone of the Chinese Youyiguan Pass at 11:00 hours (Beijing time) for them to cross the border there. He proposed that the Vietnamese side send its representatives to receive them and go through the formalities there.

BEIJING REVIEW CARRIES KEAT CHHON'S APPEAL

HK281003 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English Vol 26, No 21, 24 May 82 p 22

[By Keat Chhon, an engineer who specializes in marine and atomic projects; since December 1979 he has been a minister of the Government of Democratic Kampuchea -- dated 8 March]

[Text] Taking the opportunity provided by BEIJING REVIEW's correspondent Mr Lu Yun's visit to our country, I would like to make an appeal through BEIJING REVIEW to intellectuals and peace-loving and justice-upholding peoples of good will throughout the world to take effective actions in opposing the use of chemical weapons. While killing the Kampuchean people by using various kinds of conventional weapons and man-made famine, the aggressor troops of Hanoi are intensifying their chemical warfare in Kampuchea. I am making the appeal not only as a minister, but as a citizen who is shocked by the extreme suffering of his compatriots and who is agonized physically and mentally by the terror caused by this kind of weapon.

It is known to all that the Soviet Union and its agents in Vietnam used chemical weapons against people of the Hmong nationality in Laos as early as 1976. The Vietnamese invaders, after failing in their strategy for a "blitz victory" in a "blitz attack," extended their criminal activities to deal with the Kampuchean people in 1979.

Millions of people in Kampuchea, Laos and Afghanistan are being struck each year by death and terror caused by chemical weapons which are banned by mankind. Trichothecine, a new kind of weapon in particular, has a great killing power. So far no other chemical weapons can match it. Seeing that the Soviet Union possesses a special chemical warfare corps composed of well-equipped and well-trained personnel, I have come to the conclusion that Kampuchea, Laos and Afghanistan are vast test grounds for the Soviet Union by which it would proceed to realize its plan to throw other countries into tragedy. I am making this appeal because I am convinced that the tragedy will not just be confined to the three nations. It will involve people the world over. Just as Mr Kor Bun Heng, a friend of mine who was a Kampuchean professional mathematician and is now a diplomat as a result of the aggressive war, said at the UN debate on the chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons: "We strongly demand an immediate end to the use of chemical weapons against the Kampuchean people. We also ardently hope that no other nations will ever suffer the tragic fate the Kampuchean people are experiencing."

This is no time for hesitation. Everyone has to be mobilized. Such a mobilization is aimed not only at seeking new evidence, but also at prohibiting chemical warfare. The existing evidence is convincing enough. The toxic nature of various kinds of materials collected in Kampuchea has been confirmed and described by Thiounn Thioeun, a graduate of the Medical Institute of Paris, and the Public Health Department of Democratic Kampuchea.

Blood tests for the Kampuchean victims of the chemical weapon trichothecine show that poisonous elements have sharply reduced the number of leucocytes. Two victims had only 1,700 and 3,000 leucocytes respectively. The relationship between the number of leucocytes in a person's blood and the quantity of poisonous elements are obvious — the more poisonous elements, the fewer leucocytes. Those who are poisoned seriously feel dizziness and nausea; experience visual problems, dyspnea, burning feelings in the thoracic cavity, tachycardia, haematemesis and haematuria; pass blood in their stools; itch unbearably and have high fevers that may lead to comas and even death in a few hours. For people who eat poisoned food, the symptoms come on slowly. But they will die if they don't take medicine and undergo timely treatment.

So I would like to ask intellectuals and people of good will around the world to take actions at once to stop the use of the chemical and biological weapons, which are prohibited as prescribed in the 1925 Geneva protocol and the 1972 convention. Dozens of people are being killed every day by such weapons and there exists the danger of the spread of their use. This constitutes a grave threat to mankind.

RENMIN RIBAO INTERVIEWS DK ARMY COMMANDERS

[Article by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wang Zhiguang [3769 1807 0342]: "Chronicle of a Visit to Democratic Kampuchea"]

[Text] In March and April this year, a team of Chinese reporters visited the Democratic Kampuchean [DK]-controlled zone, where the resistance against the Vietnamese invaders is being carried on. Lasting a month, our trip covered many miles and a vast area ranging from the western part to the northern part of the country. Wherever we went, whether on rolling hills, along rugged mountain paths, or in luxuriant forests heretofore untraveled, we always saw people fighting while carrying on production and supporting the battle front. This is really a moving scene. And what impressed us even more is the surging morale of the Kampuchean armed forces and people in fighting against the enemy and their firm confidence in defeating the invaders.

An Invincible Army

"The Vietnamese can do nothing to us!" This is a saying which we have often heard during our trip in the Democratic Kampuchean-controlled zone. This conclusion, which the Kampuchean armed forces and people have drawn from their resistance against the Vietnaese invaders over the last few years, shows their unwavering belief in achieving victory.

In a forest in the northern mountainous region, we spent a memorable night with a Democratic Kampuchean division commander, (Sa Reung). The straightforward and humorous Commander (Sa Reung) told us about his combat life, under a gas lamp in a pavilion. He is 40 years old. Since joining the revolutionary armed forces in 1967, he has been successively appointed liaison man, squad leader, company commander, battalion commander, and regimental commander; and finally in 1973, he was promoted to division commander. For 3 years following the liberation of Phnom Penh in 1975, he was ordered to lead his troops to fight against the Vietnamese troops who constantly intruded into the northeastern border of the country. As an experienced general, he is worthy of the title of tough rival of the Vietnamese invaders.

When the Vietnamese intruded into Kampuchea in 1979, (Sa Reung's) troops remained in the region east of Mekong River and carried on the struggle there. After the fall of Phnom Penh, they lost contact with their superiors. Then, (Sa Reung) and other leading cadres at division level unanimously decided to conduct guerrilla warfare by splitting up. They were determined to carry on the resistance to the end. They dealt blows at the enemy by planting bamboo spikes, traps and so on when their ammunition was exhausted; they subsisted on yams dug from the earth and animals hunted in the forest; they ate sour fruits and sour leaves picked from trees in the mountains, in place of salt. Thus, by uniting, they survived and basically preserved their strength under the fierce attacks of the Vietnamese invaders and under a difficult situation. Four months later, they managed to make radio contact again with the Democratic Kampuchean Government.

Commander (Sa Reung) arrived as ordered in a certain region in the northern part of the country in May 1980. He gradually transfered his troops to the border region. As soon as the reorganization and replenishment were completed, they moved to the battle front again and opened up a new battle field to fight against the Vietnamese invaders. Looking back on the course of the struggle, he said with deep feeling: "The reason we were able to continue the struggle under most difficult circumstances is that our fighters were inspired by a high degree of patriotism and unwavering faith in victory which gave them strong spiritual support."

We also had an interview with a Kampuchean National Army regimental commander of minority nationality. His name is Bu Luo [1580 5012]. From his eyes we could tell his deep hatred toward the enemy and strong character to overcome difficulties. After the Vietnamese invaded the country, he led his troops to conduct guerrilla warfare for 3 years in the mountains and forests in the northeastern part of Rattanakiri Province. When we met with him, he had just arrived in a certain camp several days earlier to see the Democratic Kampuchean leaders after a long march of 2 months. In the last 3 years, he had been leading 300 fighters to carry on the struggle in remote, thickly forested mountains. They overcame unimaginable difficulties and managed to preserve their strength. He told us that until recently, a group of 70 fighters in a certain mountain area in the eastern part of the country was still out of contact with their superior. He happened to come across them when he passed by the area. These fighters asked him to report for them to the Democratic Kampuchean Government and the leaders of the army, to ensure the latter that they would carry on the struggle no matter what difficulties and hardships were laid before them. Only under arduous circumstances can heroism be displayed. Unyielding fighters like these are innumerable in the Democratic Kampuchean National Army.

Dangrek Range is a narrow and long chain of mountains stretching along the northern part of Kampuchea. We climbed to its mountain top, which is as flat as a carrying pole, and visited the fighters of the national army who were stationed there. One morning late in March, we climbed to the top of Dangrek Range in the blazing sun. We stood on a big rock and through a telescope watched a confrontation between the national army and the Vietnamese troops. Pointing to a map, national army Division Commander (Chien) told us that a small hill situated nearby below us was a stronghold of the Vietnamese. The national army often bombarded or fired rocket shells at the Vietnamese strongholds in order to keep the enemy in panic. A few days ago, a small group of Vietnamese soldiers were wiped out when they invaded the foot of the mountains. The military map, in Vietnamese, was a spoil of war that Commander (Chien) obtained in that battle. Through the telescope, we also clearly saw the Phnum Preah Vihear Mountains, on which the world-famous ancient Preah Vihear Temple is located. Last year, en route to that isolated Vietnamese stronghold, a group of Soviet advisers were assaulted by the Democratic Kampuchean Army. More than 10 of them were killed in the battle. This has become a major event in the Kampuchean battlefield.

LONDON EXPORT CORPORATION DELEGATION VISITS

Beijing Reception

[Text] Beijing, June 2 (XINHUA) -- The London Export Corporation gave a reception at the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon to mark the 30th anniversary of the signing of the initiating agreements with the China National Import and Export Corporation. Among the guests were Wang Yaoting, chairman of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade; Jia Shi, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade; and Yang Guangqi, vice-minister of chemical industry, as well as more than 400 Chinese and foreign business people in the capital.

Jack Perry, chairman of the London Export Corporation and vice-president of "the 48 Group" of Britain, presided over the reception. In his toast, Perry recalled the development of economic and trade relations between the two sides since the signing of the agreement in 1952. He said his corporation has shared together with their Chinese colleagues "three decades of rich experience, deep friendships and satisfying successes." In reply, Wang praised Perry and the London Export Corporation for their unremitting efforts in the past 30 years for the promotion of trade contacts and friendship between the people of China and Britain. British Ambassador to China Sir Percy Cradock and Lady Cradock attended the reception.

The delegation from the London Export Corporation led by Jack Perry arrived here May 31 at the invitation of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade.

At the ceremony, Huang Ganying, head of the visiting Chinese women's delegation and vice-chairman of the All-China National Women's Federation, expressed warm congratulations to President Habib Bourguiba and Madame Bourguiba. At a reception, Huang Ganying expressed appreciation for President Bourguiba's contributions to Tunisian women's liberation. Madame Bourguiba recalled her visit to China, which had left a very good impression on her. On the same day, a banquet was given in honour of the Chinese women's delegation by Fathia Mzali, chairman of the Tunisian National Union of Women and wife of the Tunisian prime minister. Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali attended the banquet and had a cordial and friendly talk with Huang Ganying. The Chinese women's delegation arrived here on May 27 to pay a friendly visit to Tunisia.

JI PENGFEI MEETS ZAMBIAN YOUTH DELEGATION

IMPACT OF WAR IN FALKLANDS SEEN AS GRIM

["What Malvinas Islands War Will Come To -- Commentary by Correspondent Mei Zhenmin"]

[Text] Beijing, June 2 (XINHUA) -- The war on the Malvinas Islands is now in full swing with British forces continuing their advance toward Port Argentino (Stanley) at mounting costs. But what the military outcome of the war will be is still anybody's guess.

There are now more and more evidences pointing to the fact that given British recapture of the Malvinas Islands, it can hardly call itself a victor, in view of the heavy political, economic and moral losses it has sustained and will suffer.

Recently, the British conservative party has gained a little more votes in local elections as a result of the military progress scored by the British naval task force, which, in the view of observers, is but a transient beneficial factor.

While the British-Argentine rivalry for the Malvinas Islands has not come to an end, the gigantic British fleet has already lost a quarter of its warships and so far the war has cost Britain an alleged sum of one billion pounds. Given British recapture of the Malvinas Islands, a big force will be needed to defend it in a long time to come, entailing big expenditures. These heavy losses of military and financial resources will form a heavy burden and bring grave effects on Britain's economy and political situation. Above all, the war has tarnished the image of Britain in the eyes of the Third World -- a declining imperialist power still clinging to its gunboat policy.

The United States will also stand to lose politically in this war. Switching from its initial position as mediator to the role as supporter of Britain, the United States has invoked sanctions against Argentina, and, at the crucial moment, opted for Britain, its major partner. This has shocked and infuriated most Latin American nations who view this as a betrayal of Latin America, and has provoked the Latin American nations to take a new look at their relations with the United States.

Costa Rica, the Latin America nation which maintains close relations with the United States, has proposed that the Organization of American States (OAS) Headquarters be removed out of Washington. Some other Latin American nations even proposed the ouster of the United States from the OAS. And there are still others which call for the creation of another organization of American states, to the exclusion of the United States. For better or for worse, the U.S. influence in Latin America will be on the wane as a result of the Malvinas Islands crisis.

A noticeable phenomenon around the Malvinas war is that most of the developed countries in the West support Britain, and the Third World countries, on the other hand, mostly show sympathy with Argentina. Whatever the result of the war, it will inevitably be detrimental to the North-South relations. Therefore, Western Europe, which is heavily dependent for goods, will also pay a price for their support for Britain and their sanctions against Argentina.

Political sources in West Germany, as quoted by AFP on May 28, said "The escalation of the conflict, if it comes about, will inevitably lead to the deterioration of relations between Latin American countries and their European partners," and will also "cause a crack in the already fragile North-South dialogues." This is undoubtedly not beneficial to West European countries.

For the Soviet Union, the war on the Malvinas Islands is an unexpected gain. Britain, who has the world's third largest navy, has sent two thirds of its warships to the South Atlantic and has already suffered losses when confronted with the resistance from a country which is weaker than Britain in both navy and air force.

The event has not only caused a change in the balance of strength in Europe unfavourable for NATO, but will also dampen the morale of Western Europe to the satisfaction of Moscow.

The estrangement of Latin America and other Third World countries from the United States and Britain and Western Europe has not only weakened the U.S. in its rivalry with the Soviet Union, but also offered chances for the latter to infiltrate into those areas.

In the view of Lt. Gen. Wallace Nutting, head of the U.S. Southern Command based in Panama, the war between Britain and Argentina on the Malvinas Islands was "the wrong war at the wrong time in the wrong place with the wrong participants." History will prove whether Nutting's judgment is accurate or not.

YAO YILIN RECEIVES MEXICAN EDUCATION SECRETARY

OW292156 Beijing XINHUA in English 1526 GMT 29 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 29 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-premier Yao Yilin met with Mexican Secretary of Public Education Fernando Solana Morales, Mrs. Solana and their party in the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

Vice-Premier Yao said he was satisfied with the expansion of friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries in political, educational, cultural and other fields. He appreciated the Mexican Government's efforts in training Chinese students.

Secretary Solana said Mexico-China cooperation in education is fruitful, and Mexico is willing to accept more students from China.

Present were Chinese Minister of Education He Dongchang and Mexican Ambassador to China Eugenio Anguiano Roch.

Earlier, Chinese Minister of Culture Zhu Muzhi discussed cultural exchanges between the two countries and other issues with the Mexican secretary. This evening, Secretary Solana and his wife gave a return banquet. Among the guests were He Dongchang and Zhu Muzhi.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS SCIENTIFIC ECONOMIC PLANNING

HK031116 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 Jun 82 p 5

[Article by Hua..g Zhenqi [7806 2182 1142]: "Improve the Scientific Nature of Economic Planning"]

[Text] Recently quite a few comrades have stated their views on practicing economic planning and strengthening planning work. Here I would like to deal only with the question of improving the scientific nature of economic planning.

Why is it necessary to improve the scientific nature of economic planning? Theoretically speaking, what is referred to as the scientific nature of economic planning is that the national economic plan should correctly reflect the demands of the objective economic laws. In a socialist society, all major proportions in the development of the national economy should be regulated by state planning. The important status of economic planning in the developing of the national economy determines the importance of improving the scientific nature of economic planning. The more the economic planning is imbued with a scientific nature, the better the results in developing the socialist economy; unscientific nature of economic planning inevitably results in disproportion in the national economy and in fewer and poorer results, slower progress and higher costs. Compared with other links in the management of the national economy, the success or failure of economic planning work exerts the greatest influence on the development of the socialist economy.

Viewed from the history of China's economic construction in the past 30 years and more, economic planning sometimes does better and sometimes does poorly in reflecting the demands of the objective laws. For example, during the First 5-Year Plan period and the period of readjusting the national economy in the early 1960's, economic planning reflected fairly accurately the demands of the objective laws so that major achievements were scored in developing the socialist economy. However, generally speaking, in the past 30 years and more, we have had little time to soundly and earnestly engage in planning. For a considerably long period of time, economic planning work drifted in the waves of political movements and "leftist" erroneous ideas. There was very little of a scientific nature in economic planning work for there was much of a voluntary subjective nature.

This resulted in heavy losses to the national economy. The historical experience of our country has proved that the scientific nature of economic planning is the basis of the authority of economic planning. If we do not attach full importance to the scientific nature of our planning but purely stress the authority of planning, some problems will inevitably occur, bringing about losses in economic development. If we had not committed so many mistakes in the past, the superiority of economic planning would have been brought into fuller play and our achievements in socialist construction would have been much greater than they are now.

Viewed from the present condition, there has been great improvement in our economic planning work since the third plenary session of the party. We no longer one-sidedly seek the increase of output value but chiefly stress the improvement of economic results and the proportioned and coordinated development of various departments. We pay attention to comprehensive balance and begin to attach importance to the roles of medium- and long-term planning. Up to now, however, there is still an insufficient scientific nature in our economic planning. We have not conducted sufficient research into planning theory and methods, have not succeeded in establishing a scientific planning system and have not brought into full play the roles of medium- and long-term planning. We still lack a scientific and sound target system. The basic work needed for drawing up scientific economic planning is still very weak and the various technical and economic quotas remain to be revised and worked out. The statistical figures are not sufficiently accurate and are not promptly supplied. We are not well-informed on economic information and we have just started the work for economic forecasting.

In economic planning, the question of making use of the economic tools to fulfill economic tasks is also a problem that has not been solved well. The economic planning institutions at various levels are not sound and have not been able to completely adapt themselves to the needs of improving the scientific nature of economic planning. Therefore, in order to strengthen planning work, it is necessary not only to stress the authority of planning but also to attach importance to improving the scientific nature of planning.

How can we further improve the scientific nature of economic planning? I think we should at least pay attention to the following issues:

First, we should proceed from reality. Only by proceeding from reality, that is, from the basic national conditions, is it possible to reflect the demands of the objective laws in economic planning. The function of an economic law depends on the surrounding objective economic conditions. In different socialist countries or in different periods in the same country, owing to the differences in the objective economic conditions, the functions of the same economic law are quite different in extent and form. One is liable to commit the mistakes of subjectivism if one fails to proceed from reality and overlooks these special features.

Second, we should uphold the method of the mass line. It is necessary, according to the party's principles and policies and in line with the procedure, methods and system for working out a plan as stipulated by the economic legislation, to fully listen to the views from the grassroots enterprises, localities, departments, economists and natural scientists. The cadres taking a direct part in the formulation of an economic plan should have the authority and responsibility commensurate with their posts, and on the basis of conducting serious investigation and study, doing a good job of economic statistics and forecasting and making repeated calculations, decide on the plan. In previous economic planning, we did not listen sufficiently to the opinions from various quarters and did not compare and demonstrate various plans before making some major economic decisions and deciding on some major construction projects. They were often hastily decided upon according to the opinions of a small number of people. Sometimes the rate of economic development in the plan was fixed according to the wishes of the leaders. Although some people obviously knew that it was unattainable, they did not uphold principle by reporting the actual matter to the higher authorities. How was it possible to work out a scientific national economic plan in these circumstances?

Third, we should improve the planning system and do a good job of overall balance. An important issue in improving the planning system is to correctly determine the rights and responsibilities in planning work of the general and specialized departments of the national economy and the state, localities and enterprises. It is not conducive to unleashing the initiative of the specialized departments, localities and enterprises if the general department exercises control in a too-rigid manner. However, it is also not helpful to achieving an overall balance if the planning rights are divided among various departments. In order to achieve an overall balance, first of all, the unit responsible for the overall balance should have the necessary authority and dare to uphold principle and overcome the various tendencies that attempt to break away from the bounds of planning. The state should have the necessary funds and material and use these as a means to achieve an overall balance. It is necessary to uphold the principle of taking the whole country into account and, in the distribution of manpower, funds and material resources, act according to the state plan; and, on the basis of achieving an overall balance for the country, work hard to achieve a balance for the localities and departments. It is necessary to ensure the focal point and give consideration to the general point. However, the focal point should not be stressed excessively; nor should the focal point be stressed at the expense of the general points. When drawing up a plan, it is absolutely necessary to leave some margin. We should not consider every item nor should we leave some loopholes.

Fourth, we should gradually form a planning system, combining long-, medium- and short-term planning, with the 5-year plan playing the primary role.

In the past 30-odd years, with the exception of the First 5-Year Plan period, we mainly relied on annual planning. Moreover, it was "a 1-year plan which took a year to complete" so that most of the energy of the planning institution was concentrated on working out the targets, approving the projects, distributing investment funds and so on. It was very difficult for this kind of economic plan to be circumspect and farsighted and to play a scientific and guiding role. It was often a case of taking one step and looking around before taking another and it carried with it, to a great extent, a blindness in action which resulted in frequent changes in plan. It often happened that some projects were started one year and were stopped the next, resulting in overstocking and great waste. It should be noted that it takes 5 to 10 years or even longer for some scientific and research projects to provide results; to apply the results of the production research and the building of some big construction projects takes just as long. It also takes a long time to gain clues to the effect of economic development on the environment and the pressure of population growth on the economy. All of this shows the important guiding roles of long- and medium-term planning on social and economic development. Only by shifting the focus of economic planning from annual to medium- and long-term planning will it be possible to ensure the continuity and stability of planning and thus improve the scientific nature and foresight of economic planning.

Fifth, we should have a scientific and complete system of economic quotas. Regarding comprehensive quotas, it is necessary to fundamentally change the situation which uses total output value as a central target and to replace it with a system that uses national income as a central target. In economy, science and technology, as well as social undertakings, stress should be laid on increasing the quotas for science and technology and for social undertakings. On the relationship between production and construction and improvement of the standard of living, it is necessary to greatly increase the quotas for the standard of living. On the relationships between output value and quantity and economic effect, it is necessary to greatly increase the quota for economic effect.

Sixth, we should make use of economic tools to fulfill our plan. In the socialist period, in order to practice planned social readjustment of the national economy, it is imperative to make use of the relationship between commodity and currency and other economic tools. Only in this way can we obtain complete economic information and work out an economic plan that conforms to reality; and only in this way can we lead the whole society to act according to a complete plan and carry out scientific planning.

Seventh, we should strengthen planning institutions and do a good job of basic work in planning. Within the State Planning Commission it is necessary to strengthen the institutions responsible for drawing up medium- and long-term planning, the economic forecasting institutions and the research institutions for planning theories and methods, and do a good job in the rotational training of economic planning cadres. At the same time, serious efforts should be made to do a good job of basic work in economic planning. We should do a good job in statistics work for it is both a basis for working out a plan and a tool for inspecting the implementation of the plan. The various economic departments should learn to operate modern scientific and technological equipment (mainly computers) in order to do well in forecasting the economic and social development in the next 5 to 10 years, or an even longer time. It is also necessary to do a good job of revising and working out various planned quotas.

Eighth, we should formulate a planning law in order to legalize and systematize economic planning work. In drawing up a planning law, it is necessary to define in legal terms the various principles that should be observed in working out a scientific national economic plan so as to prevent individual subjective assumptions and one-sided stress of the interference of partial material benefits and other factors of economic planning.

GUANGMING RIBAO: MAO'S VIEWS ON LIFE, CREATIVITY

HK011438 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 20 May 82 p 3

[Article by Li Jikai [2621 1015 0418]: "The Key Lies in Understanding People -- on Comrade Mao Zedong's Concept of Plunging Into the Thick of Life"]

[Text] In his talks at the Yanan forum on literature and art in 1942, Comrade Mao Zedong clearly put forth and repeatedly elucidated the idea that literary and art workers must become deeply involved with the realities of life. Later, people summed up this idea as a slogan called "plunging into the thick of life." For 40 years, this slogan has, on the one hand, produced a tremendous stimulating effect on the proletarian literature and art campaign -- an incalculable effect. On the other hand, given the confusion in its interpretation and explanation and certain deviations in its implementation, it has produced a really negative effect on literary and art work. To counter the situation, people have initiated some discussions on this slogan and have summed up past experiences and lessons. This is very necessary.

I now wish to give some of my humble views on Comrade Mao Zedong's idea of "plunging into the thick of life", the degree of its applicability today and appropriate changes made to it.

I believe that on the whole Comrade Mao Zedong's idea of plunging into the thick of life is a complete, scientific and thorough one. It is built on the foundation of the Marxist theory of knowledge. If "literature and art being a reflection of real life" primarily means raising questions based on the source of knowledge, then "literary and art workers must become deeply involved with the realities of life," or raise questions from experience. The latter is a slogan of action which is part of the guideline or policy that Comrade Mao Zedong put forth -- by creatively applying the principles of relations between literature and art and life to literary and art workers' action. This is one of the important developments of Marxist aesthetics put forth by Comrade Mao Zedong.

Comrade Mao Zedong's ideas of plunging into the thick of life is mainly composed of the following three aspects:

1. The aim or task of plunging into the thick of life.

Comrade Mao Zedong held that the aim or task of literary and art workers in plunging into the thick of life is twofold: 1) the transformation of the world outlook; and 2) getting acquainted with life for the sake of creativity.

Apart from calling for the thorough transformation of the world outlook only through objective practice, his basic starting point in setting forth the task of transforming the world outlook is that literature and art must serve the people, and first of all, workers, peasants and soldiers. To this end, literary and art workers must be as one with the masses of people in regard to both thinking and sentiment and become their spokesmen. At one time, the world outlook of most literary and art workers was petty bourgeois. They actually had no keen love for workers, peasants and soldiers. Some even looked down upon workers, peasants and soldiers and did not take the stand of the masses. Therefore, the task of transforming the world outlook naturally existed. The focus of the effort to transform the world outlook at that time was to change one's stand. Just as Comrade Mao Zedong said, literary and art workers must change their stand to that of workers, peasants and soldiers and that of the proletarian class in the process of being deeply involved with the worker-peasant-soldier masses, with the real struggle and in the process of studying Marxism and studying society. "Only by so doing can we truly have literature and art for workers, peasants and soldiers as well as real proletarian literature and art." Facts show that the task of transforming the world outlook of focusing on the change of one's stand put forth at that time is entirely necessary and correct. It once played an important and even decisive role in turning out large numbers of literary and art workers with a proletarian world outlook and in building a new-type proletarian literary and art contingent.

Some comrades say that Comrade Mao Zedong summed up the aim of "plunging into the thick of life" as just the transformation of the world outlook. This is a misinterpretation. Comrade Mao Zedong held the view that the ultimate aim of literary and art workers in plunging into the thick of life was to get acquainted with life and produce good works which serve the people. In specially stressing the source of literature and art and thus the need to get acquainted with life, the masses, workers, peasants and soldiers, his ultimate aim was to solve the problem of creativity. Since social life is the only source of literary and artistic creativity, writers and artists naturally plunge into the thick of life to gain access to this source. Comrade Mao Zedong therefore pointed out: In their involvement with life, literary and art workers must "observe, experience, study and analyze all men, all classes, all people, all vivid ways of living, all means of struggle and all firsthand material for literature and art. Only then can they begin the process of writing." As far as literary and art workers are concerned, they are not required to work, farm and fight like workers, peasants and soldiers. Their task is: "to produce many fine works that are warmly hailed by the masses of people," in order to "wake up and arouse the masses of people and push them toward an environment of unity and struggle and of self-transformation." This is their only task.

As far as Comrade Mao Zedong was concerned, the two aims of a deep involvement with life are closely related. Only with a correct world outlook in command can we get better acquainted with life and write well. The process of getting acquainted with life and writing can in turn stimulate the transformation of the world outlook. Fundamentally speaking, the transformation of the world outlook is only the prerequisite and guarantee for writing well. The ultimate aim of plunging into the thick of life is to write well.

In the past, some comrades interpreted the aim of plunging into the thick of life as just an "ideological transformation," or as something similar to an "ideological transformation." Therefore, there were several mistakes. Some comrades even forbade literary and art workers to collect material for writing or to think for the sake of writing while they were deeply involved with life. Instead they were allowed to simply "undergo transformation through labor." Only after they became perfect "revolutionaries" through a transformation could they begin thinking of subjects to write on. Otherwise, a problem could be found with them -- an attitude of "plunging into the thick of life." This deprived literary and art workers' deep involvement with life of its peculiar nature. Some other comrades therefore held that the slogan of "plunging into the thick of life" was one-sided and inaccurate and inhibited creativity. In fact, all this ran counter to Comrade Mao Zedong's will.

2. On the scope and target of life to be lived with intensity.

Comrade Mao Zedong drew two circles for the scope and target of life to be lived with intensity. These two circles -- one big and one small -- overlap.

The so-called big circle refers to the whole society. To live life with intensity is to go deep into the midst of society and study society. The whole "social life of mankind" is the target with which artists and writers should get deeply involved. In a broad sense, there is no social life that cannot be lived with intensity. So Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out that in life, literary and art workers must study various classes in society, study their mutual relations, and study all their ways of living and the ways of struggle of all people. It can be seen that Comrade Mao Zedong drew a very detailed and broad scope for deep involvement with life. That is by no means the interpretation accepted by some comrades: It seemed that Comrade Mao Zedong allowed only a portrayal of and deep involvement with workers, peasants and soldiers.

The so-called small circle means stressing deep involvement in the life of workers, peasants and soldiers. Various kinds of life, after all, vary in value and significance. Past literature and art work paid scant attention to workers, peasants and soldiers. This was turning history upside down.

Revolutionary literature and art must thoroughly change this situation. This means a revolution in the history of literature and art. To accomplish this revolution, the most important thing is that literary and art workers must go deep among workers, peasants and soldiers. Only by getting acquainted with workers, peasants and soldiers and showing keen love for them can they correctly portray them and sing their praises. Therefore, Comrade Mao Zedong specially stressed that literary and art workers must become deeply involved in the lives of heated struggle of workers, peasants and soldiers.

To become deeply involved with the whole social life and with the life of workers, peasants and soldiers as the focus of attention -- this gives literary and art workers a clear-cut orientation in their deep involvement with life and gives the slogan of deep involvement with life a clear-cut class disposition. This is different in principle from the slogan of literature and art reflecting social life advocated by the exploiting-class artists in history. With this orientation followed, proletarian literature and art have quickly undergone major changes. There has appeared a "brilliant new stage." This is another important contribution made by Comrade Mao Zedong.

3. On the focus and depth of the effort to get deeply involved with life.

It is not enough to just solve the problem of the scope of deep involvement with life. Based on the laws of art, Comrade Mao Zedong again pointed out the peculiar mixture of life needed by literature and art. Literary and art workers must live to learn the meaning of life needed for literature and art work and get deeply involved with the depths of life.

First, Comrade Mao Zedong held that literature and art are unlike other social sciences in relation to how the subjects are handled. Literature and art focus on men. Therefore, as far as literary and art workers are concerned, "the business of understanding and getting well-acquainted with people ranks first." Only in this way can we produce people of various kinds and help the masses to stimulate the advance of history. In literary and artistic works, natural scenes, animals, plants and other things are of course also depicted, but only to portray people, their lives, and their ideas and feelings. People portrayed in literature and art are also different from those in other social and natural sciences. They are "living" lives portrayed as perfect, ture to life, thoughtful and emotional. Therefore, in plunging into the thick of life, literary and art workers must make a penetrating study of people's thoughts, their emotions, their traits, their states of mind, and so forth. This is to say that they must penetrate into depths of people's souls and their inner worlds.

To understand people, we must of course understand social relations. But the social relations of people in literature and art are not something abstact and conceptual but instead are expressed through the thoughts and emotions of flesh-and-blood people who must be fed and clad, and who have ideals and wishes, states of mind, and so forth. Only in this way can literary and art works move and influence people. This is one of the reasons why Comrade Mao Zedong repeatedly stressed "thoughts and emotions," "the soul," "psychology," "moods," and other problems. Some comrades have stayed among the worker-peasant masses for several years or several decades, but in their work, they are capable of noting only production processes, production experiences and facts of everyday life, and fail to discern people and their inner worlds. This is often directly related to their failure in their own lives to understand people and their thoughts and emotions.

Second, to plunge into the thick of life at its core is to be able to discover and explore the beauty of life. Literary and artistic creation is an aesthetic activity. Through reflecting the beauty of life, it must satisfy the aesthetic needs of the masses and arouse people to create new beauty. Comrade Mao Zedong said: "Almost no writer or artist thinks that his work is not beautiful." But whether his work can really reflect beauty can only be proved by the practice of life. Therefore, writers and artists who plunge into the thick of life must become deeply involved with what is beautiful. They must discover not only what is beautiful but also what is ugly. They must extol what is beautiful and expose what is ugly.

This is the fundamental task of writers and artists. If they fail to discover the beautiful and ugly aspects of life while deeply involved with life, or if what they discover is a repetition of others' discoveries, then this only shows that they still have not deeply penetrated into life to its core.

Comrade Mao Zedong held that writers and artists must not only discover the beauty of life but also create aesthetic beauty by presenting in a typical way the contradictions between the true, the good and the beautiful and the false, the ugly and the evil. He said that though the beauty of life and the beauty of art "both represent beauty," people are not satisfied with the former and seek the latter. This is because the latter can be more exalted, more passionate, more concentrated, more typical, more ideal and more universal than life.

Therefore, to understand people, to understand people's inner worlds, to discover the beauty of life, to discover the beauty of laboring people's inner worlds and especially to discover new beauty never before discovered by people -- this is the core of life that literary and art workers must live for and is also an important indication of their deep involvement with the depths of life.

The above three points represent the basic component of Comrade Mao Zedong's idea of "plunging into the thick of life." Historical experience of more than 40 years in literature and art shows that the principles of such an idea are compatible with objective realities and the laws of artistic creativity. They are therefore correct and scientific. We therefore must separate the original meaning of the slogan from certain subsequent one-sided misinterpretations and erroneous practices.

The question to be answered now is whether the slogan of "plunging into the thick of life" applies today. I beleive that its fundamental spirit is still applicable. But certain concrete aspects of it must change with the changes in life. Which aspects should be changed?

First, we must change what has to do with the transformation of the world outlook. Today, most literary and art workers are part of the proletariat. Though the need remains for the transformation of the world outlook as far as most people are concerned, it is no longer a question of changing the stand but is chiefly a matter having to do with the following three aspects: 1) raising the ability to understand the objective world, and bringing the subjective more in line with the objective; 2) overcoming some nonproletarian ideas in one's world outlook; and 3) improving the ability to appreciate artistic and aesthetic judgment. This represents one of the components at the core of the world outlook of writers and artists. Only in this way can we keenly perceive the beautiful things originally existing in life. Just taking a correct stand is a far cry from being an artist. In the past, this was not adequately stressed and was even neglected, and did not seem to be the main aspect of the effort to transform the world outlook. This is wrong. Therefore, what is called the "transformation of the world outlook" today is essentially the same type of transformation perceived by laboring people. The problem of changing the stand still exists for an extremely small number of people, especially some young persons. If we fail to take note of this change and still insist on the previous kind of transformation specially imposed on intellectuals, then we would not only find ourselves running counter to the realities of today but would inevitably turn the slogans, "ideological transformation" and "plunging into the thick of life," into excuses used by one group of people to discriminate against, criticize and exclude another group.

What is regrettable is that in the mid-1950's, after most of our literary and art workers had changed their stand to that of the proletariat in their world outlook, a fairly large number of our comrades, including Comrade Mao Zedong himself, did not realistically see this change in time and continued to believe that the world outlook of most people was bourgeois, calling them "bourgeois elements" and insisting on their changing their stand and undergoing a thorough transformation. They ended up adopting compulsory methods in their approach.

The result was that literary and art workers were dealt one blow after another, seriously hampering the development of literary and artistic creativity.

A point worth noting is that even now some comrades still confine themselves to the old concepts, old ideas and old practices and are unwilling to make clear what the "transformation of the world outlook" calls for in light of actual conditions. Instead, they continue to hold that literary and art workers still confront "the change of stand as a primary problem." They stress that this is "a task of primary importance" and "a fundamental task." We can't help regarding this as a manifestation of an ossified state of mind. Of course, even today the problem of the stand remains with an extremely small number of people. This is nothing strange. There is no need to universally impose on literary and art workers the task of "ideological remolding" with the change of stand as its core. Some comrades do not understand the importance of the world outlook in creativity and go to another extreme. They hold that today there is also no need for the transformation of the world outlook in regard to general consciousness. The only task in plunging into the thick of life is to collect material. This is also not right. Everyone must undergo transformation, because there is no end to life's changes. To bring our subjective selves into line with objective realities, we must continue to undergo transformation. This process is endless.

Second, there have been changes in the scope, tragets and ingredients of life. Life today is more wide-ranging, richer and more complicated than before. Social conflicts also differ. The exploiting class no longer exists as a class. Class struggle is no longer the main conflict of society. Various aspects of life are undergoing changes. The scope of people involved has also grown to an unprecedented scale. The targets of praise in the past were mostly confined to workers, peasants and soldiers. Today, cadres and intellectuals can all become targets of praise. The life of workers, peasants and soldiers has also changed. This has created a vast world for writers and artists plunging into the thick of life and has provided a foundation of unusually rich lives for a hundred flowers to blossom in literature and art. If we continue to interpret life in very narrow terms and consider that life only involves a major struggle, class struggle and line struggle for workers, peasants and soldiers, and that other lives are not part of the real life and other persons cannot be counted on for praise, we would be naturally restricting the activity of literary and art workers, making the path for creativity increasingly narrow.

Of course, we must not use the change in life today as an excuse not to go deep among the workers, peasants and soldiers and not to get deeply involved in the heat of today's new life of modernization or even say things like "there is no change in life," "life is everywhere," "there is just no need to further raise the slogan of plunging into the thick of life," or "the slogan of plunging into the thick of life was originally wrong," and so forth. If we do so, we are also wrong. Today, the workers, peasants and soldiers on the forefront of production and reform are still the mainstay of the people and are also the main force in the modernization effort. Literature and art must continue to energetically extol them. This is determined by the nature of socialist literature and art. Literary and art workers must continue to plunge into the thick of life and go into the midst of workers, peasants and soldiers and into the depths of heated struggle.

We must not only adhere to a series of basic principles in plunging into the thick of life but also continuously develop its concrete ingredients in light of actual conditions. Only this is a scientific attitude. And only this can give the slogan of "plunging into the thick of life" greater vitality and make it our party's scientific guideline for the literary and art campaign.

GENG BIAO COMMEMORATES DEATH OF ZUO QUAN

[Article by Geng Biao [5105 7374]: "As Brilliant as the Sun and the Moon, His Noble Spirit Will Last Forever -- Commemorating the 40th Anniversary of the Death of Comrade Zuo Quan for His Country"]

[Text] Shortly after Comrade Zuo Quan died a heroic death. In memory of him, Comrade Zhu De composed a poem reading: "Shedding his blood in defense of the motherland, a famous general died a martyr for his country. The imperishable noble spirit of the Taihang Mountains will spread through all ages, leaving flowers in full bloom everywhere in Qingzhang." How time flies! Come to think of it, 40 years have already passed. Now the days when China was sunk in misery have gone forever but the noble spirit of Comrade Zuo Quan, which was normal and yet great enough to fill heaven and earth, will still live in the great cause of rejuvenating the nation and will be carried forward rather than die out with the passage of time.

Comrade Zuo Quan was an exemplary member of the CCP, a hero of the Chinese nation, a militarist of the proletariat and an outstanding general of the People's Army. He ardently loved the motherland and was loyal to the party. He was sincere and honest. He was expert in military affairs and in mapping out strategy and thus performed outstanding feats. While commemorating the 40th anniversary of the death of Zuo Quan, we must publicize the life story of Zuo Quan and spread his revolutionary spirit so as to promote the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

A People's Hero Who Had a Red Heart Completely Dedicated to the Party and the Country

Comrade Zuo Quan was born in a peasant family in 1905 in Huangmaoling of Dongchongpu of Liling County in Hunan Province. He and I came from the same village, and we lived 20 li apart. In his boyhood, he was already fervently patriotic. In 1915, Yuan Shikai accepted the "twenty-one demands" of national betrayal and humiliation. Zuo Quan, who studied in a primary school at that time, quickly wrote in anger such posters as "never forget the May 9th national humiliation" and "recall the May 9th national hatred," inviting his fellow pupils to stick them everywhere. As a middle school student, he enthusiastically sought the truth of saving the country and the people, read progressive newspapers and periodicals and studied social science. Through the victory of the Russian October Revolution, he saw the "dawn of a new era" and was resolved to dedicate himself to transforming Chinese society. In winter 1923, he was admitted to the Guangzhou Military Martial Arts School (the martial arts training school of the Hunan army). In August the next year, he was transferred to study in the sixth brigade of the first term of the Whampoa Military Academy. He supported the propositions of Dr Sun Yat-sen and took part in the eastern expedition to suppress Chen Jiongming. Under the education and influence of the CCP, Comrade Zuo Quan fostered lofty communist ideals. In February 1925, he was admitted into the CCP through the recommendation of Comrade Chen Geng. I was informed by the comrades in the Whampoa Military Academy that during his study in the academy, Zuo Quan was simple and frugal as well as hardworking and seldom went sight-seeing. He concentrated all his energy and time on his study and training and he did so exceedingly well in his study and training that he was praised by Comrade Zhou Enlai as an outstanding student. After graduating from the first term of the Whampoa Military Academy, he was sent to the Soviet Union to study. He first studied in the Dr Sun Yat-sen University and then in the military university. After graduation in 1930, he returned home and was assigned to work in the Red Army of the central revolutionary base. He successively assumed the posts of instructor of the military academy of the Chinese Workers' and Peasants' Revolutionary Red Army, combat staff officer, combat section chief and chief of staff of the officer department of the general headquarters of the first front army of the Red Army and political instructor and the concurrent commander of the 15th army of the Red Army. In 1933 he was transferred to be chief of staff of the first front army group of the Red Army. He was 28 years old at that time.

After the Red Army reached northern Shaanxi Province on the 25,000-li Long March in 1936, he was acting commander of the first front army group of the Red Army. In 1937 when the war of resistance against Japan broke out, the Red Army was reorganized into the Eighth Route Army and Zuo Quan took the post of deputy chief of staff of the reorganized Red Army.

Viewed from the experience of the posts which Comrade Zuo Quan assumed, he was always in the People's Army and never left wars for a moment. He spent all his lifetime amid gunfire and the smoke of gunpowder. Whether in the struggle of the Red Army against a number of "encirclement and suppression" campaigns launched by the KMT troops in the central revolutionary base or in the 25,00-li Long March which had to undergo thousands of crags and torrents and, whether in leading the army eastward to cross the Huang He or in fighting successively in different areas behind the enemy lines in the Taihang Mountains, Comrade Zuo Quan maintained, from start to finish, a high-level sense of responsibility and initiative. He defied hard work and assiduously worked day in and day out. Staff officers were allowed to be on night duty in shifts but he was on the night shift every day. He handled and gave consideration to all matters big and samll in reading battlefield reports of the various localities, drawing up orders and checking on work. On such prolonged intense and painstaking work, he never uttered a word of complaint and never asked for even a day of leave. His thoughts always turned to the cause of the party; hardly ever did he think of himself.

Comrade Zuo Quan was loyal to the party and firmly believed that the cause of the party would surely succeed and the revolution certainly be victorious. To win victories, he was faithful in the discharge of his duties. He obeyed the party's orders in doing everything. He would go wherever the party pointed and never declined or flinched from any appointments. He always charged ahead of his men, defying personal danger. He was as strong as iron and steel and as bold and powerful as lions and tigers. In June 1936, at the most critical juncture of the Quzizhen battle of Gansu Province which was waged by the first front army group of the Red Army, army group Acting Commander Zuo Quan and political instructor Nie Rongzhen personally went to the forward positions to give leadership and wiped out an enemy brigade at one fell swoop. In February 1938, when the general headquarters of the Eighth Route Army was transferred from Lingfen to southeastern Shanxi Province, it encountered an enemy regiment in Fuscheng which was marching westward. In this critical situation, in complete disregard of his personal safety, he commanded the two sole remaining guards companies of the general headquarters and fought a fierce battle with the 3,000-strong enemy army and eventually headed off a disaster. In winter 1940, the latter stages of the 100-regiment campaign, in the Guanjianao battle, Comrade Zuo Quan assisted Comrade Peng Dehuai conducting operations. In order to exercise more effective leadership, he moved the command post closer and closer to the front, directed the troops in hand-to-hand combat with the enemy under a hail of bullets and won victory in the battle. In May 1942, the Japanese Army concentrated a 30,000-strong army and launched an unprecedentedly brutal mass "mopping-up" operation in a vain attempt to make a joint attack on the general headquarters of the Eighth Route Army. At this critical moment, to protect the northern bureau of the CCP Central Committee, the general headquarters of the Eighth Route Army and Comrade Peng Dehuai in their attempt to break through a tight encirclement, Comrade Zuo Quan directed the covering force in the fighting. While several thousand people benefited by this action and were out of danger, unfortunately, he died a heroic death at the age of 37.

Comrade Zuo Quan's loyalty to the cause of the party was also manifested in the fact that he would never waver in the slightest, no matter how adverse the circumstances. In 1933, Wang Ming gained the leadership of the CCP Central Committee and created the third stage of "left" opportunist rule in the agrarian revolution of the CCP. Organizationally, Wang Ming and his ilk pursued an extremely sectarian cadre policy which struck blows at revolutionary cadres and enlarged the scope for the elimination of counterrevolutionaries in a big way. In the 1932 campaign for the elimination of counterrevolutionaries, Zuo Quan was framed as having joined a Trotskyite organization and disciplinary action was taken against him; that is, he was placed on probation within the party.

At that time, he repeatedly affirmed his stand to the party but the CCP Central Committee at that time did not believe him. However, he consistently worked hard for the party rather than blamed the party for this and throughout did not vacillate in his firm belief in the revolutionary cause of the party. As his subordinates, many of us did not have any idea about this matter and also did not perceive that he was a man who had been wronged and subjected to an unredressed injustice. It was not until December 1941 that Comrade Zuo Quan wrote a letter to the CCP Central Committee saying: "In recalling my experience, I was admitted to the party in February in Guangzhou and went to Moscow in the winter the very same year. Nearly 17 years have elapsed since I returned home in June 1930 and went to the Soviet areas in November of the same year. During this period, I have never deviated from the party even one step and have always been educated and trained by the party. I have lived within the party and done inner-party work." "During this period, I have never committed errors which are harmful to the party and also I have never wavered in whatever circumstances of struggle and never bowed to hardship and difficulties. I have been neither content with temporary ease and comfort nor inactive and dispirited. I have been working for the party with utter devotion and struggling for the line of the party. Although my ability is very small and I have not made any significant contributions and there are still quite a few weaknesses in my work, I flatter myself that I have been faithful to the party and conscientious and active in my work.... I am neither dejected nor discouraged.... I have always taken comfort in the fact that true gold fears no fire, that the party has assigned me work to do, that I will vindicate myself and redress this injustice in both struggle and work and that the day will come when the truth will prevail in the end." A communist must stand the test and endure being wronged by others. He must be openhearted and aboveboard, loyal and enthusiastic and must take the overall interests into account. Comrade Zuo Quan has set an example in this respect with his lofty party spirit.

A Militarist Who Was Theoretically Accomplished and Practically Experienced

Comrade Zuo Quan was a rare military talent of the CCP. He was highly accomplished in military and political theory and highly experienced in practical struggle. He was earnest and down-to-earth, worked hard and practically on the one hand, and was diligent and eager to learn and good at summing up experience on the other hand, and thus made great contributions in the fighting and building of our army, and particularly in such fields as military theory, strategy and tactics, the work of staff officers and logistics. For this reason, Comrade Zhou Enlai praised Zuo Quan as "a militarist who is both theoretically accomplished and practically experienced."

In the various revolutionary wars, Comrade Zuo Quan displayed his brilliant ability to command. In February 1932, the central Red Army launched the Huangpo campaign. Zuo Quan called divisional and regimental commanders together to study battle plans and together with them, he went to the high mountains and dense forests of the areas of Dengxianqiao, Dalonping, Jiaohu and Huoyuan to conduct an on-the-spot terrain reconnaissance and to set up ambush positions. He disposed troops and firepower for the battle in a very meticulous and well-conceived way. The arrogant and imperious but stupid 52d and 59th enemy divisions went deep into the "pockets" which our troops had set up beforehand, being completely unaware of the trap. In this battle, two enemy divisions were annihilated and the divisional commanders Li Ming and Chen Shiji were captured alive. In April 1932, the central Red Army formed the Eastern Route Army and Zuo Quan led the 15th Army of the Red Army as the vanguard unit. In the decisive battle along Nanjing and Tianbao, he led the 44th Division in a feint toward Taolinqiao but actually fought his way across the Xiang Jiang and, full of valor and vigor, the division thrust into the right flank of the enemy and completely defeated them, thus enabling the Red Army to follow up the victory by capturing Zhangzhou. In the Long March, Comrade Zuo Quan was frequently up with the vanguard units, directing the fighting. He made tremendous contributions in the battles and operations which had a vital bearing on the overall situation, such as the speedy crossing of the Wu Jiang, the lightning-quick capture of Luding, the successful crossing of the great grasslands and the successful surmounting of the natural barrier of Lazikou.

After the Long March ended in northern Shaanxi Province, Comrade Zuo Quan and Political Commissar Nie Rongzhen commanded the Quzizhen engagement and the famous Shanchengbao campaign. In the Shanchengbao campaign, with a firepower of 13 companies and by making use of the night, we completely wiped out an enemy brigade of the main 78th Division of Hu Zongnan in 5 hours of fierce fighting and thus ended the second recolutionary civil war. After the war of resistance against Japan broke out, Zuo Quan went eastward to cross the Hunag He and led the headquarters of the Eighth Route Army to penetrate the enemy's rear areas in north China and assisted Commander in Chief Zhu De and Deputy Commander in Chief Peng Dehuai in resolutely implementing the brilliant decisions of the CCP Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong, arousing the broad masses of soldiers and civilians to carry out guerrilla warfare independently with the initiative in their own hands and in establishing various basis to resist Japanese aggression in north China. All this dealt heavy blows at the Japanese aggressors and Zuo Quan thus rendered meritorious service to upholding the war of resistance against Japan in north China.

Comrade Zuo Quan had for long years been chief of staff of the high-ranking formations of our army and participated in the drawing up of plans for the work of army building and in the commanding of many major campaigns. He was one of the outstanding chiefs of staff of our army. In the early stages of the war of resistance against Japan, the troops expanded at a rapid pace and the various anti-Japanese base areas were carved up and blockaded and thus the work of the headquarters had to be speedily strengthened. Therefore, in winter 1938, Zuo Quan personally called a conference of the chiefs of staff of southeastern Shanxi Province, summed up our army's experience in headquarters work and, in the light of the actual conditions and the needs of our troops at that time, formulated regulations regarding the headquarters work of the Eighth Route Army. After the conference, he personally established and perfected the various professional departments of the headquarters and clearly defined the powers and responsibilities, worked out programs and set up requirements for them. Moreover, he earnestly practiced and vigorously grasped the implementation of what he advocated.

In order to train between battles and heighten the combat effectiveness ofthe troops, Comrade Zuo Quan wrote such articles as "Combat Drilling Work of the Eighth Route Army" and "Military Education of New Soldiers" and in them he put forth the drilling principles, such as the integration of theory with practice, the carrying out of battle drill against Japanese aggression with certain aims in mind, the measure of smaller quantity but better quality, and the conduct of thoroughgoing political work. In winter 1940, the Eighth Route Army for the first time held a conference on logistics. At the meeting, Comrade Zuo Quan made a report entitled "On the Building of Logistics of Our Army." At a meeting which was held a little later after the conference, he also delivered a report entitled "Various Aspects of Logistics." Zuo Quan also personally set up the Huangyadong firearms factory in Licheng County and thus made contributions to the expansion of the sources of weapons and ammunition of our army.

The beginning of the war of resistance against Japan was a great turning point in history. The Eighth Route Army was confronted with a new enemy, new situation and new tasks. It was necessary to find solutions to the problems in the light of the actual conditions of the troops; problems such as how to implement the decisions and directives of the CCP Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong and how to unify the cadres' understanding of the new strategy and principles; how to shift from giving priority to mobile warfare to giving priority to guerrilla warfare; how to train the troops and how to do a good job in logistics work, and so on, under the new conditions. Under the direct leadership of Comrades Zhu De and Peng Dehuai, Comrade Zuo Quan did a lot of creative work. At that time, some comrades planned to concentrate our troops to wage mobile warfare in a big way when the time was not yet ripe. This was detrimental to the implementation of the strategy and principles of the CCP Central Committee.

To counter this situation, while the troops were studying the works of Comrade Mao Zedong, such as "Problems of Strategy in Guerrilla War Against Japan" and "On Protracted War," Comrade Zuo Quan gave many coaching lectures to the cadres in the light of the battlefields in north China. In his article "From the Killing of Lieutenant-General A Bu to the Present Siege of the Shanxi-Chahaer-Hebei Border Areas Waged by the Invading Enemy," he made detailed deliberations on the various factors for the defeat of the Japanese invading enemy and the victory of our army in the Laiyuan battle and emphatically pointed out that in military terms, what was important was that it was the result of implementing the operational principle that "what is fundamental is guerrilla warfare but we must not slacken our efforts to wage mobile warfare under favorable circumstances." In order to implement the strategy and principles of the CCP Central Committee, Comrade Zuo Quan made an extensive study of the problems of tactics and wrote such treatises as "Problems of Tactics," "Ambush Tactics," "A Year of Mopping-up and Antimopping-up Operations" and "Wage a Struggle Against the Enemy's Policy of 'Nibbling' at Our Country's Territory." These treatises and directives effectively improved the tactical level of the troops and played a great role in upholding the war of resistance against Japan in north China.

In the prolonged revolutionary wars, whether in organizing and directing battles or in engaging in the various types of military construction, Comrade Zuo Quan adhered to taking dialectical materialism and historical materialism as guidance, and in the light of the actual conditions of both sides -- the enemy and ourselves -- studied and analyzed problems, sought the laws governing them, found solutions to them, and raised and expounded them to the higher plane of theory. In the general headquarters in Yunyang, Zuo Quan compiled QING BAO [INFORMATION] No 1 and personally wrote the instruction: "It is hereby announced that the captured materials have been compiled and will be distributed among you for your further study." He always carefully studied any documents and publications which were captured from the enemy and the materials of the enemy and puppet regime which were obtained through various ways and means and at the same time, in the light of the experiences and lessons of our army and through making an analysis of the conditions of both sides -- the enemy and ourselves -- he explored the laws and defined countermeasures. During this state, Zuo Quan frequently summed up and commented on the military movements in the war of resistance against Japan in north China every fortnight or every month and systematically discussed some major problems concerning the struggles against the enemy. In his famous article "A Year of Mopping-up and Antimopping-up Operations," Comrade Zuo Quan summarized the situation of struggling against the "mopping-up" operations in the various anti-Japanese bases in north China and introduced the principles and characteristics of the "mopping-up" operations of the Japanese invaders, and summed up six experiences in the struggle of our army for winning victories in the "antimopping-up" operations. In the article "Wage a Struggle Against the Enemy's Policy of 'Nibbling' at Our Country's Territory," he discussed, in an overall manner, the problems existing in the struggle against the policy of "nibbling" at our country's territory and the concrete solutions to these problems. Comrade Zuo Quan still organized inspection tours of the general headquarters and went to the southern Hebei and Hebei-Shandong-Henan revolutionary bases to help the armies run short-term training courses, to spread and exchange experiences and to train cadres. Based on his study and summarization of the practical expereince in the revolutionary wars and taking Marxism as the weapon, he wrote the article "On the Principles of Military Thinking" and repeatedly expounded the following principles of operation with a large amount of convincing material, such as "the essence of all wars is the continuation of political struggle"; "all strategy and tactics move forward by depending on the various economic conditions of that society and on the productive forces of the various classes for existence"; "the most important factor which determines wars is man"; "political work cannot but be the lifeline of the army"; and "we must understand all strategy and tactics with a dialectical perspective and in addition, create new strategy and tactics with dialectical methods in our practical struggle."

Another characteristic of Comrade Zuo Quan in his military career was to start by making a political analysis, paying close attention to the relationship between military matters on the one hand and political and economic matters on the other hand, and to put military work in a proper position in the overall situation. In the large number of his own military works, whether in dealing with the struggle against the "mopping-up" operations and against the policy of "nibbling" at our country's territory or with tactics, training and logistics, he always took the political aspects into account rather than considering military matters as they stood. In his article "The Eighth Route Army Which Has Upheld the War of Resistence Against Japan for 2 Years," of the five reasons for our army's achieving great successes which he analyzed, the first four were topics dealing with politics. In talking about the struggle against the policy of "nibbling" at our country's territory, he emphatically explained that "it is necessary to organically coordinate our various forces, various organizations and various forms of struggle and bring the strength of overall struggle into play." In discussing the military education of new soldiers, he gave wide coverage to the matter of political education. He pointed out: "It is impossible to train, in a short period of time, large batches of new soldiers into militarily skilled soldiers and enable them to participate in battles by relying exclusively on military education. It is necessary to combine it with thoroughgoing political and with appropriate military and political work."

Comrade Zuo Quan was diligent and eager to learn and had great understanding. In his early years when he studied in the Whampao Military Academy, the Dr Sun Yat-sen University and the military university in Moscow, he did exceedingly well in his studies. In the war years, although he was burdened with pressing military duties and busily engaged in military affairs, he diligently studied late at night and he always had a book in his hand like before. While in the central revolutionary base in Jiangxi Province, I borrowed from him the military works of Clausewitz and Fu Long Zhi [0126 7893 5347], which were hand-written copies of his own translations. He enjoined me to hand in to him any books captured from the enemy in battles. His reading range was very wide. Apart from the telegram directives and works of the CCP Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong, he often read and studied the foreign language edition of the "Collected Works of Lenin," "Series of the Soviet Red Army" and the German's "On New Tactics," the Japanese Army's books with contents concerning "mopping-up operations" and strengthening public order" and the collected works of Zeng Guofan and Zuo Zongtang. Having great learning, when making a report or giving a lecture to the cadres, Comrade Zuo Quan was able to make his talks cheerful and humorous as well as interesting and absorbing. In talking about battles, he could narrate the course of a battle from beginning to end in an orderly and vivid manner; in talking about study, he could copiously quote authoritative works and explain the profound in simple terms. He enjoyed the great respect and popular support of the cadres and soldiers.

A Public Servant of Society Who Immersed Himself Quietly in Hard Work Rather Than Seeking High Positions and Personal Gains

In regard to material enjoyment, Comrade Zuo Quan "sought neither fame nor wealth" and never set his mind on personal gain. He did not have the slightest private savings nor any property. He took the gravest responsibility in the cause of the liberation of the nation and the people and spared no efforts in the performance of his duty for the Chinese people.

Comrade Zuo Quan had studied in the Soviet Union for 5 years and assumed high-ranking positions in the army but he never turned up his nose at others because he himself had eaten foreign bread. Still less did he ask for special preferential treatment in life because he himself had assumed high-ranking leading positions.

In the days when he was in the central revolutionary base, when he was assigned to teach, he performed his teaching tasks in real earnest; when he was appointed to be a political instructor, he tried hard to transmit the party's decisions down to the army; and when he was transferred to be chief of staff of the general headquarters, he did his utmost to discharge his responsibility. On the extremely hard and difficult Long March, in the busy and intense forward general headquarters of the Eighth Route Army, he never showed weariness and carelessness. Comrade Zuo Quan was an outstanding cadre who assiduously and consistently struggled for more than 10 years and always concentrated all his energy and time on his work, and a public servant of society who fused himself with the revolutionary tasks which he shouldered.

Comrade Zuo Quan was a man of few words, calm, modest and amiable. Under no circumstances had he ever tried to push himself forward. Although he had very great military ability and knew a lot about the staff officer profession, sometimes he would ask his subordinates to read the texts of telegrams and drafts of circulars which he had drawn up and solicited opinions from them. In writing articles, he would, of his own accord, also consult the comrades and editors who were well experienced. People remembered that in telling them of the Shanchenbao campaign and the Fucheng engagement he had talked about his comrades in arms, the troops under his command and the rank and file soldiers but had never uttered a word about himself.

The work of the chief of staff involves the interests of all quarters concerned. The failure to attend to and properly handle any links in the work will directly interfere with the execution of orders and the implementation of deployments. Comrade Liu Bocheng said that in doing the work of a staff officer, it was necessary to be meticulous in one's work and bold in one's actions and to put up with being bullied and scolded. It was not easy to be a staff officer. During his office tenure as chief of staff, Comrade Zuo Quan managed to arrange all types of work in an orderly manner and handle it well, whether it concerned the relationship between the higher and lower levels or the relationship between the different departments. He never lost his temper. At ordinary times, he made few remarks. While at meetings, he did not express his views rashly but once he took the floor, he would be able to grasp the key points and express his views in a well-organized manner. All of us admired him very much. During the days when they were in the Red Army, he got along with Comrade Nie Rongzhen quite well. While in the forward general headquarters of the Eight Route Army, he highly esteemed Commander in Chief Zhu and Deputy Commander in Chief Peng and resolutely carried out their orders and directives. On matters of major importance, he always asked them for instructions rather than taking unauthorized actions. Commander in Chief Zhu and Deputy Commander in Chief Peng had great confidence in him. The longer they were together, the more intimately they understood each other.

Comrade Zuo Quan cared for his subordinates and cherished the people. He was amiable, kind, sincere, frank and open with people. He cared for and cherished his subordinates far more than himself, always paid attention to their work, study and life and showed consideration for their difficulties. He was not excessively accommodating or indulgent toward his subordinates and neither did he dress others down in an oversimplified manner. The comrades who worked with him said that they did not remember Comrade Zuo Quan's ever losing his temper. Comrade Zuo Quan attached importance to doing a good job in relations between the army and the people and expressed deep concern for the suffering of the masses of people. He said that the clothes we wore, the food we ate and the ammunition we used to wipe out the enemy were all given by the civilians and that we should never forget the people and should safeguard the interests of the people. He always taught the troops to strictly observe mass discipline, economize on food and clothing, rely on their own efforts and ease the burden of the people in every possible way. When the general headquarters of the Eighth Route Army was building a bridge for the people of Matian township, he conscientiously took part in labor except for when he was engaged in important official business.

Even to the last moment before he heroically laid down his life, he still thought of the safety of the masses of the people. Comrades who surrounded him recall: On 25 May, gunpowder smoke spread all over the place on the Shizi ridge at Matian, the enemy planes bombed in waves and artillery shells roared. The 10,000-plus-strong enemy army tightened the siege from all directions and launched an "iron-wall-surrounding" operation. The commander of the guard company anxiously tried to persuade Comrade Zuo Quan to move away to a safe zone. But the latter refused to do so. What Comrade Zuo Quan worried about was the safety of his troops and the masses of the people. Precisely at this moment, he found that there were still some fellow villagers on the nearby mountain who had not broken out of the encirclement. He ordered the commander of the guard company to immediately send his men to draw the enemy and save the fellow villagers from the encirclement. The northern bureau under the CCP Central Committee and the general headquarters eventually broke out of the encirclement and the fellow villagers were all saved. But it never occurred to us that Comrade Zuo Quan would be cut down by the blasts of the frenzied bomb explosions of the enemy. He died a glorious death at his post.

Comrade Zuo Quan heroically gave his life for his country. The three armed services wept bitterly and all the nation mourned for him. Comrades, whether at the front or in the rear, all shed tears of incomparable sorrow. Comrade Zhou Enlai, Zhu De, Peng Dehouai, Liu Bocheng, Deng Xiaoping, Ye Jianying, Nie Rongzheu and others wrote articles and poems in memory of him. The people cherished his memory. A folk song of the Taihang Mountains goes: "The hometown of General Zuo Quan if Liling County in Hunan Province. He was an exemplary member of the CCP.... He expended all his energies for the country and the nation.... General Zuo Quan heroically gave his life for us, the common people.

In an arricle in memory of Zuo Quan, Comrade Liu Bocheng and Deng Xiaopeng said: "The best way to commemorate this is to march ahead along the path, crimson with the blood of the dead, march ahead towards the truth in which the dead and we have firm confidence rather than to hesitate in the pool of the blood of the dead." In commemorating the 40th anniversary of the death of Comrade Zuo Quan, we must see the important tasks with which we are charged and in the new historical stage, we must uphold the four basic principles, arouse ourselves, strengthen our confidence, go all out, and do a solid and practical job in all types of work. We must make new contributions in opposing hegemonism, safeguarding world peace and in building our army into a still more powerful, modern and standardized revolutionary army. We must march forward to the great goal of turning China into a modern and powerful, highly democratic and culturally advanced socialist country.

WANG ZHEN AT XINJIANG LAND SOCIETY INAUGURATION

OW031117 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 31 May 82

[Text] The Xinjiang Uygur autonomous regional land society was formally inaugurated on 25 May. Wang Zhen, member of the Politburo of the CCP Central Committee, member of the Central Military Council Standing Committee and president of the Central Party School, received the representatives and addressed the inauguration meeting. Also present on the occasion were responsible comrades of the regional CCP committee and the regional people's government.

The regional land society is a mass, academic organization formed by scientific and technological workers in Xinjiang. The society is responsible for land resources surveys, land planning and land management.

The meeting received a total of 27 academic theses. Some comrades read their theses at the meeting. The inauguration meeting elected the first council of the land society.

Representatives of concerned units of the autonomous region and concerned research and production departments of the various prefectures and autonomous prefectures also attended the meeting.

CENTRAL GREENING COMMITTEE HOLDS DISCUSSION

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 Jun (XINHUA) -- The central greening committee recently invited comrades of some provinces, municipalities, autonomous regions, PLA units and key cities and counties to hold a discussion meeting to analyze and study the development of the nationwide campaign for obligatory tree planting. The meeting also worked out the present task and the task for a certain period of time in the future. It called for making a sustained effort to deepen the campaign for obligatory tree planting.

To consolidate and develop the good situation in obligatory treeplanting, the central greening committee will at present and for a certain period of time in future firmly grasp the following work:

1. It is necessary to mobilize the masses and continue to publicize the campaign so as to continuously deepen people's understanding of the significance of the campaign for obligatory tree planting.

2. It is necessary to strengthen management and protection. It is necessary to proceed from the actual situation in all localities, institute detailed rules and regulations and laws and regulations governing management and set up a strict responsibility system.

3. It is necessary to grow saplings. Units concerned in all localities must make efforts to manage nurseries of young plants well to ensure the fulfillment of this year's sapling growing plan.

4. It is necessary to draw up a good plan. It is necessary to draw up a short-term plan for obligatory tree planting in accordance with the State Council's "Regulations on Launching a Nationwide Campaign for Obligatory Tree Planting" and the guidelines of adapting measures to local conditions, seeking truth from facts, stressing the main points and making a rational overall arrangement. It is necessary to carry out the plan in a planned way step by step.

5. It is necessary to train technical personnel now, when spring afforestation has just ended and rainy season afforestation has not yet begun.

6. The central greening committee must firmly grasp work in key cities and counties together with all provincial, municipal and autonomous region units concerned.

7. It is necessary for units concerned in all localities to check and accept the fulfillment of this year's task of obligatory tree planting and sum up and exchange experience.

WU LENGSI, ZHU MUZHI DISCUSS TELEVISION DRAMA

[Excerpts] Beijing, 2 Jun (XINHUA) -- The editorial departments of WENYI YANJIU [LITERATURE AND ART RESEARCH 2429 5669 4282 4496] and DIANSHI WENYI [TELEVISION LITERATURE AND ART 7193 6017 2429 5669] held a joint forum recently by inviting some of the television drama workers, movie and television drama commentators and television drama workers, movie and television drama commentators and researchers, writers, artists and leading personnel in Beijing to hold extensive discussions on the questions of promoting the creation of television dramas, improving the quality of television dramas and the artistic characteristics of television dramas.

Wu Lengxi, minister of radio and television; and Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture; spoke at the forum. Wu Lengxi said: Television drama is a fledgling art that has developed in the past 2 years in our country. More than 100 television dramas are now being shown to the public annually. As a powerful instrument of propaganda, education and cultural recreation, television dramas have penetrated tens of thousands of homes impacting the lives of hundreds of millions of people. He said: The 1980's will be a period of vigorous development of television literature and art. He pointed out: In developing television drama, it is necessary: 1) to promote television drama creation; and 2) to strengthen critiques of television dramas.

In his speech, Zhu Muzhi stressed: The point of departure of our television literature and art is to satisfy the cultural needs of the masses. Our television literature and art must follow our own road with a national character. National characterization develops with time. Our country has its own national conditions and its national habits. We study and draw on the experience of foreign television literature and art in order to develop our own television literature and art even better. Zhu Muzhi also emphasized that efforts should be made to put into full play the superiority of planning and mutual coordination under the socialist system and to promote the development of the television undertakings in every way; the literary and art departments concerned on the other hand should develop themselves with this new artistic means -- television.

The forum lasted for 3 days. Among those who spoke at the meeting were Jin Shan, Zhao Xun, Su Yiping, Wu Zuguang, Hou Baolin, Li Zhun, Hong Minsheng, Wang Xiaowei, Ge Yang, Lan Tianye, Meng Weizai and Cai Xiang. They said that while television drama has been recognized by the public as a new comprehensive art and has shown its powerful vitality, it is still in the pioneering stage.

ZHOU ZHIAN AT ANHUI CHILDREN'S DAY MEETING

OW032030 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 31 May 82

Prior to the meeting, leading comrades of Anhui Province and Hefei municipality received representatives of Young Pioneers and instructors and teachers who were attending the meeting and had cordial conversations with them in the reception room.

At the meeting, Hu Kaiming, standing committee member of the provincial CCP committee and vice chairman of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, delivered a speech. On behalf of the party, government and PLA leaders in the province and the municipality, he extended festive greetings to the broad masses of children and conveyed cordial regards to the people's teachers and others who had worked hard to bring up the children for the motherland. He said: Children represent the hope and future of our country and people. They are the assets of the whole society. Training them to be useful persons is a task which has a direct bearing on the prosperity of our nation and the progress of the four modernizations. At present we should use the party's line, principles and policies as guidance in educating the broad masses of children to love the party, the motherland and socialism. At the same time, we should develop a sustained decorum and courtesy campaign centered on the "five stresses and four beauties" in depth and in breadth so as to train them into a new generation possessed of ideals, morals, knowledge and physical health.

In conclusion, Comrade Hu Kaiming said: Party committees at all levels should put the work of children's education on their agenda and grasp it conscientiously so as to achieve results. Instructors of Young Pioneers, people's teachers and children's health care and education workers are gardeners cultivating young plants for the motherland, and must in particular do a good job in educating children. Your work is lofty, glorious and arduous. The party, the government and the people all respect your work and thank you for what you are doing.

ZHEJIANG RIBAO URGES DISCUSSION OF CONSTITUTION

OW260458 Hangzhou ZHEJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 17 May 82 p 1

[Article by ZHEJIANG RIBAO commentator: "Act as Master in Conscientiously Discussing the Draft Constitution"]

[Excerpts] In accordance with the NPC Standing Committee's resolution, the standing committee of the provincial people's congress has adopted a "resolution to conscientiously study and discuss the 'draft revised constitution of the PRC' in the whole province."

All people in the province are requested to take positive steps to exercise their democratic rights and study and discuss the draft revised constitution in all seriousness and with political zeal by acting as masters of the country.

Some comrades hold that drawing up the constitution is something for higher authority, while discussing the draft revised constitution is a matter that "has nothing to do with them." As everyone knows, our country is a socialist state of the people's democratic dictatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants. The people are the masters of the country, and all power belongs to the people. As the saying goes, "everyone has a share of responsibility for the fate of his country." Discussion of the draft revised constitution by the people throughout the country is precisely a manifestation of the sacred right the state has bestowed on every citizen. By discussing the draft revised constitution, the people are taking concrete action to be concerned about, and take part in, state affairs and to exercise their rights as the masters of their country. They should highly value their democratic rights and truly act as the masters of the country. In the meantime, it should be noted that discussing the draft revised constitution is another realistic and profound education in socialist democracy and the socialist legal system. During the 10 years of internal disorder, because the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing company unscrupulously trampled on the fundamental law of our country, the people were deprived of their basic power, with neither guarantee of the normal environment for their labor, work and study nor guarantee for the safety of their lives and property. During that period, the Chinese nation suffered a serious disaster. We should firmly bear in mind this tragic historical experience. When the law is strictly enforced, the country will be in good order and the people will live a peaceful life. By taking part in the discussion of the country's fundamental law, we will enhance our sense of responsibility as the masters of the country and heighten our consciousness of defending and observing the constitution. In that case, we will be able to further grasp the basic spirit and contents of the constitution, dare to struggle against any act in violation of it and see to it that it is thoroughly put into practice.

In the opinion of other comrades, outstanding tasks are too numerous and too heavy, such as the present work of striking at severe criminal offenses in the economic sphere, the general census, industrial and agricultural production and various tasks in other fields. Under these circumstances, how can we spare time and effort to discuss the draft revised constitution? This opinion is also wrong. It is a fact that we have many heavy tasks, but studying and discussing the draft revised constitution is a very important matter concerning the further improvement of our country's fundamental law. When this important matter is grasped, the people's revolutionary spirit will be enhanced, the enthusiasm of cadres and masses will be aroused and work in all fields will be promoted. For this reason, party committees and governments at all levels must include this important matter in their agenda and seriously strengthen their leadership in this regard.

To successfully lead and organize the people throughout the province to discuss the draft revised constitution, party and government leading comrades at all levels should play a leading role in studying and discussing it. They should do their best to achieve greater and better results in the study to set an example for the masses in studying and discussing the draft revised constitution. Party committees and governments at all levels should go all out to train backbone propagandists, do well in organizing propaganda contingents and give full play to the role of propagandists and reporters at all levels, so that the basic spirit and contents of the draft revised constitution will be known to every family and understood by everyone. In addition, all propaganda media should be used to develop a multifaceted, dynamic and vigorous propaganda campaign in close connection with the people's study and discussion of the draft revised constitution. We should see to it that a real high tide is reached in such study and discussion in our province.

REN ZHONGYI GREETS GUANGDONG CHILDREN, WORKERS

HK311446 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 31 May 82

[Summary] "This afternoon the Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee invited the representatives of 80 outstanding juveniles and children and 20 outstanding workers and instructors engaging in juvenile and children's work in Guangzhou and Foshan municipalities to the provincial CCP committee building as guests. Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee and the provincial people's government, including Ren Zhongyi, Liu Tianfu, Liang Lingguang, Li Jianzhen, Wang De and Yin Linping, earnestly met this group of guests and sincerely held a forum with them. They also presented books and stationery to them as gifts for International Children's Day."

At 1500, juveniles and children and workers and instructors engaging in juvenile and children's work happily came to the building of the provincial CCP committee by special cars and were armly welcomed and received. Representatives of juveniles and children presented red scarfs and small scientific, technological and handicraft products to leading comrades to extend their respect for revolutionaries of the older generation. Representatives of juveniles and children reported the results in learning from Lei Feng and in establishing new customs to the province's leading comrades. "On behalf of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial government and the provincial people's congress standing committee, provincial CCP committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi spoke at the forum, extending seasonal greetings to the children and respect and comfort to the representatives of workers and instructors engaging in juvenile and children's work who have worked hard to train a younger generation. He encouraged all juveniles and children in our province to learn from Lei Feng, establish new customs, penetratingly launch the 'five stresses and four beauties' campaign, consolidate and develop the results of the all-people decorum and courtesy month campaign, firmly remember the trust placed in them by the party and the people, strive to diligently study science and culture and become a new generation which has ideals, morality, knowledge and good health."

Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee and the provincial people's government also had their pictures taken with the children.

NANFANG RIBAO VIEWS HANDLING ECONOMIC CRIMES

HK011421 Guangzhou NONFANG RIBAO in Chinese 28 May 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "The Key Lies in the Leadership"]

[Text] Since news of serious economic criminal activities such as the case of Wang Zhong, the four antismuggling patrol boats and the anticontraband personnel was published in the newspapers, people have been very much concerned with the development of Haifeng County's efforts in dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field. Obviously, they are not only paying attention to the struggle waged in some individual districts and units, but also to the general situation of the province and the future of the struggle.

What, then, is the situation in Haifeng? The report on how the Haifeng County CCP Committee leads the struggle, which is published in this newspaper today, has given us a clear picture. The ongoing struggle in Haifeng County is developing steadily and the Haifeng County CCP Committee is resolute in waging the struggle to the end. It is indeed encouraging to see this happen in a place where smuggling once ran rampant. Thus, we can see how important it is to strengthen leadership over the struggle.

It is the demand of the CCP Central Committee and the provincial CCP committee that this struggle must be waged to the end, and this is also the desire of the broad rank of cadres and the masses. The Haifeng County CCP Committee has made up its mind to deal blows at criminal economic activities amid struggle and its resolution is confirmed by practice. "The Resolution on Dealing Severe Blows at Criminals Who Have Seriously Undermined the Economy" issued by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council has ideologically equipped the county CCP committee and provided it a powerful weapon for the struggle. Since the case of Wang Zhong, the four antismuggling patrol boats and the anticontraband personnel was exposed, the county CCP committee members have sharpened their vigilance and cleared their minds.

The determination and the clear-cut stand of the broad ranks of cadres and the masses displayed during the struggle has encouraged the county CCP committee members. This has helped them define a guiding principle and establish an objective of struggle, that is, that the struggle must be waged over a long period of time so as to strive for a complete success, and that they must not slacken their vigilance, withdraw perfunctorily and give up halfway.

The "resolution" of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council pointed out that this struggle "is related to the success and failure of the socialist modernization of our country and to the rise and fall of our party and our country," and that "the whole party must have a clear mind, maintain sharp vigilance, seek unity of thinking and take concerted action and we must not treat this lightly and do whatever we think is right." It is obvious that the resolution of the Haifeng County CCP Committee is founded on the basis of having a thorough understanding of the seriousness and necessity of the struggle and it proceeds from the basic interests of the party and the people.

A practical step is better than a dozen guiding principles. After we have made up our mind, we need forceful measures. The Haifeng County CCP Committee understands that the cadres and the masses will evaluate its resolution in waging the struggle by evaluating whether or not it is resolute in implementing the "resolution" of the Central Committee, whether or not it has a clear-cut stand, whether or not the leaders of the county CCP committee personally take part in the struggle and stand at the forefront and whether or not it dares to tackle serious cases such as Wang Zhong's. In this regard, the Haifeng County CCP Committee has not let the masses down. With the powerful support and coordination of the personnel working in the provincial and district offices, the county CCP committee has made an overall plan, stressed the main points and grasped the major cases from beginning to end. They have overcome difficulties one by one, frequently analyzed the situation and the details of the cases, exploited the victories and incessantly waged the struggle in a thorough manner. People involved in handling these cases are cadres who have good political qualities, who are good at carrying out investigations and research and using their heads and who are resolute in waging the struggle to the end. As a result, the criminals have been frightened and the masses are encouraged. There has been a turn for the better in the social order and in the work style of the party. It is obvious to all that work in agriculture, industry and fishery has been resumed and has developed. Thus, people are convinced that in dealing severe blows at serious economic criminal activities, what we need is an unswerving determination and we should proceed steadily in a seek-truth-through-facts manner instead of doing everything on a grand and spectacular scale. People are also convinced that the enthusiasm displayed by the cadres and the masses in the course of the struggle will in turn promote production and economic development. It is obvious that waging the struggle is supplementary to developing production and enlivening the economy. The leaders of the Haifeng County CCP Committee have correctly handled the relationship between grasping struggle well and grasping production well.

The struggle must be waged in depth and the tasks are arduous; our responsibilities are very heavy. This is the situation in Haifeng County and in the whole province. Dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic field under the new historical conditions of the socialist society in our country. In waging this struggle, we must not only carry out meticulous and serious investigations of economic criminals, but must also educate the party members and the cadres to adhere to the purity of communism and to oppose degeneration so that everybody will enhance their vigilance against the corruption by capitalist ideology and heighten their awareness in adhering to the four basic principles. This is something of profound significance. In individual units, there may not be any major cases. However, every district and every unit should, without exception, grasp antidegeneration education of all party-members and cadres. The existing problem is that the localities and units where serious economic criminal cases are more concentrated do not devote major efforts to strengthening the leadership over the struggle. They are afraid of difficulties and are lax in leadership, and thus some offenders run rampant.

These offenders cherish illusions and some of them even go as far as carrying on with their criminal activities. Thus, we can see that it is imperative for us to further strengthen leadership and firmly grasp the struggle and deal resolute blows at criminals in major cases. We must promptly overcome all difficulties so that the struggle will be waged in a penetrating manner. Moreover, we must devote major efforts to strengthening ideological and political work, encouraging healthy trends, combating unhealthy trends, and building socialist spiritual civilization. Regarding this aspect, there are some weak links existing in the Haifeng County CCP Committee, and this must be handdled by strengthening the leadership. We must pay special attention to the fact that this antidegeneration struggle is, for the leaders at all levels and for the broad masses of party members, in essence, a serious and profound consolidation of the party organization. Thus, we must incessantly enhance our consciousness.

The masses observe the leaders' determination and actions. Comrades who are in the leadership position must not let the masses and the cadres down. If we are still probing into the art of leading the struggle and are accumulating experiences, then we must not be hesitant in making up our mind to wage struggles in the local districts and units. As far as the leading comrades at or above county level are concerned, the most valuable thing is that they dare to overcome difficulties and open new avenues. They must be good at leading the struggle and tackling production and other work so as to arouse the fighting will of the masses and to strengthen their confidence. Moreover, it is only through struggle and practice that people are able to probe into the art of leadership and accumulate experience. Just imagine -- how can people who are irresolute and hesitant and who are helpless in face of difficulties comply with the demands of waging the struggle in a penetrating manner?

From the example of Haifeng, we can see the province's situation. We ardently hope that the example of Haifeng will give some inspiration to the comrades of the leadership groups at the county level, so that they have an example to follow. Furthermore, we hope that they will incessantly sum up their experiences amid struggle and wage the antidegeneration struggle in a serious and down-to-earth manner.

FURTHER ON GUANGDONG COUNTY'S ANTISMUGGLING WORK

[Text] The Haifeng County CCP Committee adopted resolute measures to solve problems in Shanwei township, where smuggling ran rampant. Recently, a number of major crimes were exposed in township CCP organs and key departments. The township party committee secretary, (Ye Le), was relieved of his duties while the investigation was being carried on. Other criminals were punished according to law.

Shanwei is an important port in Haifeng County. Over the past 2 years, smuggling activities ran rampant. The township party committee secretary, (Ye Le), took the lead in sharing smuggled goods, accepting and offering bribes and harboring criminals. In handling these criminals, the Haifeng County CCP Committee paid attention to individual cases. Influenced by this policy, many insiders exposed the crimes and reported themselves to the departments concerned in order to be leniently treated. Thus, the important criminals were isolated.

The township party committee secretary, (Ye Le), was guilty of committing serious misdeeds. Since the transmission and implementation of the CCP Central Committee's important instruction on waging a struggle against economic crimes, (Ye Le) stubbornly resisted it by putting up a false front. After the newspapers had exposed the case of Wang Zhong, he acted in collusion to make Wang's confessions tally and tried to harbor Wang's crimes, with the intention of lessening Wang's offenses. Meanwhile, smuggled goods worth some 10,000 yuan were stored in a small godown, this had not been reported up to 1 May. In view of (Ye Le's) stubborn attitude, the county CCP committee thus took disciplinary measures, relieved him of duties and ordered him to make a clean breast of everything. In order to strengthen leadership over CCP committee and people's government offices, the county CCP committee assigned capable cadres to grasp the work there.

QIAO XIAOGUANG AT GUANGXI MEETING ON CHILDREN

OW031133 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 31 May 82

1. The party organizations and people's governments at all levels must vigorously propagate and implement the directive issued by the party Central Committee on strengthening child care work, stress the significant meaning of carrying out child care work well, and make the whole party and society realize that child care work is the foundation in developing the socialist material and spiritual civilizations and in helping China become stronger.

2. It is necessary to tap the potential and develop the financial resources to perform good deeds for the youngsters and children and provide them with better living conditions and opportunities to study.

3. All child care workers and comrades who serve the youngsters and children in the autonomous region must strengthen their efforts in studying, encourage the children to create whatever is new, incessantly summarize their experiences, continuously march forward and constantly improve their work.

4. It is necessary to intensify our efforts in educating the youngsters and children and help them develop morally, intellectually and physically.

TORRENTIAL RAINS CAUSE FLOODING IN HUNAN

HK040236 Changsha Hunan Provincail Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Summary] From 0800 on 25 May to 0800 on 28 May, torrential rains fell in Changde, Yiyang and Xiangtan Prefectures of Hunan Province. Fifteen counties and municipalities in these areas have been hit by floods in varying degrees over the past few days following the strong torrential downpours. Large tracts of farmland have been submerged, dikes, bridges and ditches breached, and some houses have collapsed. The floods have caused great losses in lives and property to the people.

Party committees and people's governments at various levels of our province have paid great attention to relief work following the floods. Responsible comrades of prefectural party committees or administrative offices in the stricken areas have called emergency meetings to take effective measures and make arrangements for combating floods. Since 26 May, 900 sets of motor pumps, over 1,200 sets of internal combustion engines and a large number of watercarts have been put into operation for discharging water from flooded farmland in Changde and Yiyang Prefectures. Within 3 days, water was drained from more than 689,000 mu of waterlogged farmland, which accounts for 81 percent of the flood-hit area. Leaders at various levels have rushed to the forefront of afflicted areas. They have inspected the floods and consoled the masses of people, while guiding the masses to resume production and rebuild their homes.

SICHUAN RIBAO ON MARX' THEORY OF REPRODUCTION

I

At present, all cadres at and above county level throughout the province are conscientiously studying Volume 2 of Marx' "Das Kapital," and thoroughly studying Marx' theory of reproduction. It is hoped that by equipping ourselves with the theory of "Das Kapital" and by summarizing the experiences and lessons of our country's 32 years of economic reconstruction, we will be able to establish a firm theoretical foundation for the formulation and implementation of our party's economic policy, principles and measures. We can say for certain that the serious study and mastery of Marx's theory of reproduction by cadres throughout the province will help them to do a better, more conscientious job of economic readjustment. This study, therefore, is of extremely important practical significance.

Marx' brilliant work "Das Kapital" was the fruit of a lifetime of painstaking labor. It is a massive encyclopedia of Marxist theory and a proletarian "bible." As a treatise on the Marxist study of politics and economics, rich in fundamental economic theories, "Das Kapital" is a revolutionary work that must be read by every proletarian fighter. The fact that our country's socialist reconstruction has been carried out under the leadership of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought is the chief reason for the continual growth and prosperity of this cause. By summarizing the lessons and experiences of more than 30 years of economic work, we have been able to acquire the following knowledge: Every major success achieved in socialist reconstruction has represented the fruit of handling matters in accordance with Marxist economic theory and every setback or defeat suffered by the cause of reconstruction has been the result of deviations from the fundamental economic theories of Marxism. In the course of our country's economic reconstruction the theoretical weakness of leftist errors, such as the blind pursuit of high speed and high level of accumulation, was the failure to give due attention to the reproduction ratio. Mistakes of this kind in our work are intimately connected with our failure to conscientiously study the Marxist theory of reproduction. The high price we have paid in economic reconstruction should bring home to us the importance and urgency of studying "Das Kapital's" theory of reproduction, of raising the theoretical level of the party's cadres and of improving the level of policy.

Some comrades may want to inquire whether "Das Kapital," a book which was written over a 100 years ago, can be of any use in guiding socialist reconstruction today. We must answer that not only is it of use, but it is also extremely important. Certainly, "Das Kapital" is basically an attempt to study and expose the laws of motion governing the capitalist economy. Its theoretical scope, however, is in no way limited to capitalism; it also touches on the laws of postcapitalist economic development. The theoretical structure of "Das Kapital" comprises three separate levels: First, capital; second, material production, especially the rules of the socialization of production; and third, commodity production, especially the laws of commodity exchange. "Das Kapital's" theory of reproduction not only reveals the laws of reproduction appropriate to the capitalist style of production, but also explains the laws of reproduction which operate under the conditions of large-scale socialized production and a commodity-oriented economy. The last two sets of laws are obviously of great significance in the way we handle socialist reproduction today.

II

Volume 2 of "Das Kapital" focuses on the theory of reproduction. Central to this discussion is Marx's analysis of the reproduction ratio of overall social production. In all forms of social production there must exist certain ratios; social manpower must be distributed in accordance with such ratios. Under conditions of large-scale socialized production, social production is an aggregate of the productive activities of many departments. The question of production ratios is even more important.

In his analysis of the necessary ratio between the reproduction and circulation of overall social capital in the capitalist economy, Marx emphasized commodity realization as a significant condition for the maintenance of this ratio. The theory of reproduction demands that we pay attention to the problems of realization and the conditions of realization. As Lenin said, "the problem of realization consists of analyzing the replacment of all parts of the social product in terms of value and in terms of material form." (Collected Works of Lenin," vol 2, p 128) How do the capitalist manage to sell the commodities they produce? After the materials of production have been consumed, how do the capitalists go about replacing and renewing materials? Such problems involve the question of the ratio of social production. First of all, a definite ratio exists between the production of category I means of production and the production of catagory I consumer goods. Second, such a ratio must exist among all such catagories. Volume 2 of "Das Kapital" gives a highly detailed account of the requirements for the ratio between the simple and expanded reproductoin of the total capital of society and the two categories. It also discusses the conditions necessary for the realization and balance of capitalist reproduction, using charts and tables for greater detail and accuracy. These theoretical discussions have made the economic theory of reproduction into a science and represent brilliant achievements in humanistic studies. Marx's theory of reproduction also discloses the rules governing the ratio of reproduction under conditions of socialized large-scale production as well as the rules of reproduction in a commodity economy. A good grasp of these laws will serve us well in our efforts to carry out socialist reconstruction and to reach an overall balance in the national economy.

In recent years we have not paid enough attention to "Das Kapital's theory of reproduction. We have been unable to understand,in the light of practical economic reconstruction, the Marxist theory that the development of the two catagories should be based on the proper ratio. As a result we have had a one-sided understanding of the need to give priority to the growth of the means of production. Some comrades believe that priority must must always be given to the development of the means of production, insisting that the faster the development in this area, the better. This understanding has led them to overemphasize the development of heavy industry. This, in turn, has meant that the development of heavy industry has been out of step with the development of light industry and agriculture. Heavy industry development has tended to be too heavy, while light industry development has been too light, and agricultural development has been insufficient. Because the development of the two major categories of social production has not been well coordinated, growth of the means of production has lagged behind the growth in purchasing power, leading to a scarcity of certain consumer goods on the market and causing the people some difficulties. In industry itself, a one-sided emphasis on heavy and machine-processing industry has meant that we have neglected the rapid development of basic industries such as energy resources and transport, with the result that insufficient energy supplies is an important limiting factor on the future development of our country's economy. In conclusion, in the course of organizing the socialist expansion of reproduction we have failed to regularly and consciously preserve the balanced development of the national economy. As a result, the structure of enterprises has often been irrational and serious imbalances have occurred in the ratio on more than one occasion. While total output value in our country increased by 13.3 percent per annum between 1950 and 1979, exceeding the rate of growth in many other countries in the world, economic returns remained low. The people themselves received little material benefit, and economic development met with various new difficulties. The basic reason the this was that we were unable to maintain a rational ratio in reproduction. From this we can see that the serious study of Marx's theory of reproduction and an understanding of the rules governing social reproduction are essential to the balanced development of the national economy.

III

Volume 2 of "Das Kapital" investigates the laws governing the circulation of capital. The process of capitalist reproduction is the unity of production and circulation. Production determines circulation and circulation, in turn, influences production.

Without circulation, there could never be a second cycle of production, namely, reproduction. As Marx said, "circulation and production are both necessary in commodity production."

"Das Kapital's" discussion of the theory of circulation is extremely rich in content and presents, for example, theories concerning circulation and the market, commerce, currency, circulation and capital circulation. Volume 2 gives a particularly systematic, comprehensive and profound account of the process, mechanisms and rules of capital circulation and turnover. These various theories not only explain the laws governing the circulation of capital itself, but also the general laws of circulation in a commodity system. They should play a guiding role in socialist economic construction.

Over the past few years, there has been a tendency in our socialist economic theory to emphasize production and neglect circulation. This has manifested itself in a one-sided view of the relationship between production and circulation and the tendency to see the determining role of production as being absolute and the role of circulation as unimportant. Believing that production alone really matters, some comrades have ignored product marketing and are unable to see that the process of social reproduction represents a unity of production and circulation. Some people see commerce as running counter to the needs of the planned economy and insist that it whould have no place in a socialist system. As far as they are concerned, any labor expended in either commerce of the circulation of goods and materials is nonproductive labor and thus creates no wealth. This neglect of the question of circulation is seen particularly clearly in the failure of people involved in socialist political and economic studies to conduct research into theories of the circulation and turnover of funds. People have also long neglected the relationship between economic results and an enterprise's use of capital. This neglect of circulation theory has had a highly unfavorable impact on our practical work. We have been unable, as a result, to improve and perfect our country's circulation system, to develop in a big way socialist circulation of commodities or to bring the positive effects of socialist circulation on production into full play. Because of the restrictions imposed by the level of material circulation, and, in particular, by deficiencies in the circulation system, commodity exchange in our country has long remained undeveloped and commodity circulation has been seriously impeded. Because of the small number of circulation channels, many of which are obstructed, and the slowness and expense of this circulation, as well as large stocks and extensive waste, it has been impossible to meet the consumers' needs and production has been seriously impeded. The failure to pay attention to the socialist circulation of funds has seriously hindered the turnover of funds. Many enterprises have paid little attention to the rational organization of the circulation and turnover of funds or to the question of how to make the most effective use of funds. They have been extravagant and wasteful in their approach to basic construction, refusing to take the actual returns on their investment into account. As for the application and management of enterprise funds, the failure to lay emphasis on the economization of funds and the striving for greater profits has brought about an increase in costs, a decrease in results and a fall in the rate of return. Unable to circulate funds, enterprises that incur losses over a long period of time must rely on funds from the state's financial departments or bank loans in order to survive. This not only undermines the strength of an enterprise's management and administrative system, but also wastes social wealth. Since the founding of the PRC, we have scored major achievements in building our country's socialist industry. Total value of industrial fixed capital now stands at 500 billion yuan. The economic returns of this fixed industrial capital, however, have not been particularly high. This is directly related to our long-term failure to pay attention to the circulation and turnover of funds. We can see from this that the question of circulation of funds affects the normal operation of socialist reproduction and also the level of economic returns accruing from the use of funds. For this reason, the study of "Das Kapital's" general theory of circulation and theories of capital circulation and turnover is of great practical significance to our current efforts to guarantee a higher level of economic returns from the funds for socialist construction through further organization of the circulation of socialist commodities and capital.

BEIJING RIBAO ON PROMOTING CHINA-MADE PRODUCTS

[Article by Gao Fan [75591581]: "Feelings on Premier Zhou's Wearing of a Shanghai Wristwatch"]

[Text] Many people know about Premier Zhou wearing a China-made wristwatch. The Shanghai wristwatch worn by Premier Zhou was by no means a modern-style one; neither was it as costly as imported wristwatches. However, this Shanghai wristwatch stayed with our respected Premier Zhou and recorded all those heroic and memorable hours.

Very often, people cite Premier Zhou's wearing of a China-made wristwatch to illustrate his work style of hard work and plain living. This is certainly correct because Premier Zhou did indeed set a good example in promoting the proletarian revolutionary tradition of arduous struggle. This is what we should learn forever. However, analyzing the inspiring deeds of Premier Zhou, the significance of his wearing a China-made wristwatch cannot be summarized as merely an illustration of his work style of "hard work and plain living."

As we all know, in order to rapidly catch up with the advanced international scientific and technological level and strengthen our ability to reconstruct our country through self-reliance, Premier Zhou attached great importance to importing advanced science and technology and key facilities from foreign countries. However, Premier Zhou always advocated strict restrictions on importing products which could be manufactured at home. During the initial stage after the founding of the PRC, Premier Zhou had personally inspected the list of facilities and commodities that must be imported; he even annotated and commented on every item of some important orders. He repeatedly instructed that "we must strictly check the list and try our best to minimize the orders. Products that can be manufactured at home must be manufactured at home." Once, a certain department planned to order 10,000 bicycles from foreign countries but their proposal was turned down by Premier Zhou. His comment on the report was: "Since Tianjin and Shanghai are manufacturing bicycles, why should we import them?" Thus, we can see that Premier Zhou guided our foreign trade by proceeding from protecting and promoting our national industry. Premier Zhou devoted much painstaking effort to promoting the national industry which had just started to develop after the founding of new China. In every key production base of our country, there were footmarks left by Premier Zhou. In all key production, scientific and technological results, there are embodiments of the sweat and wisdom of Premier Zhou. People still remember when Premier Zhou inspected the Changchun No 1 automobile factory, he stepped on the pedal of a "Jiefang" automobile, with his arms akimbo, and he said with great pride, "I am sitting in our own 'Jiefang' automobile." It is exactly because of this strong sense of national pride that Premier Zhou heartily rejoiced at using China-made products. This is probably the reason why he wore a China-made wristwatch.

We feel that the spirit of Premier Zhou's wearing a China-made wristwatch should be promoted. Over the past few years, some localities and departments have imported a large quantity of products which can be manufactured at home, thus wasting a large amount of foreign exchange and deterring the development of our country's industry. As revealed by the department concerned, in the past few years, we have imported a large quantity of wristwatches of various brands through many channels. This is something seldom seen in the past. In 1980 and 1981, the average annual import of wristwatches was about 5 million (not including a large quantity of smuggled goods), 10 times that of 1965. Importing wristwatches blindly has led to slow sales of China-made wristwatches and has deterred the development of our wristwatch industry, and this has brought about heavy losses to our country. There are many reasons for the present situation. As a matter of fact, the fact that we nave not promptly enacted decrees to restrict imports of consumer goods and the fact that we have neglected to strengthen administrative work are some of the reasons. However, some departments ignore the interests of our country and nation, they worship things foreign and look down upon Chinese products. They think that whatever is foreign is good, and whatever is locally made is bad. We must say this is a very important reason. In fact, not all foreign goods are good. As some comrades pointed out, some imported wristwatches only have a fine exterior but the quality is not very good and it is difficult to repair them. Thus, the consumers have to suffer losses. As a matter of fact, some imported digital electronic wristwatches which were very popular in Beijing some years ago have become unpleasant "souvenirs" of the consumers. Therefore, it is of the utmost importance that we oppose the idea of worshipping whatever is foreign and that we foster our national pride and a social prevailing mood of using China-made products. If all our departments concerned can consider how to protect and promote the development of local industries when they stipulate policies and handle affairs, then we will be able to contribute more toward the four modernizations with bigger and more solid paces.

SHANXI RIBAO ON IMPROVING ECONOMIC RETURNS

[Editorial: "Firmly Establish the Guiding Ideology of Improving Economic Returns"]

[Text] Whether or not there are economic returns or whether the economic returns are high or low is a major question of the prosperity or decline of a plant, an enterprise or mine. Due to historical reasons, quite a large number of leading comrades of enterprises have formed the erroneous guiding ideology of seeking high output value and ignoring economic results. With the implementation of the party's policy for economic readjustment, more and more people have come to understand the importance of economic returns to an enterprise. However, viewed from the overall situation in economic work, how to improve economic returns remains a crucial problem at present and for a long time to come that we should exert ourselves to solve. In "Several Questions on Current Economic Work," Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: "The major problem at present is not neglecting output value but neglecting returns. Some localities and units are very enthusiastic in increasing output value but have not attached enough importance to improving economic returns or simply stress such importance without taking effective measures." "This year, we must make a big change in improving economic returns and open up new prospects."

Compared with advanced localities in our country, the economic returns of industrial production in our province are not high. This is an objective fact. With the exception of coal, which is on the top of the list, the economic returns of most other industrial products in our province are in 20th place or so in our country. Besides targets such as total output value, products and output, the economic and technical targets in many enterprises have not yet reached their previous highest levels. At the end of 1981, losses incurred in local state-owned enterprises of the whole province amounted to over 130 million yuan. Although the number of enterprises which incurred losses from January to April this year had dropped, it still accounted for a large percentage of the total number of local state-owned enterprises and the losses incurred in these 4 months amounted to 38 million yuan. In 1981, it was planned to reduce the cost of production by 2 percent, but it turned out that the cost of production increased by 3.4 percent. This alone reduced the state's revenue by 140 million yuan. From January to April, the total output value of local state-owned industrial enterprises of the whole province was 15.54 percent higher than the same period last year. Profits handed over to the state increase by 24.27 percent but the cost of production was 0.75 percent higher than was planned. Facts have shown that there has been a relatively rapid development in the industrial production of our province compared with last year. This is very good. However, the question of improving economic returns is not yet taken seriously by leading comrades of enterprises.

To promising people, low economic returns mean that there is still potential to tap, but to those who make no attempt to achieve anything, low economic returns mean only difficulties. To pay attention to economic returns is to produce more products which meet the needs of the society with as little labor and material consumption as possible. The final solution to this problem depends on reforms in system, structure and price. People who make no attempt to achieve anything trust to chance and windfalls and sit back and wait for reforms. The workers of the No 1 rolling plant of the Taiyuan steel works have adopted a different attitude. They have proceeded from their plant's reality and tapped the enterprise's potential in accordance with the needs of the society. They are improving economic returns by making management and operations more scientific, enhancing the workers' quality and by strengthening ideological and political work in increasing the workers' sense of being masters of their own affairs. The purpose of socialist production is to meet the evergrowing needs of the society. However, the needs of the society are everchanging. This is also true of domestic and international markets. If the leader of an enterprise is ignorant of the constantly changing needs of the society and is ignorant of the economic, management and technical levels of his trade or profession, he is only "a blind man on a blind horse." It will be impossible for the products to be marketed easily and much less will it be possible to improve economic returns. Within only 1 year, the products of the No 1 rolling plant of the Taiyuan steel works have been successively sold to places beyond Liangziguan, Shanhaiguan, and Wushengguan and finally to foreign countries. One of their valuable experiences is that they attach much importance to finding out the needs of the society and arrange their production according to the needs of the society. They pay attention to improving quality and value their reputation. Facts have proved that their leaders have come to understand the basic socialist economic laws.

Improving economic returns will effect a great change in industrial production. Comrades working in industrial departments should seriously study relevant instructions of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council, sum up the practice of one-sidedly seeking output value and ignoring economic returns and learn a lesson from it, and establish the basic guiding ideology of improving economic returns. The kind of speed we need is down-to-earth speed which is not exaggerated. In order to realize this big change, leading industrial department and leading comrades, of factories, mines and enterprises should exert themselves, improve their work style, go deep into reality and carry out investigations. They should really be able to discover typical cases, have a clear view of the overall situation, and adopt effective measures in solving problems. Besides, while paying special attention to speed, they should stress variety, quality and marketability of products; while trying to increase production and income, they should reduce consumption, lower cost of production and increase accumulation; while promoting production, they should improve management and operation, and technology; while increasing production capacity, they should strive to carry out technical reforms and to renew equipment. If each trade, profession and enterprise whole-heartedly relies on the workers' socialist enthusiasm, brings into full play the initiative and enthusiasm of the scientific and technical personnel and the management personnel, and works in a down-to-earth manner, the industrial production of our province will certainly open up new prospects.

TIANJIN RIBAO ON IDEOLOGICAL POLITICAL WORK

HK020929 Tianjin RIBAO in Chinese 18 May 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Do Not Lose the Ability To 'Keep House'"]

[Text] At present, one of the most immiment tasks for the comrades in various units of all trades in our municipality is to strengthen ideological and political work.

Our party has built itself up by relying on ideological and political work. Let us set aside the party's founding period, and just start out talking from the Jinggangshan period. During those 20 years or more, the material conditions and other conditions were extremely bad. Then what did we rely on in spreading the revolution to the whole country and achieving a nationwide victory in a short period? Apart from the correct line which was laid down under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, we mainly relied on our excellent ideological and political work. Now, our ideological and political work is weaker than before in quite a few places and with regard to quite a few links. What are the real reasons for this? One of the reasons is that we have failed to properly, systematically and profoundly sum up experiences of ideological and political work, and systematically and penetratingly expound on some basic questions by recalling our party's history in the past few decades.

Many departments in our municipality have been making progress recently. Especially since last year, the ideological and political work has been greatly imporved on various fronts and prominent results have been achieved under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee. And this year, based on last year's achievement, we must further strengthen ideological and political work.

The First Question, We Must Conscientiously Study the Nature of Ideological and Political Work

In studying a question, we must proceed from the most ordinary and most primitive aspect. This is the approach which Marx taught us. Therefore, when studying how to strengthen ideological and political work, we must first ask the question what is ideological and political work?

"Ideological and political work means vigorously organizing people to study the documents of the CCP Central Committee." Is this a correct answer? Yes, it is certainly true. There is no doubt that we must conscientiously study the documents of the CCP Central Committee, thoroughly understand their essence and carry it out in the actual work in a down-to-earth manner. At present, some comrades fail to study the documents of the CCP Central Committee thoroughly. This situation must be improved. However, the study of the documents of the CCP Central Committee alone does not touch upon the true nature of ideological and political work.

"Ideological and political work means commending good people and good deeds, and advanced people and advanced achievements, setting some people up as pacemakers and publicizing advanced experience." This is also true. Undoubtedly, we should commend advanced people and popularize their advanced experience without hesitation. It seems that we have not made enough efforts in this field. But, such an interpretation which stresses this job alone does not touch upon the true nature of ideological and political work either.

"Ideological and political work means promoting criticism and self-criticism." This is certainly right too. Criticism and self-criticism is a method of ideological and political work, which we should carry out conscientiously and regard as our driving force. Many units were not accustomed to the approach of criticism and self-criticism in the past. Anyway, this interpretation for ideological and political work does not touch upon its true nature either. The "gang of four" called it "opening a way with mass criticism." This has distorted the nature of ideological and political work. Mass criticism will scare away everybody all of a sudden.

"Ideological and political work means showing concern for the livelihood of the masses and working for the well-being of the people." This is true too. We should be concerned for the masses' livelihood and improve their living conditions in light of the actual circumstances and according to the possibility. However, this interpretation still does not touch upon the very true nature of ideological and political work.

It is necessary for us to make the concept of ideological and political work clear. Every party member, particularly leading comrades who are undertaking important tasks, must conscientiously study the nature of ideological and political work and the laws governing ideological and political work. Only in this way can we do a good job in ideological and political work.

The Second Question, the Objective and Tasks of Ideological and Political Work

The most fundamental objective of ideological and political work is to push people to enhance their ability to understand the objective world. What we mean by the ability to understand the objective world certainly includes the ability to analyze, observe and distinguish things. Understanding the objective world is naturally an arduous and endless course. As the objective world is extremely complicated, nobody can completely understand it. Therefore there is no know-it-all or all-round man. As the objective things are constantly developing, nobody can claim to be absolutely correct. Absolutes can only exist alongside relative things and all truth is relatively valid in the long course of human understanding. Of course, just giving a simple definition is by no means enough and this is absolutely not the end of the matter. If we ask a further question -- What is the purpose of people constantly enhancing their ability to understand the objective world? the answer is to arouse people's enthusiasm, willpower and morale in transforming the objective world, or more precisely, to arouse their revolutionary enthusiasm, indomitable willpower and high morale. If our ideological and political work only remains at the level of understanding, and does not aim at practice and transforming the objective world, it will be nothing but an empty word. Starting from the basis of an enhanced understanding, we must further arouse the people's revolutionary spirit, enthusiasm and tenacity. This is very important. This is not sufficient. In actual revolutionary practice, people will still have this kind or that kind of erroneous thinking and actions. This includes actions that go to extremes, weak and retrogressive actions, and so on. It is still necessary to educate and correct the people's erroneous understanding, erroneous tendencies and erroneous methods in the course of understanding the objective world and transforming the objective world. While transforming the objective world, we must also transform our subjective world. We must always recall Comrade Zhou Enlai's words of "learning and transforming until the day we die." Incessantly deepening and advancing is the revolutionary objective and task of our party which takes the transformation of the world as its obligation. We must summarize this question in simple words so that all comrades engaged in ideological and political work will have a pretty clear idea of it. We must not allow our comrades to replace our revolutionary objective and task with specific methods and forms of modern ideological and political work or confuse them. The methods and forms of ideological and political work are always in a state of flux. If we are satisfied with the present methods and forms of ideological and political work and refrain from studying the new situation and the new problems, our comrades engaged in ideological and political work will not be able to improve their own standards.

The Third Question, Characteristics That Distinguish Ideological and Political Work From Other Kinds of Work

Each kind of work and each department has its own characteristics. To understand things, we must start by understanding their characteristics. Comrade Mao Zedong has always taught us to proceed from analyzing the special contradictions of things in studying problems. He who clearly understands the characteristics of his own department does a good job of his work. Ideological and political work is different from both economic work and the work of the organizational department. People's minds are always changing and developing to a vast extent, therefore, it is impossible to draw up a 5-year plan for ideological work similar to that of the economic department. We cannot fix explicit quotas or tasks for ideological work like other departments do. Certainly, general progress of work in a certain period can be predicted; however, it is difficult to fix concrete quotas with figures.

The objective of ideological and political work is to improve people's understanding of the objective world and their ability to transform the objective world. Therefore, the basic work of ideological and political work is to launch education and persuasion among people and not forcible suppression of people. The methods of coercion, suppression, exaggeration and deception deviate from our party's ideological and political work methods. Since ideological and political work is to educate and persuade people and improve the people's ability to understand and distinguish things, we must first persuade the cadres. As far as this question is concerned, there has been one setback since the founding of the country. As a matter of fact, our party's ideological and political work was at its climax during the Red Army period and the Yanan period. The ideological and political work put forth by Chairman Mao was to persuade the cadres; and the resolution of the "Gutian conference" held in 1929 was first delivered to the cadres. A great deal of ideological and political work was launched among the cadres. When the cadres became more open-minded and with the level of ideological work improved, it was easier to launch ideological work for the common workers, peasants and fighters. Later, since our party has been in power, ideological and political work has become a way for the leaders to deal with ordinary workers, peasants and fighters. This method does not work. It seems that only the cadres know ideological and political work and the general public has no idea of it at all. It also seems that improving understanding involves only the general public and that the leaders need no transformation at all. In fact, the opposite of this is correct; ideological and political work is primarily for our cadres and party members. So long as we improve the understanding of the cadres and the party members and correct erroneous things, we can easily launch political and ideological work among the masses. Therefore, in promoting ideological and political work in the future, we must attach primary importance to analyzing the problems among the cadres. Only by understanding and mastering the characteristics of ideological and political work, can we devise correct methods of work. If we had not understood the characteristics of China, we would not have won victory in the Chinese revolution. If our party does not understand the current characteristics of China, it will not be able to obtain a victory in the socialist revolution. If we do not understand the characteristics of ideological and political work, we will not be able to push forward the vigorous development of ideological and political work or obtain new achievements.

The Fourth Question, Educators Must Be the First To Be Educated

There are two forms of education. One is education by reasoning and the other is figurative education, which mainly means literature and art. The educators must be the first to be educated and must master the two forms of education. At present, our education by reasoning lacks persuasiveness. What we mean by the lack of persuasiveness is that there is a weak theoretical sense, weak agitation and a weak sense of reasoning. There are only two forms of education by reasoning; one is oral education -- making reports, conveying documents, holding talks with individuals, debates, criticism and self-criticism, and so on; the other form is written -- theoretical work, pamphlets, theses on newspapers and magazines, resolutions and instructions of the party and the government, news reports, and so on. The common shortcoming of all this is the lack of persuasiveness. Both our articles and speeches have two common flaws. One is what we call doing things in a deductive method and not in an analytical method. Instead of giving explanations and comments, we only convey the orders of the higher levels. In many of Lenin's and Chairman Mao's works, facts are fully displayed with detailed analysis. Sometimes, when we write, we do not adopt an analytical method, narrate with interspersed comments, or display the facts; we merely write what the higher levels tell us to write. The second common flaw is that we have too many overlapping concepts. Why are so many people reluctant to read a report, an address given at a ceremony, a thesis or an editorial? We should not just try to find the reason from the readers but should find the reason from ourselves. The reason is that we have not deeply analyzed the problems. Our figurative education is not influential enough.

Before the "Great Cultural Revolution," the CCP Central Committee put forth that literary and art creation must be conceptualized and stereotyped. This represents the major characteristic of literature and art. People are reluctant to read figurative education which lacks influential power. In accordance with Chairman Mao's words, this does not strike a sympathetic chord in the hearts of the people and fails to exert an imperceptible influence on people's thinking. The reason that political theses lack persuasiveness and figurative education lacks influential power is that our educators have not mastered the laws governing the two educational methods. Therefore, all walks of life should promote professional training in their basic methods. All kinds of work including party affairs work, ideological work and economic work must have its own professional skills. It seems that some comrades do not understand why we advocate specialization. Many of them think that specialized work involves only economic work and has nothing to do with ideological and political work. This is in fact an erroneous view. There must be basic training and basic methods for those who are engaged in party affairs work, mass work, trade union work and CYL work. The methods progress from the perceptual to the rational level. Thus, the educators must be the first to be educated and there are mainly three demands:

First, our ability to understand the world outlook must be stronger than others and we must know more things and know more deeply than others. We must be confident in socialism before we persuade others to put their confidence in socialism. If we are not confident enough, how can we strengthen others' confidence?

Second, it is necessary to master the special law governing propaganda work, be familiar with this law and the characteristics of our own work.

Third, we must set good examples ourselves. This is a matter of teaching by word of mouth and teaching by setting an example. We must do what we say. We must not just say that we should serve the people wholeheartedly while we are only working with half our enthusiasm.

Political work is the lifeline of all economic work. Attaching great importance to ideological and political work is our party's old tradition. In the past, we have relied on it to educate and unite the people and defeat the enemy. Now, in the course of completing the historical mission of realizing the four modernizations drive, we must never lose this ability to "keep house."

CHEN WEIDA MEETS TIANJIN CHILDREN IN BEIJING

OW032044 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1635 GMT 30 May 82

[Text] Beijing, 30 May (XINHUA) -- Tianjin Municipal Party Committee First Secretary Chen Weida, who is now in Beijing, cordially met this afternoon with 15 representatives of youth and children from Tianjin Municipality who have come here on a tour and had a photograph taken with them.

The 150 representatives of youth and children arrived at Zhongnanhai as guests at the invitation of the party Central Committee. They had just taken part in a forum with leading comrades of the party and the state in the Great Hall of the People. After learning that they would tour Zhongnanhai, Comrade Chen Weida happily hurried to the east gate of Zhongnanhai to wait for them. When they met Comrade Chen Weida, the children put a red scarf around his neck. Comrade Chen Weida extended festive greetings to the children.

HEILONGJIANG URGES BETTER INVESTIGATION WORK

SK301030 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 29 May 82

[Station commentary: "Adhere to the Principle of the Party Spirit and Do a Good Job in Investigation and Research"]

[Text] At the beginning of last year, the provincial CCP committee urged party organizations at all levels in the province to stir up an upsurge in conducting investigations and research under the new historical conditions. Over the past year or so, conducting investigations and research has gradually become a practice, thanks to the continuous efforts of party organizations at all levels. Due to conscientious investigations and research and the implementation of the principle of proceeding from reality in doing everything, many localities have improved party leadership and have made new progress in all work.

However, we should note problems on the road of advance. Some localities pay attention to investigation and research in words but not in deeds. Even worse, some use all kinds of excuses to avoid doing so. Some hold that they are executive units and, therefore, need not conduct investigation and research. They hold that all they need to do is to follow instructions and documents, because investigation and research are supposed to be done by decision-making organs at upper levels. Some comrades do not proceed from reality and listen to the masses' opinions and refuse to accept different views while conducting investigation and research. They go to lower units with preconceived ideas to collect materials to prove that their views are correct, or to meet certain political needs [words indistinct], or to go along with some leaders' taste. As a result, they will not only fail to reflect the actual situation to higher levels but also turn things upside down. Even worse, they cause mistakes in the work of leadership.

These phenomena indicate that there really are some leading comrades who still lack an adequate understanding of the significance of the need to stir up an upsurge in conducting investigation and research under the new historical conditions despite the fact that the provincial CCP committee has urged them to do so. Conducting investigation and research has a direct bearing on whether or not we can adhere to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts and the principle of proletarian party's spirit and whether or not party organizations at all levels can exercise correct leadership and promote the building of the two socialist civilizations.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, our country has been experiencing an unprecedented, great turning point in history. A large number of new situations and new tasks confront leaders at all levels. Under the new historical conditions, leaders at all levels should voluntarily adhere to the principle of the proletarian party's spirit, adopt dialectical and historical materialist points of views and methods and spend time and energy to do a good job in investigation and research. They should adhere to the principle of proceeding from reality and seeking truth from facts, make concrete analysis of the past and current situations of objective things, find out the objective laws governing our work and struggle and work out policies accordingly. Only be doing so can we exercise correct party leadership and make more contributions to the four modernizations.

UILIN URGES PROTECTION OF ADVANCED WORKERS

SK020441 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 1 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "Love Model Laborers and Support Advanced Workers"]

[Text] In launching the activity of emulating, learning from, catching up with and helping each other, there is a tendency which merits our immediate attention. That is, in some localities and units, advanced workers are usually mocked and attacked by others.

Some people not only refuse to become advanced workers themselves, but also oppose others. They concentrate on finding fault and imposing burning satire and freezing irony on advanced workers. Some pose difficult questions and put innumerable obstacles to the advance. A few fabricate and spead rumors and slander to damage the reputation of advanced workers and strike and malign them. This has seriously hindered the development of the activity of learning from, and catching up with, the advanced.

Advanced and model personages on all fronts are valuable to the state, as well as fine examples for the people. Party and government leading organs at all levels and the mass groups should support the advanced with a high sense of political responsibility and with a clear-cut stand to protect their enthusiasm. Advanced ideology and model behavior of advanced workers should be vigorously propagated in order to guide the masses in getting an accurate understanding of advanced personages and encourage them to learn from the advanced. Criticism and education should be imposed on those who not only themselves refuse to make progress but also hinder others in making progress. Such persons should be helped in correcting their erroneous thinking, treat the advanced with a correct attitude and learn from the advanced. Those who are proved guilty of retaliation, framing and attacking the advanced should be seriously dealt with. Those in serious cases should assume legal responsibility.

JILIN CIRCULAR ON DROUGHT COMBATING, HOEING

[Text] According to our sources, the provincial people's government issued an emergency circular today on combating drought and attending the summer hoeing. The circular notes: Some localities have had no heavy rain since the beginning of spring and were stricken by a serious drought seldom seen for many years. According to a weather forecast, there will be high temperatures and little rain in the near future and the drought will become worse. All leaders should pay great attention to it.

The emergency circular demands: Various localities should take immediate action and concentrate all efforts to combat drought, replant seedlings and vary their farm crops so as to ensure a full stand of crop shoots. The fields where crop seedlings failed to emerge should be planted with other variety of crops. The fields with poor and uneven stand of seedlings should be replanted and moisture should be created to help ripening. The fields were crop seedlings have already emerged but been hit by drought should be irrigated by using receptacles to carry water to the field. In areas hit by serious drought, all forces should be mobilized, and all farm tools should be used to combat drought to achieve success in creating moisture, replanting and changing the variety of farm crops.

Various places should prepare some late-field seedlings for meeting emergencies. Communes and brigades whose paddy fields need water should find water resources, strive to irrigate more fields and transplant paddy seedlings on a priority basis. If there is no water, paddy fields should be planted with early-maturing soybeans so as not to waste a single mu.

We should attend to anti-drought work, weeding and soil banking. Harrowing the fields to combat drought is a historical experience with a scientific basis. Therefore, we should weed and bank, strengthen field management and strive to ensure the growth of crop shoots. We should also topdress the fields in a timely manner and apply fertilizer deep into the earth to raise the efficiency of fertilizer.

Special attention should be paid to topdressing the fields replanted with seedlings and with a variety of other crops in order to accelerate the growth of late-planted seedlings and enable them to ripen at the proper time. In addition, we should foster the thinking of striving for a good harvest by combating drought and make preparations for various natural calamities.

The circular stresses: Drought combating, summer hoeing, inspection and replanting of seedlings and ensurance of a full stand of crop shoots should be regarded as the most important central tasks for rural areas. We must go all out to fulfill these tasks. All meetings having nothing to do with agricultural production should be avoided. Cadres should be organized so as to go to the forefront of production to educate and help peasants overcome the thinking of relying on heaven and being dispirited, afraid of difficulty and pessimistic. We should give full play to the superiority of collective economy and enthusiasm in commune members' work to combat drought and ensure a full stand of crop shoots.

Communes and brigades which institute the system of fixing farm output quotas on a household or group basis and the system of letting peasant households assume full responsibility for most of the farm work should make concerted efforts and help each other to conquer drought. All trades and professions should be organized to support antidrought work to achieve success in summer hoeing.

CPPCC GROUP'S INSPECTION IN LIAONING ENDS

SK030941 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Tex] According to our reporter (Wang Qingsheng), the inspection group of the CPPCC National Committee including leader Wang Shoudao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, and deputy leaders Li Jinde, Cheng Siyuan and Wang Guangmei has successfully concluded its inspection work in Liaoning.

During its inspection activities, the group toured plants and rural areas in Dandong, Shenyang and Anshan municipalities and was briefed by provincial and municipal leading personnel on their work situation. The group also received personnel from the provincial and municipal CPPCC committees and personages from social circles. Wherever it went, the group was warmly welcomed by the broad masses of cadres and the people.

On the afternoon of 1 June, the group's members held a forum with leading comrades of the provincial and Shenyang municipal organs, at which the group's leader Wang Shoudao delivered an important speech. He stated: Liaoning Province left a deep impression on us after our inspection tour. We found that the province had exerted all-out efforts in implementing the central authorities' principle of readjustment, restructure, reorganization and upgrading. Ways adopted by the province in readjusting work, such as first entrusting advanced units with responsibility for the readjustment work, summing up experiences gained by them and popularizing their experiences in an all-round way, deserve recommendation. Meanwhile, the province has scored remarkable achievements in reorganizing enterprises by conducting technical innovation and renovations, combating waste, upgrading labor productivity and paying attention to economic returns.

In his speech, Wang Shoudao also offered suggestions for the province's future work. He noted: To do away with the ideological misconception of a number of cadres that Liaoning Province will suffer losses in the readjusting work due to its predominant heavy industry, it is necessary to treasure the province's superiority and enhance the confidence in accelerating the readjusting work. In conducting the readjusting work, attention should be paid to renewal of equipment and technology, service orientation and product quality. Further efforts should be made to find good markets. It is also necessary to pay attention to energy conservation and do away as much as possible with oil, coal and electricity guzzlers. Efforts should be made to impose strict restrictions on overoccupation of land for building new houses in urban areas. Primary attention should be paid to improving old urban houses and developing urban housing projects vertically. It is also necessary to engage in rural housing construction in a planned manner, integrating this with the drive for building new socialist villages. Attention should be paid to the system of replacing old workers, blocking the trend of downgrading quality among workers and adopting measures to improve workers' quality. Efforts should be made to deal with the cooking fuel problem of rural areas so as to maintain sound growth of planted forests.

Li Huang, permanent secretary of the Liaoning Provincial CCP Committee also made a speech at the forum. He stated: We greatly appreciate the valuable encouragement and suggestions given by the inspection group of the CPPCC National Committee in regard to our future work. We are greatly confident of making progress in various work and scoring new achievements.

LIAONING MEETING HELD ON FLOOD PREVENTION

According to a forecast by the meteorological department, the southern part of our province will experience more rainfall in the June-August period as compared with the corresponding 1981 period. A fairly serious flood will probably occur. Therefore, the provincial people's government urged the cadres and the masses in all towns and cites not to slacken their vigilance and leave things to chance, but to make good preparations against the possible big floods, strengthen leadership and solve all existing problems prior to the coming floods. Material, power, post and telecommunications, hydrological, meteorological and communications departments must coordinate to do a good job to ensure smooth progress in production and the safety of lives and property during the flood period.

A short commentary entitled "Remove Obstacles and Take Preventive Measures To Prevent Possible Floods," says that some units in our province have paid no attention to the repeated stipulations issued by the State Council and the people's governments at all levels, have wantonly built factories, warehouses and residential housing along river banks and recklessly thrown garbage, sand and stones into rivers and piled up materials along river banks, which has seriously affected the flow of river water.

As has been reported, the flood-draining capacity of the Hun River, which begins in Qingyuan County, running through Fushun and Shenyang, has declined because of reckless construction, throwing of garbage, digging and piling of materials along the river bank. There are over 13,000 residents, staff and workers living along the river bank. Because of the increase of obstacles along the river, the Hun River presents a great latent danger.

The provincial people's government's recent on-the-spot meeting on stepping up urban river management for flood prevention, urging all localities to remove dangerous river obstacles, is an important policy decision adopted to deal with the above mentioned dangerous situation. This policy decision is very necessary and has been issued at a good time.

WANG ZHEN ATTENDS XINJIANG FISHERIES CONFERENCE

HK040207 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Summary] A Xinjiang regional conference on fisheries concluded on 30 May. The meeting summed up experiences of the past 30 years, unified understanding, got a clear picture of the orientation and boosted confidence in developing fisheries.

"During the conference Comrade Wang Zhen, member of the CCP Central Committee Politburo, member of the Central Military Commission Standing Committee, and director of the Central Committee Party School, met the representatives and made a speech. Regional CCP Committee First Secretary Wang Enmao and other responsible comrades of the regional party and government, the Urumqi PLA units, and the production and construction corps were present at the meeting."

Comrade Ismail Amat spoke at the meeting. He pointed out: "Xinjiang has broad stretches of water and there is great potential for developing fisheries. We must fully understand this, and grasp the work as a strategic measure." He said: In the past the region was slow to develop fisheries, due to our failure to understand the role of fisheries in the national economy, and the ineffective measures we took. It is now necessary to seriously study the existing problems and solve them as quickly as possible.

He said: The leaders at all levels must truly attach importance to aquatic production and put this work on their agenda. It is necessary to seriously implement the central authorities' principles on developing freshwater fish production and make full use of all stretches of water. Production responsibility systems should be set up and put on a sound basis. Training of cadres and technicians should be promoted.

XINJIANG CONSTRUCTION CORPS RECLAIMS DESERTS

OW021736 Beijing XINHUA in English 1632 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Text] Urumqi, June 2 (XINHUA) -- Cases covering about 1 million hectares have been built along the Junggar Basin and the Taklimakan Desert in Xinjiang during 30 years' reclamation by the Xinjiang Construction Corps. The corps, made up of demobilized soldiers, peasants and educated young people, began to fight the desert and develop the rich resources in the multi-national autonomous region soon after Xinjiang was liberated in 1949.

Apart from 170 modern state farms the corps has set up 691 industrial enterprises producing steel and iron, machinery, coal, electric power, cement, farm chemicals, cotton and woolen textiles, paper, sugar, beer, cigarettes, pharmaceuticals and food.

To prevent the encroachment of sand on the farms, 40,000 hectares of windbreak tree belts have been built and the saline-alkali soil, which accounts for 62.5 per cent of the corps' total land, improved. Irrigation projects including a 54,000-kilometer-long canal, 78 reservoirs and over 7,000 wells have been added. The corps' efforts have been acclaimed by a forest study group from the U.N. Food and Agricultural Organization.

Apart from its own consumption, the corps supplies the state each year with 200,000 tons of commodity grain, 40,000 tons of cotton, 5,000 tons of wool, 6,000 tons of oil, more than 5,000 tons of meat, eggs and poultry and large amounts of fruits, vegetables cash crops. The corps' agricultural output value now makes up 25 percent of that of the region.

Tarim River Basin, with annual precipitation of 50 millimeters and evaporation of 1,400 millimeters, is known for its aridity. With the establishment of dozens of farms here by the corps, the Tarim River has been tamed. Now 92 percent of the farmland has been irrigated and high, stable crop yields have been achieved.

In the basin, 140,000 hectares of arid land have been turned into cotton and rice producers. Towns with schools, shops, hospitals, post offices, banks, book stores, cinemas and restaurants have been built.

URUMQI PLA ISSUES CIRCULAR ON NATIONALITY POLICY

HK040217 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] The Political Department of the Urumqi PLA units recently issued a circular demanding that all units implement in depth the circular of the regional CCP committee on conducting education im implementing the party's nationality policy and strengthening the unity of nationalities, seriously learn from the basic experiences of the unit to which the "model company in cherishing the people" belongs in conducting education in the nationality policy, and strengthening the unity of nationalities, get a good grasp of education in the nationality policy, and further strengthen the unity of nationalities.

The circular pointed out: Xinjiang is a minority nationality region. Promoting education in nationality policy and strengthening the unity of nationalities represents an important content in promoting army-government and army-people unity. It is also a reliable guarantee for doing a good job in the revolutionization and regularization of the units. Promoting education in the nationality policy and the unity of nationalities is an important task in political and idelogical work in the region. It must be grasped really well.

The circular demanded that, while carrying out education in nationality policy and the unity of nationalities, the units contrast themselves with the experiences of progressive units, find out their own weak links and properly solve the existing problems. They must conduct this education in depth, bring about closer army-government and army-people relations, and strengthen the unity of nationalities.

XINJIANG'S POLICY OF FREEDOM OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Huang Wenfu [7806 2429 4395]: "Xinjiang Seriously Implements Party Policy on Freedom of Religious Belief"]

[Text] Several million people of seven nationalities in Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region are Islamic believers. The party organizations and people's governments at all levels in the autonomous region have seriously carried out the party's policy of freedom of religious belief and have respected and protected normal religious activities. The masses of people in religious circles are cheerful in sprit, patriotic and law-abiding and keen on supporting and strengthening national unity.

Since the Xinjiang Islamic Association officially resumed operations in June 1980, the autonomous region and various prefectures, municipalities and counties, after consultations, have additionally elected over 1,800 people in religious circles to people's congresses and CPPCC organizations at various levels and the committees of the Chinese Islamic Association and the autonomous regional Islamic association. Thanks to the serious implementation of the policy of freedom of religious belief, the mosques in the whole region have successively been restored and reopened. They have basically satisfied the needs of Muslims in carrying out normal religious activities. Last year, the relevant departments of the people's government also allocated special funds for the repair and overhaul of 27 priority mosques. Some branches of the Xinhua Book Store in the autonomous region have also been selling the Koran and the "Sacred Instructions" [sheng xun 5110 6064] in the Uygur language. In the past 2 years, some people in religious circles in Xinjiang and the masses of Muslims have also been going on "pilgrimages" to Mecca. Every time the Muslims observe the "Rouzi" [5131 1320] festival and the Corban, the responsible persons of party and government organizations in the autonomous region participate in the celebration activities and offer warm greetings to Muslims of various nationalities. The united front departments of party committees and the nationalities religious work government departs in various areas have constantly sought religious believers' views and asked about their demands in helping them solve actual difficulties.

As party organizations and governments at all levels in the autonomous region have seriously carried out the party's policy of freedom of religious belief, the masses of people in religious circles and Muslims have been cheerful in spirit, passionate in their love for the motherland, mindful of law and discipline and keen on supporting and strengthening national unity. In their different posts, they have made their contributions toward the motherland's socialist modernization. They have been resolute in resisting and fighting the actions of an extremely small number of people who use religion as a means to wreck national unity. At the end of October last year when an extremely small number of people wildly tried to recreate a national dispute, Se-mai-ti Mai-he-su-mu [5331 6314 2251 6314 0678 0685 2606], member of the CPPCC Standing Committee of the autonomous region and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee of Kashi municipality, refused to be threatened and volunteered to do mass work. Many people in religious circles have energetically conducted publicity stressing civic virtues, participated in planting trees and creating forests, and carried out other activities. On finding that the Han commune members in the team had housing problems Imam of the Kaisula Mosque Tuo-hu-ti [2094 0039 2251], member of the CPPCC Standing Committee of Tokshun County, immediately vacated the six rooms that he and his relatives had occupied. Together with other religious believers of the commune, he also reclaimed 30 mu of land from a stretch of alkaline beach and planted 38,000 trees.

PRESIDENT CHIANG SPEAKS AT KMT MEETING

[Text] Taipei, 2 June (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo Wednesday called on the people to unify and persevere in national principles so as to create a bright future for the nation.

Speaking in his capacity as chairman of the Kuomintang [KMT] at the weekly KMT Central Committee meeting, the president stressed that the nation has overcome its past difficulties and made its present achievements through the guidance of the late President Chiang Kai-shek and the continuing reliance on the will power, determination and spiritual strength. "In the process of national revolution, spiritual strength can lead us to win final victories," President Chiang reaffirmed. He then gave the following admonitions to the people as the guidelines for creating a bright future for the nation.

-- Economic field: The government should concentrate on the task of recovering from recession by stimulating investment willingness, strengthening export competitiveness, and opening up foreign markets so as to attain the goals of economic stability and growth.

-- Military field: The people have to support the government's efforts in developing precisive technology in the national defense industry with a view to strengthening the fighting capability of the armed forces. Only through the maintenance of a strong defense force can the nation safeguard its own security and crush the Peiping regime's attempt of invasion and united front peace offensive.

-- Diplomatic field: The nation must continue to stick to its policy of remaining in the democratic camp in order to win righteous friends in the international community, particularly strengthening mutually beneficial relations with the United States and protecting the nation's interests by effectively coping with the vicissitudes of international situation.

-- Political field: The people must discern the attempt by the enemy to divide the nation, and also must be in full alert against some persons who have not fully understood the nation's present difficult situation and who have been exploited intentionally or unintentionally as tools in dividing the nation and blindly opposing the government's policies. These few people should be warned against threatening the freedom and interests of the 18 million compatriots in the Republic of China. The people have also to further consolidate their unity, discard selfishness, and help safeguard the national security in order to accomplish the nation's goals.

-- Social field: Mass communications media should make efforts to display their function of leading the people in promoting social harmony and ethics. They must also try to report more news on good people and good deeds, implementing their task of glorifying social responsibility and education.

President Chiang then urged the government, mass media and educational circles to work in joint efforts to cultivate a healthy social atmosphere, thus pushing forward the social progress of the country.

BRIEFS

RELATIONS WITH THAILAND -- Taipei, 14 May (CNA) -- Substantial relations between the Republic of China and Thailand continue, though there are no diplomatic ties between the two governments, according to a report of the Executive Yuan. The report to the Legislative Yuan says two-way trade between the two countries continued to increase in the past few years. In 1981, the two-way trade figure was 312 million U.S. dollars, as compared with the total of 172 million U.S. dollars in 1976. The Republic of China has purchased over 200,000 metric tons of maize from Thailand annually since 1970 in addition to large volumes of cassava and mung beans. WEN WEI PO VIEWS SINO-INDIAN TALKS, RELATIONS

HK310332 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 31 May 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The Positive Significance of the Sino-Indian Talks"]

[Text] The second round of Sino-Indian talks ended on 20 May. The next round of talks will be held in Beijing. Besides the unresolved border issue, the current talks also covered a wide range of matters including commercial, cultural and scientific and technological cooperation. Both sides have already agreed on some items of cooperation and exchanges. The talks yielded satisfactory results.

The border issue between the two countries has been left over by history. In order to solve this complicated problem reasonably and totally, both historical background and the present actual conditions, as well as the national feelings of the peoples of the two countries, should be taken into consideration. It is natural that no fair and resonable solution satisfactory to both sides can be obtained by holding only one or two such talks. However, both countries have the same historical background and the peoples of the two countries have a tradition of cultural exchanges. In view of the needs of the situation at home and abroad, both countries have a desire to improve relations. Both sides have sincerity and faith in exploring ways to solve the problem and in strengthening cooperation. The talks were conducted in a frank, sincere and cordial atmosphere. The two rounds of talks have created favorable conditions for further exploration in solving this unresolved problem between the two countries. The increase of commercial, cultural and scientific and technological cooperation and exchanges, the increase of friendship and the promotion of improved relations between the two countries in the future will also be conducive to satisfactorily settling the border issue and to laying a solid foundation for normalizing relations between the two countries.

In the past few months, there has been new development in the commercial, scientific and technological exchanges between the two countries. China has added an accredited commercial counsellor to its embassy in India. A delegation of the Indian-Chinese Chamber of Commerce will visit China to discuss the prospects of bilateral cooperation and trading. Indian petroleum, railway and agricultural experts will soon be sent to China and Chinese agro-economists will also be sent to India. The two countries have also discussed restoring highway traffic between the two countries. Trade volume between the two countries has increased in the past 3 years.

There is ample room for developing the commercial, cultural scientific and technological cooperation and exchanges between the two countries through each supplying what the other needs and through exchanging experiences.

It is true that a short and temporary retrogression once occurred in Sino-Indian relations, but this was something in the past. Since the two countries have the desire to improve relations, they have increased understanding and developed mutual faith through efforts made by both sides in contacts, talks and people-to-people visits and cultural intercourse.

During the recent talks, both the head of the Chinese delegation and the head of the Indian delegation expressed their desire for developing bilateral relations. Fu Hao, head of the Chinese delegation, said: "At present, we both are striving to build our countries, improve the standard of living of our people and set up a new international economic order." Gonsalves, head of the Indian delegation, said: Both India and China hope that there is no external interference in Asia. He expressed his belief that no one will be able to cause an estrangement between the two countries. Some problems exist between India and China, but as long as both sides have sincerity and faith, we can certainly find solutions to these problems. What they said has voiced the aspirations of the peoples of the two countries.

Premier Zhou Enlai and Premier Nehru jointly initiated the five principles of peaceful coexistence. These principles have become the basic guidelines for handling mutual relations between countries with different social systems. By following these principles, all unsolved problems between countries, including border issues, can be gradually solved.

The most important thing is to treat each other equally and adopt a sincere, friendly and active attitude in holding talks. The Sino-Indian talks are one of the good examples of this.

BEGGING IN SHANGHAI LINKED TO ECONOMY, POLITICS

HK250345 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 25 May 82 p 9

[By Peter Humphrey]

[Text] Shanghai, China's largest metropolis, still suffers huge social problems of vagrancy and beggary, and many beggars are earning more than the average Chinese worker. These disclosures have been made by Chinese social scientists, who stated frankly in a recent edition of the journal SOCIETY that these social ills would not be cured unless the country stepped up its economic development.

An article in the journal published by the Sociology Department of Fudan University's branch college has made a penetrating study of beggary in contemporary Shanghai, publicly admitting more hard facts than the "face" of the communist regime has previously allowed. Today most beggars beg mainly for money and grain coupons, whereas old-style beggars in Shanghai principally "begged for food to keep their body and soul together."

According to sample cases analysed by Chinese social scientists, the article said, a begger can get about 2.3 yuan (about HK$8) daily, which is more than the average urban worker's wage. Some get even more. Society quotes the example of a 48-year-old man from the rural suburbs of Shanghai who came to the city with his wife and daughter and from six days' begging collected 100 yuan (about HK$350), or an average of five yuan (about HK$16.5) per person per day. In rare cases, the beggars' earnings may be even higher. One beggar was found with 118 yuan (about HK$413) in his pocket.

The same analysts estimated that beggars could collect about 1.2 catties worth of grain coupons daily, and some as much as 3.5 catties. One beggar was found to have netted coupons for 120 catties in only three days. The average worker is only allocated about 38 catties monthly, and the office worker only 28 catties. Grain coupons can also be sold off for cash on the black market, where they go for up to 0.48 yuan (about HK$1.40 per catty.

The methods of begging, SOCIETY said, have also changed. In the old days, begging meant pleading assistance. But today one finds forms of begging which were rare in the old days. One of these is con-begging, which comes under various guises: "Searching for lost relatives and being unable to find them," "coming to Shanghai on business and losing one's wallet," or "my child is critically ill and I haven't enough money for a doctor" are but a few examples. The basic characteristics of these cases is that they "twist the facts and cheat the people." In more serious cases they even forge official letters and identity cards, or rush into people's homes and cheat them into lending money or grain. Force-begging is the other principal new form of beggary, targeting such people as old folk, soldiers, and courting couples. "While working couples are out at work, those left in the house often give money or grain to get rid of beggars to avoid disturbances. And some beggars, who realise that soldiers are easily embarrassed into opening their purses or that courting lovers hate to be disturbed, will hassle them until they play into their hands," it said.

The composition of today's beggars is also different, the article continued. In the past, vagrants coming into the cities were mainly peasants from areas stricken by natural disasters. Nowadays, vagrants also include youths from society, outcast families, students and schoolchildren, town dwellers, and even employed workers. There had been several tens of thousands of beggars when the communists came to power in 1949, SOCIETY said, but by 1956 the problem had largely been solved. The three bad years of natural disasters from 1960-62 brought many beggars back into the city, it said.

By the mid 1960's, the problem had again been virtually eradicated, only to be stirred up once more by the turbulence of the Cultural Revolution (1966-1976). The aftermath of that 10-year-long disaster has still not been wholly swept up, and today's beggary is largely blamed on that period.

"Vagrancy and beggary have brought considerable effects on society. First of all, they have shaken people's confidence in the present political and economic situation," the article said. Secondly, vagrancy and beggary have given rise to serious problems in public security. "Beggars fill up the railway stations and piers and many occupy the property of rural collectives, such as pig pens, poultry runs and mushroomeries. Others make their homes on boats, begging by day and stealing by night, causing great losses to state property." Still others create chaos in the markets by trafficking ration coupons and registration cards and engage in speculation rackets. Beggars and vagrants have also seriously impaired agricultural production, it continued. Vagrant beggars include large numbers of peasants, and in some districts the labour supply has been reduced by the large numbers of able-bodied men who have left home. Apart from collective farming, even family sideline production, which yields much private income, has suffered. And these drop-outs have exerted a negative influence on the attitudes of others.

Cadres trying to eradicate their influence have a hard time because those people come back from the city with wads of banknotes, grain coupons and miscellaneous acquirements, which undermine the cadres' propaganda. "These people go around saying there's nothing like a little trip to Shanghai."

The trends have also adversely influenced the social climate, and both the physical and mental well-being of youth, SOCIETY said, indicating a decline of morals. "Some vagrant beggars band together, male and female, and strike up all kinds of improper relationships. Some of them even take along children to get people's sympathy, and many of the children are not even their own, which prevents the children from healthy growth. A very small minority of beggars have even chosen to create disturbances and gone begging at spots frequented by foreigners, creating still unhealthier scenes," it said. "The phenomenon of vagrant beggars has still not been eradicated, and the reasons are multifarious," SOCIETY said, identifying three main areas as economy, employment and historical and social influences.

One segment of beggars beg because of their family's economic difficulties, especially in times of natural disaster. Some families also turn to begging when they lose labouring hands and have too many dependants. Such people account for 18 percent of Shanghai's beggars, according to official Chinese statistics. SOCIETY acknowledged frankly that China is still unable to provide sufficient welfare to all its mentally handicapped, physically incapacitated and chronically sick, and that such people occupied up to 70 percent of some batches of beggars picked up by the welfare organisations. The journal also admitted that another segment became beggars because they were unfit for employment. Some of them were ovbiously lazy or were trouble-makers, while others had genuine difficulties. Still others had been forced out because of problems with bureaucrats and cadres. Apart from the real problem cases, a third category had become beggars to satisfy a certain greed beyond the needs of daily life. For them beggary was a way of making up "deficiencies" and increasing their income. Official statistics show these people occupying 30 percent of all beggars. The journal quoted the case of a man who had a large family with a good income, but who went begging to raise money for building a new house; many other cases were discovered of beggars saving for consumer luxuries like fancy clothes and tape recorders. Some of those in this category were long-term beggars who had found they could earn a good living from it. The division of wealth between city and village had been the prime mover in the case of such people, SOCIETY said.

The article said that the rate of influx of beggars into Shanghai was linked with the state of the national economy and the political situation at any given time, and concluded that the problem of beggary in urban areas could only be solved by the speedy development of the economy and the maintenance of political and social stability.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT PROPOSALS

[Article by Fang Min [2455 2404]: "Two Diametrically-Opposed Nuclear Disarmament Schemes"]

[Text] The United States and the Soviet Union simultaneously announced that talks between them on "limiting and reducing strategic arms" would begin on 29 June. This is the first time since the summit meeting between the two countries in June 1979 that strategic arms negotiations have been put on their agenda. Prior to this, Reagan and Brezhnev each put forward his own nuclear disarmament scheme.

The scheme put forward by the United States calls for a "phased reduction of strategic arms." The Americans hold that at present the main threat is the ever-growing instability in the balance of nuclear forces, and so they advocate focusing efforts in nuclear disarmament on guided missiles "which are most prone to cause instability." They propose dividing nuclear strategic arms reductions into two phases. In the first phase, both sides would reduce the number of guided-missile warheads by one third, and warheads of land-based missiles would not exceed half the total number of guided-missile warheads, while the number of guided missiles themselves would not exceed half the current U.S. level. According to material recently released by U.S. officials, at present the Soviet Union and the United States each has 7,500 guided-missile warheads; after the reduction, each would have 5,000, of which 2,500 would be warheads of land-based missiles. In the second phase the focus would be on limiting the payload of the missiles of both sides and reducing it to lower than the present U.S. level. The United States has announced that by carrying out reductions in this way it would be possible to achieve stability in the balance of nuclear forces, eliminate the nuclear threat, and reduce the danger of nuclear war. However, the direction of this scheme is clear. This is because Soviet guided missiles, especially land-based, have more warheads and carry greater payload than those of the United States. Carrying out the reductions according to this scheme would require the Soviet Union to make the greater cuts. The Soviets have therefore attacked the scheme as "absolutely one-sided."

The Soviet scheme is completely different. The Soviet Union holds that at present there is parity between the two sides, and so, after the negotiations open, both sides should immediately discuss a freeze in the numbers of strategic arms, and then carry out reductions based on the principle of equality. The U.S. side points out that the aim of this freeze is to make the current Soviet superiority permanent.

From the two opposing U.S. and Soviet schemes it can be seen that each of them is fixing its eyes on the other and attempting to limit and weaken its opponent while avoiding damaging its own interests. At the time their fundamental differences of view on the strategic arms issue are apparent.

One of these differences concerns the question of how to view the strategic arms balance between the two. There have been many changes in the growth and decline of U.S. and Soviet strategic nuclear forces since the 1970's, and the Soviet Union has now caught up with or surpassed the United States in certain fields. Thus, Soviet propaganda to the effect that there is parity between the two in strategic forces and its demands for freezing the status quo are of course relatively beneficial for itself. At present, the Soviet Union possesses more strategic arms than the United States, and these include new-generation SS-17, SS-18 and SS-19 MIRV's. The number and striking power of these forces exceeds that of U.S. land-based missiles, and their accuracy is also constantly improving. If the status quo were frozen, the Soviet Union would be able to maintain its superiority over the United States in land-based missiles and pose a sustained threat to U.S. nuclear forces, and would also be aided in its bargaining in future negotiations with the United States.

The U.S. aim in stressing the imbalance of forces is to weaken the Soviet Union's strength in strategic weapons. U.S. strategic arms have been developed according to the "three-in-one" concept, that is, simultaneous development of land-based missiles, sea-based missiles and bombers. In the past 10 years, the number of U.S. strategic arms has remained at the original level, and the main effort has been devoted to improving their quality. Hence, the United States is ahead of the Soviet Union in nuclear arms technology, naval nuclear forces and cruise missiles. Despite this, the United States has not neglected the astonishing Soviet progress in land-based guided-missiles and in payload. The Soviet Union now enjoys a warhead advantage of 5,500 to 2,100 and a payload advantage of 3 to 1 over the United States in land-based missiles. The primary reason why the United States stresses the imbalance of forces and opposes a freeze of the status quo is that it is concentrating on cutting back Soviet superiority in land-based missiles, while there would be no hindrance to the United States itself continuing to develop nuclear technology.

Another important difference of view between the United States and the Soviet Union concerns the issue of SALT II. This treaty was signed by the heads of the two countries in June 1979, after 6 years of negotiations. The U.S. side has never ratified this treaty for two reasons: First, some people in the U.S. Congress oppose it, and second, after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Congress suspended examination and debate on the treaty. The treaty has thus been deadlocked for a long time. The Reagan administration has consistently adopted a negative attitude toward the treaty, holding that it contains "mortal defects" and does the United States great harm and little good. U.S. officials recently further pointed out that were the treaty to be ratified, it would mean making the Soviet Union's very important superiority permanent by legal means. They also clearly stated that the treaty was a thing of the past, and could not be regarded as a basis for negotiations. The Soviet Union is very fond of the treaty and has repeatedly urged the United States to ratify it. Brezhnev recently stressed again that the negotiations could not start without a foundation, and "it is essential to preserve all the positive results gained previously." In this he was evidently intending to carry out the negotiations on the basis of SALT II and bind the United States by certain limits in the treaty.

Originally this treaty was a product of the mutual rivalry and mutual compromise between the United States and the Soviet Union at the time. Under the name of "limitations," it actually opens a convenient door for the two superpowers to engage in a new contest in the quality of strategic arms. For instance, according to the provisions of the treaty, the United States and the Soviet Union can each possess 1,320 multiple-warhead missiles and bombers carrying cruise missiles, each land-based missile can have 10 warheads and each sea-based missile can have 14. At that time, the numbers of land-based and sea-based multiple-warhead missiles possessed by both countries were lower than permitted by the treaty, while cruise missiles had not yet been installed in bombers. Hence, the treaty left ample leeway for both sides to further increase and improve their multiple-warhead nuclear weapons, while the Soviet Union could go even further in developing powerful new land-based multiple-warhead guided missiles, doubling the total number of its warheads.

The main reason for the emergence of differences of view between the United States and the Soviet Union over SALT II is that the Soviet Union wants to continue making use of the treaty to develop its own strong points, while the United States is attempting to throw out the treaty and draw up new criteria for numbers and destructive capacity of strategic arms of all types, in order to restrict its opponent.

At present the two superpowers, each proceeding from its own requirements, have agreed to reopen the negotiations. The Soviet Union intends to use the negotiations as a forum for gaining propaganda advantage, and also to pin down the United States and strive to revive the so-called "detente" policy. The United States on the other hand intends to change its hard stand on the nuclear disarmament issue and grasp "disarmament" and "negotiations" to counter the Soviet "peace offensive," mitigate antinuclear feelings at home and abroad, and also come out with the slogan "Big reductions in strategic arms" before Reagan visits Western Europe for two summit meetings, in a bid to win the support of the countries of Western Europe. However, judging by the viewpoints the two sides maintain, the U.S.-Soviet negotiations on reducing strategic nuclear arms will be extremely difficult and protracted.

ISSUES, PROBLEMS OF VERSAILLES SUMMIT VIEWED

Radio Commentary

OW050749 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Commentary from the "International Current Events" program: "The Summit Conference of Seven Western Nations Is Full of Contradictions"]

[Excerpts] A summit conference of seven Western nations -- the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan -- is slated to be held 4-6 June at the Versailles Palace in suburban Paris. This is a series of annual meetings which began in 1975. The one to be opened on 4 June is the eighth session, which, as usual, will discuss economic issues as the main theme.

The forthcoming session of the seven-nation summit conference will discuss the so-called "common strategy," aimed at eliminating the economic crisis in the Western capitalist world. It will also seek to coordinate the stands of these nations and find ways to solve their contradictions. To this end, leaders of these Western industrial nations have recently been busy making contacts and consultations. As can be seen from what has been discussed in these contacts, the high U.S. interest rate and the conflicts in Japan's trade with the United States and West European countries will be among the subjects hotly debated at the session.

The U.S. high interest rate policy has greatly boosted the value of the U.S. dollar and devalued West European currencies, resulting in a considerable outflow of funds, a reduction in domestic investment and a greater unemployment rate in Western Europe. This has fueled the economic recession of the West European countries. Although some West European countries have also raised their interest rates to protect their own currencies, this measure has increased the burden on domestic enterprises. As a result, many enterprises have gone bankrupt. Because of this, the U.S. high interest rate policy has been criticized time and again by West European leaders.

The conflicts in Japan's trade with the United States and Western Europe have been long disputed among Western nations. In recent years Japan has enjoyed an extremely favorable balance of payments in its trade with the United States and West European countries. With the economic recession in the United States and West European countries and the difficulties they face in selling their own products, large quantities of Japanese cars, tape recorders and other products have poured into the American and West European markets. This has evoked the deep dissatisfaction of the United States and West European countries, which have strongly asked Japan to cut down its exports and to open up a better market for American and West European products. To alleviate its trade conflicts with the United States and Western Europe, the Japanese Government has this year announced the reduction of customs duties on some imported products. On the eve of this session of the seven-nation summit conference, it has made another announcement on the reduction of import duties on more than 200 kinds of commodities. However, these measures, even in the opinion of the Japanese press, cannot radically solve Japan's trade conflicts with the United States and Western Europe. A dispute on this issue is expected at the forthcoming session of the seven-nation summit conference.

Aside from the above, the United States and the West European countries, though both regard Japan as a trade opponent, have sharp conflicts of interest in regard to their own trade in steel and agricultural produce.

According to the original plan, the seven-nation summit conference was to be a meeting to discuss economic matters among Western countries. With the increasingly tense international situation, the last few sessions of this conference have unavoidably discussed major political issues. Since the forthcoming session is to be held under circumstances where Western nations are confronted with serious political and economic issues, it is expected that one of the subjects to be discussed will be Western policy toward the Soviet Union.

Although West European countries hold the same stand as the United States in the general orientation of restricting Soviet hegemonic expansion, their views and actions on certain specific issues differ from those of the United States because of their different situations. Take economic relations with the Soviet Union as an example. In late 1981 the United States held that the Soviet Union should bear heavy and direct responsibility for the Polish situation; thus, it decided to impose economic sanctions on the Soviet Union. Despite their support for this U.S. policy, West European countries continued to develop their economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union. The U.S. request that Western Europe stop its cooperation with the Soviet Union in the gas pipeline project met with no response. Regarding the U.S. request for Western Europe's cooperation in reducing trade with the Soviet Union, some West European countries took a hesitant attitude.

Now, prior to the forthcoming session of the conference, the Western nations have stepped up consultations as a preliminary step to coordinate their policies in dealing with the Soviet Union. Touching on this matter on 9 May, U.S. President Reagan said: We recognize that the economic needs of some allies are different from ours, but in no way should we let the Soviet Union obtain Western technology for military purposes; nor should we help the Soviet economy. However, West European countries do not approve of some of the opinions held by the United States.

The forthcoming session of the conference is to be held at a time when Britain and Argentina are involved in a severe military conflict over the issue of the Malvinas Islands. Even though the issue is not the main theme for this session, the recent development of the war will affect the British attitude at the session and will probably have an influence on the outcome of the session.

In addition, major differences exist among these countries with regard to their views toward the Third World.

Now the session of the seven-nation summit conference is to be held. Western public opinion is not optimistic that this session will alleviate contradictions. In a recent editorial, the French paper LE MATIN asks people not to cherish any illusion about this session and not to think that it will perform a miracle. A recent AP report predicts that the session will not issue any official communique and will end with a brief statement that covers up, rather than eliminates, differences.

RENMIN RIBAO Article

["Economic Jottings" by Gu Jin [6253 3160]: "The Dollar -- Top Issue at the Versailles Meeting"]

[Text] A top issue at the economic summit of seven Western countries is the current U.S. Government laissez-faire policy of allowing the dollar value to rise. This business has brought to the point of white heat the friction between Washington and its Western allies.

From the day Reagan took office in early 1981, the dollar has risen in value by 30 to 50 percent against the currencies of the major Western industrialized countries. As the dollar has risen sharply, the currency of other countries has declined in value, and the high U.S. interest rates have been the main reason for this. The high U.S. interest rates attract foreign investors, who rush to buy dollars in order to reap big profits. This has thrown the international money and trade markets into great confusion. Many Western countries have had to resort to high interest rates themselves as a countermeasure, in order to stabilize their currencies and prevent a flight of capital. As a result the economic recovery they had expected has been wrecked by the universal high interest rates.

At the last economic summit, leaders of the countries of Western Europe fiercely argued with President Reagan over the harm caused by high U.S. interest rates. In the past 1 year, as Washington has gone on sticking to its old ways and maintained its original policy, the economy of the Western countries has continued to be enveloped in gloom. Hence, according to reports, the Western European countries and Japan will take tougher and more forceful joint action at the current summit. They will demand that the U.S. Government change its course and adopt a more cooperative attitude. The French Government has already drafted a scheme and is striving to gain the support of other Western countries. This scheme demands that the Reagan administration allow the dollar to float within a comparatively narrow range, so as to alleviate the dramatic turbulence on the world money market in the past 2 years.

However, the main reason for the rise of the dollar and the high U.S. interest rates is that the Reagan administration is on the one hand instituting large tax cuts in order to stimulate the economy, resulting in a massive budget deficit, while on the other it wants to reduce the money supply and credit in order to curb inflation. As a result both the government and the private enterprises have to raise funds on the market, the supply of dollars cannot meet demand, and the U.S. interest rate rises sharply. Hence, unless the Washington authorities change their economic policy, the problems of high interest rates and big fluctuations in the value of the dollar cannot be fundamentally solved.

It appears that the United States will not change its basic economic strategy at this summit meeting. Marc Leland, Treasury Department assistant secretary for international affairs, has already resolutely denied that the United States should be responsible for the economic problems that have appeared in Western Europe. Department Under Secretary Sprinkel has declared that the United States will try to mitigate the friction between itself and its partners, under the premise of making no changes in basic policy. As for the proposal the French Government has decided to propose, it is said that the Washington authorities will give it little consideration.

In view of the fact that it is difficult to solve quickly the sharp economic contradictions in the West, a number of influential newspapers and publications in Western Europe have suggested that the leaders of Western Europe and Japan should take a new strategy toward the United States, that is, to closely link the economic problems that have appeared with the political and military problems, to help persuade President Reagan to give way on the issues of curbing the rise in value of the dollar and lowering the high U.S. interest rates. This would give the countries of Western Europe and Japan a breathing spell. But it is hard to predict how things will turn out.

U.S. UNEMPLOYMENT RATE REACHES POSTWAR HIGH

[Text] Washington, June 4 (XINHUA) -- Unemployment in the U.S. soared to 9.5 percent in May, a new postwar high, with 10.5 million people out of work, the Department of Labor announced today. Unemployment has been worsening since early this year. It reached 9 percent in March, matching the postwar recession peak of May 1975, and then climbed to 9.4 percent in April. Since last July, about 2.7 million Americans have lost their jobs as a result of the deepening recession.

The overall black unemployment was 18.7 percent in May, with one out of every two black teen-age males out of work -- another all-time high. Joblessness among adult males jumped to 8.4 percent, still another new record.

The economy will stage a recovery during the second half of the year, budget Director David Stockman said today, adding, "I don't think anybody has grounds for saying unemployment is going to drop rapidly and suddenly."

Members of the Congressional Joint Economic Committee scoffed at any faint signs of improvement of the country's unemployment situation. Representative Henry Reuss, the panel's chairman, described the May report as "a catastrophic unemployment rate." Meanwhile, labor groups were concerned about the dim picture of unemployment. AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said, "The millions of adults who are out of work are now joined by millions of youth seeking summer employment".

FURTHER MATERIALS ON ZHAO ZIYANG'S JAPAN VISIT

Meeting With Chinese

OW042128 Beijing in Mandarin to Southeast Asia 0900 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang met with representatives of Chinese residents in Japan at the guesthouse in Tokyo on the morning of 3 June. When Zhao Ziyang entered the meeting hall, the more than 100 Overseas Chinese waiting to meet with him warmly applauded him. A little girl presented him with a bunch of flowers. The Overseas Chinese stood around Zhao Ziyang and cordially chatted with him.

On behalf of the people of the motherland, Zhao Ziyang extended greetings to the Overseas Chinese. He said: Chinese nationals residing in Japan have a glorious tradition. Beginning from the time of the society of common cause led by Dr Sun Yat-sen, they have made tremendous contributions to the motherland in all historical stages of the Chinese revolution. He said: The people of the motherland are grateful to you.

Zhao Ziyang told the Overseas Chinese: The friendly and cooperative relations between China and Japan have developed very smoothly over the past decade; this cannot be separated from your efforts in this regard. The Chinese nationals in Japan have lived in harmony with the Japanese people, thus promoting the friendly relations between the people of the two countries. Zhao Ziyang said: The most difficult time for our country has passed, and now the situation isgood. A rejuventated China will emerge by the 1990's.

The Chinese nationals residing in Japan who met with Zhao Ziyang came from various parts of Japan; they included (Zhang Wenfang), president of the Overseas Chinese Association in Tokyo, and (Liu Qisheng), president of the Taiwan People's Association in Japan.

Zhao Ziyang also met with 50 representatives of Chinese students studying in Japan on the morning of 3 June.

NHK Interview in Osaka

OW041425 Tokyo NHK Television Network in Japanese 1200 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Interview with PRC Premier Zhao Ziyang by NKH announcer Taro Kimura, in Osaka on 4 June -- recorded; Kimura asks questions in Japanese and Zhao answers in Mandarin, with abridged Japanese translations of Zhao's answers provided in subtitles; Zhao's answers translated from Mandarin]

[Text] [Question] Your Excellency Premier, during your visit this time, you took time out to have a ride in the subway and look around in a shopping center, thus taking a personal look at the ordinary citizens' life in Japan. What was your impression?

[Answer] This is the first time I have come to visit your country, and I am very happily impressed. Not only have I seen Japan's beautiful natural scenery, but I have witnessed the very great achievements of the intelligent and industrious Japanese people in construction. Especially, wherever we go, it can be said that we find ourselves in an extremely friendly and cordial atmosphere, and this has impressed me even more.

[Question] The Japanese people are interested in what is going on in China. Particularly, we are most interested in China's new constitution. Under the new constitution, I understand that the people's communes will cease to exist; then, how will this affect the livelihood of the 800 million people involved? We are very much interested in future development in this area.

[Answer] I think the correct interpretation of the passage on the people's communes in our draft revised constitution is that government administration will be separated from commune management, not that the people's communes will be abolished. Government administration and commune management will be separated. As you know, in the past our government administration and commune management have been integrated, which has been found after some 20 years to have some negative effects. After the separation of government administration and commune management, we shall restore the townships and villages in the rural areas, the political powers at the township and village levels. As to the people's communes representing that China's countryside will take the road toward collectivization and cooperation, this is a principle which will not change. Of course, their forms may be varied. The forms of collectivization may be varied. On this, we shall in the years to come watch closely for creations by the masses in practice.

[Question] I assume that private ownership of land will not yet be allowed, will it?

[Answer] Farmland in China is not privately owned. However, various systems of responsibility will be practiced. There will be many forms of management. But land cannot be sold or bought.

[Question] I understand that a new military commission will be created as part of the government to control the armed forces. Then, what will be the relationship between the military commission of the party and that of the government?

[Answer] The new draft revised constitution stipulates that from now on our country's armed forces will be commanded and led by the state military commission. However, our new constitution also stipulates that according to China's basic state and leadership system, the state is under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party. The army is an important component of the state. Therefore, on important ideological and policy matters, the army will continue to accept the leadership of the Communist Party. However, the party Central Committee and its Military Commission will not interfere in the day-to-day work of the state military commission. So I think there is no contradiction.

[Question] Do you mean that the Military Commission of the party will continue to exist?

[Answer] The question has not yet arisen as to whether the party's Military Commission should be abolished. The question will have to be resolved at the party Central Committee's 12th national congress [as heard].

[Question] My next question is about China's foreign policy. You made some very severe comments on Sino-Soviet relations. To Mr Brezhnev's Tashkent speech, however, China responded by saying it "acknowledges" his proposal -- if the translation is correct. I think that it was a relatively soft reaction. Furthermore, I understand that China is now promoting various studies about the Soviet Union. Do you think that Sino-Soviet relations will continue to be as strained in the future as it is now?

[Answer] Sino-Soviet relations are not good. There are major differences in principle between China and the Soviet Union. The main cause is the hegemonist policies pursued by the Soviet Union. Chairman Brezhnev not long ago said that he wanted to improve Sino-Soviet relations. On this question, as I said in Beijing to some Japanese journalist friends, we attach greater importance to Soviet actions. At present, there is no indication whatsoever which shows that the Soviet Union is willing to change its hegemonist policies. There is no such indication. If they only talk about their willingness to improve relations but take no concrete action, how can we tell whether they are sincere in their peace proposals? Of course, there are diplomatic relations, trade and personnel exchanges between China and the Soviet Union. These relations exist now and will continue in future. As to the economic and other fields of studies carried on by the academic organizations and research institutes, perhaps all countries are to be studied by them. I think this is the academic organizations' own business.

[Question] As regards those Japanese orphans who grew up in China, people in Japan are very much worried about them. The Japanese people are very grateful indeed to the Chinese Government for the many things it has done for them. There seems to be a great deal or difficulty in finding their real parents for them. Do you have any good ideas?

[Answer] The Chinese Government and the foster parents of the Japanese orphans in China are both concerned about the Japanese orphans. In the past few years, some Japanese orphans have found their relatives in Japan. This is a very good thing. In the spirit of Sino-Japanese friendship and humanitarianism, the Chinese Government is willing to have good consultations with the Japanese Government and will continue to help the Japanese orphans find their relatives.

[Question] In conclusion, tens of millions of people are watching this program. If you have anything to say in person to them, would you say it now?

[Answer] There are now very good relations between China and Japan. Our friendship and cooperation are very good in all fields. As Chinese premier, I want to say that my mission is to make the friendly relations and cooperation between the two countries become more stable and long-lasting in the 1980's. During my visit in Japan I have received the Japanese people's warm welcome. I want again to express my deep gratitude, my good wishes to the Japanese people. I wish that the Chinese and Japanese people will remain friendly generation after generation.

[Chinese and Japanese voices] Thank you.

Nara Tour, Luncheon

OW041654 Beijing XINHUA in English 1637 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Nara, Jun 4 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and his party arrived here from Osaka this morning and visited Japanese Buddhist temples, other historical sites and beauty spots in Nara, west of Tokyo.

Premier Zhao was welcomed at the gate of the Toshodai Temple by Japanese Reverend Kojun Morimoto. He told the Chinese premier about the history of the temple where the statue of Chinese priest Jian Zhen is enshrined.

Rev. Morimoto said the Toshodai Temple was built after the model of Chinese temples. Chinese priest Jian Zhen spent his last five years in the Japanese time-honored temple, he added. He said priest Jian Zhen, who came to Japan in the 8th century on a Buddhist mission, contributed to Sino-Japanese friendship and Japanese culture.

Premier Zhao told Rev. Morimoto, "You have also done much useful work for Sino-Japanese friendship and cultural exchanges between the two countries. The Sino-Japanese friendship should be promoted continuously."

Accompanied by Rev. Kojun Morimoto, Premier Zhao Ziyang paid homage to a mural of Jian Zhen by famous Japanese painter Kai Higashiyama who spent 12 years on it. The mural is now one of the art treasures of Japan.

While visiting the mausoleum of the famed Chinese priest, Kojun Morimoto told the Chinese premier that all the stones used for its construction had been shipped here from China. At the front of the mausoleum, Premier Zhao planted a sapling of the classic Chinese tree "qionghua" which had been brought here from the Chinese city of Yangzhou, the hometown of Jian Zhen.

At the Todai Temple in Nara, the head of the temple told Premier Zhao the 17-metre-high Buddhas in the Buddhas hall were moulded 700 years ago. They are state treasures of Japan. The host said Jian Zhen lived at the Todai Temple when he first came to Japan.

Premier Zhao and his party were accorded warm welcome by local people wherever they went in Nara. As the motorcade carrying the Chinese premier drove past the Nara government house and the chamber of commerce and industry, many well-wishers greeted the Chinese guests by waving miniatures of the national flags of China and Japan.

Premier Zhao was honoured to a luncheon hosted jointly by Governor of Nara Prefecture Shigekiyo Ueda, Mayor of Nara Hiromu Kiyama and President of the Nara Chamber of Commerce and Industry Muichi Kobayashi. In his toast at the luncheon, Ueda said: "Nara forged friendly relations with China some 1,300 years ago. The temples of Toshodai and Todai are vivid evidence." In reply, Premier Zhao said: "Nakamaro Abe had lived in Changan for a long time and Jian Zhen had sailed across the sea to Japan for six times, making outstanding contributions to the cultural exchanges between the two countries."

"Looking into the future," Zhao went on to way, "I firmly believe that the traditional Sino-Japanese friendship, as represented by Chinese priest Jian Zhen and Nakamaro Abe, will continue to grow with each passing day."

Prior to the luncheon, Premier Zhao met with Ueda, Kiyama and Kobayashi. The hosts and guests had a cordial and friendly conversation.

Arrival in Kyoto

OW041900 Beijing XINHUA in English 1847 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Kyoto, June 4 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited famous historical sites -- the Nijo Castle and the Kiyomizu Buddhist Temple -- and a peasant family here this afternoon.

Upon their arrival in Kyoto, Zhao and his party were greeted at the station by some 300 people who waved small flags of Japan and China and cheered, "Welcome, Premier Zhao!"

Accompanied by the head of the office in charge of the Nijo Castle Junichiro Doi, the Chinese premier toured the famous historical site built in the Edo era. Zhao examined carefully the artistic structure inside the castle and asked about its history.

As Premier Zhao came to the courtyard of the castle, Doi said: We received Vice-Premier Deng Xiaoping in this place four years ago, and Vice-Chairman of the National People's Congree Standing Committee Deng Yingchao three years ago. Now we feel very proud to receive you, Premier Zhao, in the same place this year.

The Chinese guests were offered Japanese tea in a traditional way by Shoshitsu Shen and his wife on the lawn at Koun Pavilion.

At the Kiyomizu Buddhist Temple of great renown, Premier Zhao was welcomed by 108-year-old Abbot Ryokei Onishi sitting on a wheel-chair. Zhao said to Onishi humorously: "How happy we are to have the luck to see you, a symbol of longevity!" Abbot Ryokei Onishi presented a wall panel with his inscription to Premier Zhao as a souvenir.

Premier Zhao Ziyang and his party came to Yamashina in Kyoto to see how a young peasant Bushi Morida ploughed the field and transplanted rice shoots with machines. Premier Zhao asked the leader of the local agricultural organization about the life and work of the Japanese peasants. He also visited an exhibition of agricultural machines specially arranged by the Iseki agricultural machinery corporation. Vice-director of the corporation presented a tractor and a rice transplanter to Premier Zhao to show his welcome.

4 Jun Banquet in Kyoto

[Text] Kyoto, June 4 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang declared here this evening that the Chinese people will follow the teaching of Premier Zhou Enlai to make joint efforts with the Japanese people to carry on the friendly cooperation between China and Japan.

The Chinese premier was speaking at a banquet in his honor given by the governor of Kyoto Prefecture, mayor of Kyoto and the president of the Kyoto Chamber of Commerce and Industry in the Miyako Hotel.

He said: "At a time when both Chinese and Japanese people are joyfully celebrating the tenth anniversary of the normalization of relations between the two countries, I have the pleasure to visit Kyoto, a city with an ancient culture and a history of friendly contacts with China for more than 1,000 years."

He noted: "Kyoto is known in China for its long standing cultural tradition and beautiful scenery, where the Chinese people's beloved Premier Zhou Enlai had left us a brilliant poem." "Tomorrow, I will tour Mount Arashi and pay my tribute to the memorial poet tablet built by the Kyoto residents in memory of the late Chinese premier," he said.

Proposing a toast at the banquet, Governor of Kyoto Prefecture Yukio Hayashida said that no force on earth can check the trend of friendship between Japan and China. Kyoto and China's Xian have become sister cities. They will continue to serve as a great link in promoting the prosperity and lasting peace between the two countries.

Zhao Ziyang and his party arrived here from Osaka via Nara this morning.

At noon, Zhao Ziyang was guest at a luncheon given by the governor of Nara Prefecture, the mayor of Nara and the president of the Nara Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Hosts and guests reviewed the friendly contacts between Nara and China in ancient times. They hoped that the Sino-Japanese friendly relations will continue to develop rapidly.

Tour of Kyoto

OW050830 Beijing XINJUA in English 0818 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Kyoto, June 5 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang arrived here this morning in pursuance of his Japan tour. The premier and his entourage visited the Katsura Imperial Villa built in 1620, and expressed deep appreciation for its traditional architecture and fine scenery.

He also paid a visit to a hand printing and dyeing (known in Japan as Yuzen) company. The Yuzen, a traditional method of dyeing fabrics, was developed from wax printing introduced from China more than 1300 years ago.

When Zhao Ziyang and his entourage arrived at Mount Arashi, also a scenic spot and where the rock on which was engraved a poem by Premier Zhou Enlai was located, he was given a warm welcome. He laid a bouquet before the rock and said, "The Chinese people will follow the teachings of the late Premier Zhou Enlai and work with the Japanese people to make the friendly ties between the people of the two countries last from generation to generation."

Before leaving Kyoto Zhao Ziyang told newsmen, "The Kansai region reflects the level of economic and technological development of Japan. It also gives expression to the long historical traditions of the Japanese people."

Departure from Japan

OW050838 Beijing XINHUA in English 0822 GMT 5 Jun 82

[Text] Osaka, Japan, June 5 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang left here for home this afternoon upon concluding his six-day fruitful visit to Japan.

He drove here from Kyoto where he told newsmen, "my visit to Japan is successful. I am leaving this beautiful land, carrying with me the friendly feelings of the Japanese people for the Chinese people."

"During the visit," he said, "I had fruitful talks with Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki and met with Japanese friends from various circles and saw the people. I felt deeply that Sino-Japanese friendship has taken root in the hearts of the people." He took the opportunity to give his regards to the Japanese newsmen. Today Chinese and Japanese national flags were fluttering over Osaka airport where more than 100 Japanese friends and Chinese residents gathered to bid farewell to the Chinese premier and his entourage. At the entrance of his plane Zhao Ziyang waved at the applauding crowd.

Seiya Nishida, head of the suite of honor and chief of protocol of the Japanese Foreign Ministry; Yasue Katori, Japanese ambassador to China; Song Zhiguang, Chinese ambassador to Japan; and Wang Zhifan, Chinese consul-general in Osaka; were among those who saw the Chinese premier off.

[Text] Tokyo, June 5 (XINHUA) -- On his way home after winding up his official visit to Japan today, Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council of the People's Republic of China sent a message from his plane to Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki, expressing heart-felt thanks for the warm welcome and hospitality accorded him by the prime minister and the Japanese Government. Premier Zhao's message reads:

"Upon the conclusion of our official visit to your country, please allow me to express once again my heart-felt thanks to Your Excellency and the Japanese Government for the warm welcome and hospitality accorded me. Thanks to Your Excellency's kind arrangements and sincere cooperation, this visit has gained full success, deepened the mutual understanding and trust between us and promoted the consolidation and development of our two countries' relations of friendship and cooperation. I am earnestly looking forward to meeting Your Excellency in Beijing next September."

Editorial on Relations

[Editorial: "China and Japan Will Develop Longstanding, Stable and Friendly Relations of Cooperation"]

The two leaders held that the current international situation has become ever more tense and turbulent. They had an exchange of views on the Asian situation, the Kampuchean and Afghanistan issues, the relations with the United States and the Soviet Union, the summit meeting of the seven Western industrialized countries, and the North-South relations. The two leaders were satisfied with the roles played by China and Japan in international affairs. They affirmed that China and Japan, proceeding from their own respective positions, should continue to work with other peace-loving countries and safeguarding peace and stability in Asia and the world as a whole. The two sides shared the same view that to consolidate and develop the friendly relations and cooperation between China and Japan under the current turbulent and changeable international situation is of special significance.

The leaders of the two countries reviewed with satisfaction the great achievements made in the past ten years. They are fully confident of the consolidation and development of bilateral friendly relations and of cooperation in the future. The remarks made by Premier Zhao that China and Japan have the superiority of timeliness, topographical advantages and support of the people in developing friendly cooperative ties have won comprehensive understanding and warm welcome from the Japanese Government leaders and people of all circles.

Premier Zhao gave an account of China's internal situation, pointing out that China is pursuing a correct line, its society is stable, its policies are steady and its leading body is united. After readjustment, China's economy has been on the road of steady development. After the realization of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, the national economy will develop more quickly during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and the last decade of this century will probably be a period of new vigorous development. The present open-door policy pursued by China will not change. It will be long carried out to maintain its stability and continuity. Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki indicated that Japan welcomes the Chinese policy to realize four modernizations and will continue to cooperate with China in its economic construction. Proceeding from the needs of Japan, the Japanese Government and people concerned maintain that there are bright prospects for the further development of friendly relations and economic cooperation between the two countries. The leaders of both countries believe that a lasting and stable system of economic cooperation to be established between the two countries on the basis of the above-mentioned three-point principle and through the joint efforts of both sides will conform to the fundamental interests of the Chinese and Japanese peoples and be conducive to the maintenance of peace in Asia and the rest of the world.

There has existed a traditional friendship between Japan and China for 2,000 years. When the Chinese and Japanese people were joyously celebrating the 10th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between the two countries, Premier Zhao was accorded warm hospitality in Japan by the ruling and opposition parties and achieved complete successes during the visit. We are looking forward enthusiastically to a visit by Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki to China this fall. We firmly believe that the exchange of visits by the prime ministers of the two countries will surely help to push the cause of Sino-Japanese friendship and cooperation to a new high.

SIHANOUK MESSAGE ON KAMPUCHEAN COALITION CITED

[Text] Beijing, June 5 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk has stressed that the three Kampuchean parties should mainly depend on their own strength to realize their coalition.

In a message to Khieu Samphan, president of the Presidium of State of Democratic Kampuchea, yesterday, Sihanouk thanked him for his May 30 message in which Khieu Samphan supported Sihanouk's proposal on the convention of a new summit of the presidents of the three Kampuchean anti-Vietnamese organizations in Geneva.

In the message Sihanouk expressed the hope that Son Sann, president of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, would agree to hold a brotherly meeting in Geneva in the near future.

The message said: "Some friendly countries, such as the People's Republic of China and the five ASEAN nations, wished that our country and our people win liberation. Furthermore, they have fulfilled their obligations to our country and people. In the future, the three Kampuchean parties should shoulder the Kampuchean nation's duties in resisting Vietnam."

The message said: "All the Kampuchean patriots and freedom- and justice-cherishing countries in the world expect the three Kampuchean parties to realize coalition. We should primarily depend upon our own strength to achieve this aim. It is neither honourable nor practical to demand other friendly countries to attain the goal for us. The ways and means for the realization of unity and establishment of a coalition government should be jointly explored by our three parties. The responsibility for success or failure in the effort for unity has historically fallen on our shoulders."

SRI LANKAN AIR FORCE COMMANDER PAYS VISIT

Zhang Tingfa Hosts Dinner

OW021730 Beijing XINHUA in English 1648 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 2 (XINHUA) -- Air Vice-Marshal D.C. Perera, commander of the Sri Lanka Air Force, Mrs. Perera and their party were honored at a dinner here tonight given by Zhang Tingfa, commander of the Air Force of the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

In his toast, Commander Zhang spoke of the growing exchanges between armed forces of China and Sri Lanka as well as friendship and cooperation in other fields developed between the two countries. He said that Perera's visit would contribute to the furtherance of friendly relations between the air forces of the two countries. Perera said in his toast that he was very happy about the warm hospitality accorded him in China as the first leader of the Air Force of Sri Lanka to visit China. He said he hoped that relations between the air forces of the two countries will become even more closer.

Present at the banquet were He Tingyi, deputy air force commander of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Zhai Chengwen, director of the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the Ministry of National Defense; Gao E, Chinese ambassador to Sri Lanka; and C. Mahendran, Sri Lanka ambassador to China, and Mrs. Mahendran. Perera, Mrs. Perera and their party arrived here yesterday at the invitation of Commander Zhang. This morning Air Vice-Marshal Perera reviewed an honor guard of the P.L.A. Air Force in the company of P.L.A. Air Force Commander Zhang. This afternoon the Sri Lanka guests visited a P.L.A. Air Force unit and watched a nine-aircraft acrobatic performance.

[Text] Beijing, June 4 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor and Minister of National Defense Geng Biao met and had a conversation here today with Air Vice-Marshal D.C. Perera, commander of the Sri Lanka Air Force, and Mrs. Perera.

Outlining China's domestic situation, Geng said that commanders and fighters of the Chinese People's Liberation Army are making concerted efforts to lay a solid foundation for modernization of the country's defense. He said he hoped that armed forces of China and Sri Lanka will learn from each other and strengthen their cooperation.

Perera praised the traditional friendship between the peoples of Sri Lanka and China. He said he believed that the friendship and cooperation between the two peoples and armed forces of the two countries will develop continuously.

Present were Deputy Commander of the Chinese Air Force He Tingyi, Director of the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the Ministry of National Defense Chai Chengwen, Chinese Ambassador to Sri Lanka Gao E, and Sri Lanka Ambassador to China C. Mahendran and Mrs. Mahendran. Earlier today Air Marshal Perera visited a flying school in Shijiazhuang in the company of Chinese Air Force Commander Zhang Tingfa. In the evening Perera and Mrs. Perera gave a return dinner, which was attended by Zhang Tingfa and others. The Sri Lanka visitors are scheduled to leave Beijing tomorrow for a tour of Xian, Chengdu, Shanghai, Hangzhou, Guilin and Guangzhou.

PCI SPONSORS ROME MARCH FOR PEACE, AGAINST WAR

[Text] Rome, June 5 (XINHUA) -- Some 200,000 Italians demonstrated in downtown Rome today for peace against war.

Early in the morning, 10 special trains and 400 buses carried people of all walks of life to the capital from Venice in the north to Calabria and Sicily in the south. The demonstrators started off from Republic Square in the center of the city, marched past the Soviet and U.S. embassies, and assembled at the People's Square. Among the demonstrators were youth, women, children and old people. Some disabled people in wheelchairs and representatives of foreign communities also joined in the demonstration. The demonstrators held slogans reading "For peace, against all imperialists" and "For peace, freedom and national self-determination." Passing through the U.S. Embassy, they shouted slogans denouncing Ronald Reagan for bringing with him war and poverty. The demonstration took place two days before President Reagan's scheduled visit to Rome. When the demonstrators passed by the Soviet Embassy, they shouted slogans against the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and nuclear weapons.

Today's demonstration was sponsored by the Italian Communist Party, the Italian Union of Communist Youth and other parties and mass organizations.

RESOLUTION OF GREEK CP (INTERIOR) CONGRESS CITED

OW240818 Beijing XINHUA in English 0758 GMT 24 May 82

[Text] Athens, May 23 (XINHUA) -- The Greek Communist Party of the Interior today accused hegemonism as a direct factor for the continuous deterioration of the international situation. A resolution adopted at the end of the national congress of the party said hegemonism is gravely threatening the international labour movement and world peace. It analyzed the situation in Greece and stressed the need to carry on the struggle for democracy and socialism.

The nine-day congress held in this capital was attended by 460 representatives. Delegates from the Communist Parties of Romania, Yugoslavia, China, Italy and Spain as well as delegates from socialist parties and liberation movements in Asia, Africa and Latin America attended on invitation. The party's secretary general, Babis Drakopoulos, delivered a report on May 15 and the representatives discussed the domestic political situation, the building of the party and other problems.

Feng Xuan, delegate from the Communist Party of China and member of the party Central Committee, offered a message of greetings to the congress on May 19. The Greek Communist Party of the Interior, he said, is seeking a path to socialism which conforms to the concrete conditions of Greece. The two parties of China and Greece base their relations on the principles of independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs, he added.

The resolution adopted by the congress said tensions and areas of conflict are multiplying. The U.S. and Soviet deployment of missiles in Europe has deteriorated and will continue to deteriorate drastically the situation in that continent and the world. The confrontation between the two superpowers, their contention for the redivision of the spheres of influence and their efforts to compel the world people to submit to the balance and compromise reached between them -- all this will bring new danger to world peace, the resolution said.

The resolution said the Soviet Union, proceeding from its own interests, is trying its best to push its policy of hegemonism in disregard of the independence of other countries and the interests of their people. Poland offers a good example which shows its gross interference in others' internal affairs, it said. The resolution analyzed the situation in Greece after the general elections last October and said the social and political struggle has entered a new stage. A mass campaign must be carried out with the workers' movement as the mainstay, and the movements of peasants, youth and women and that of peace must be strengthened and combined into a strong democratic force, it stressed.

The congress elected a new Central Committee.

RENMIN RIBAO SCORES ISRAELI BOMBING OF LEBANON

[Text] Beijing, June 6 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLE'S DAILY today carries a commentary denouncing Israel for its savage attack on Lebanon. Entitled "Savage Aggression," the commentary reads [the following is identical with the RENMIN RIBAO text]:

On June 4 the Begin expansionist authorities, making use of the assassination of its ambassador to Britain as an excuse, sent large numbers of airplanes to wantonly bomb the residential quarters of Beirut and southern Lebanon, killing or wounding over 200 people and causing heavy damage.

This savage act of aggression is the third violation committed by the Israeli authorities this year of the cease-fire agreement they signed with Palestine and a new debt in blood they incurred to the Lebanese and Palestinian people. The event proves once again that the Israeli authorities stubbornly cling to the policy of aggression and expansion, and are the source of misery and disaster for the people of the neighboring countries.

For years, counting on its huge military power, Israel has carried out unbridled aggression and expansion against its neighbors on the ground of safeguarding its "security." Recently, along with its reluctant withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula, it has stepped up its effort to annex the West Bank of the Jordan River, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights, and frantically suppressed the just struggle of the Arab people in the occupied land. The Israeli ruling clique's piratical acts of depriving its neighbors' right to live has aroused widespread indignation in the world.

However, with the support of the United States, Israel continues to defy the international community and public opinion and to create pretexts to carry out provocations and aggressions. Its recent savage bombing of Beirut is further evidence that the Begin authorities are the vicious violator of principles governing international relations and of the peace in the Middle East. The international community will not allow the recurrence of such crimes.

The history of the 34-year-old Arab-Israeli conflict has shown that Israel can never succeed in building its existence on the destruction of the Palestinian people. Aggression leads to resistance and bloodshed deepens hatred. For the peace and justice in the Middle East, all justice-upholding and peace-loving people and countries in the world should take action to stop Israel's aggression and work for a just and reasonable settlement of the Middle East problem.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES PEACEFUL END TO IRAN-IRAQ WAR

[Short Commentary: "It Would Be Better To Have a Peaceful Solution"]

[Text] Iran has finally recaptured the important border town of Khorramshahr, thus recovering the whole of oil-producing Kordestan Province [as published]. Now, except for a narrow strip of territory near Qasr-e Shirin, both sides are basically back to where they were before the war started. This is an excellent opportunity for ending the war.

Both sides have paid a tremendous price for the 20-month Iran-Iraq war; on each side, tens of thousands of strong young men have lost their lives, up to 1 million peaceful inhabitants have lost their homes, important oil installations have been wrecked, and many construction projects have been paralyzed. The war has caused tens of billions of dollars of economic losses and hampered both sides from advancing along their chosen paths of development.

In addition to all this, the war has weakened the struggle of the Islamic countries for uniting against hegemonism and joining together against Israel, and has provided the opportunity for aggravation of Israeli aggression and expansion and of contention between the superpowers in the Gulf and Middle East regions. Peace-loving peoples throughout the world feel profoundly sorry and grieved over this war.

The control line of the two sides is now basically back at the prewar border. International opinion holds that this is an excellent opportunity for the two sides to move from the battlefield to the conference table, and hence again appeals to both sides to stop the war and solve the conflict by negotiation. People hold that territorial disputes left over from history can be fairly and rationally solved by peaceful negotiation.

China, Iran and Iraq all belong to the Third World. The Chinese people have the same friendship for the peoples of Iran and Iraq. There is an old Chinese saying: "It is better to stop being enemies than to become enemies." We hope that Iran and Iraq will be able to regard their long-term national interests as the most important thing, immediately stop this war that pains their friends and pleases their enemies, solve their differences and disputes on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, rebuild their fraternal friendship, and struggle together to preserve peace and stability in the Gulf and Middle East regions and oppose Israeli aggression and expansion and superpower hegemonism. The opportunity must not be missed, as it will not come again. Now is the time for turning hostility into friendship.

SPECIAL ENVOY HE YING ENDS VISIT TO MIDEAST

[Text] Kigali, May 25 (XINHUA) -- Juvenal Habyarimana, president of the Rwandan National Revolutionary Movement for Development and president of the republic, received here today Zhang Zhixiang, head of the visiting good-will delegation of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP).

The president told Zhang Zhixiang, who is also counsellor of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee, that he was satisfied with the friendship and cooperation between the Rwandan National Revolutionary Movement for Development and the CCP. He hoped that the two parties continue to exchange experiences in the future so that the relations between the two parties would be developed and strengthened.

The Chinese delegation arrived in Rwanda on May 18. During its visit to the country, the Chinese delegation had talks with General Secretary B. Habimana of the movement, and called on Minister of Foreign Affairs and Cooperation Francois Ngarukiyintwali and other party and government officials.

INVESTMENT PROMOTION MEETING OPENS IN GUANGZHOU

Open Economic Policy To Stay

OW070357 Beijing XINHUA in English 0302 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 7 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor and Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Chen Muhua reassured foreign industrialists, bankers, private investors and Chinese compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao regions that to pursue a policy of opening to the world is China's long-term policy decision, at the opening ceremony of the investment promotion meeting here today.

["We hold that with the present high level of technilogy, no country in the world possesses all the resources and funds needed for the development of its economy, or has all the advanced technology in the world. Every country must make trade-offs with other countries for its needs," she said.

"Besides, every nation's economy has its pluses and minuses and each can achieve the best overall economic results only through exchanges," she added.

The introduction of applicable advanced technology and equipment and the absorption of foreign funds on the basis of equality, mutual benefit and exchanges for each other's needs according to China's concrete conditions and conventional international practices are manifestations of China's open economic policy, she said. This is done to speed up China's socialist construction, she added.

"The present meeting is a useful attempt in seeking international cooperation," she said.

The minister explained that the readjustment of China's national economy and the crackdown on criminal economic activities would not change or affect China's policy of opening to outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. On the contrary, they would guarantee the smooth implementation of China's domestic and foreign economic policies.

Through readjustment, China's economic construction has entered a new period of steady advances, Chen Muhua said.

In the future China would continue to import advanced technology and equipment applicable to China and continue to absorb and utilize foreign funds for transforming existing enterprises and for the construction of key projects in such fields as energy, communication and transportation, she said.

Further on Meeting

OW070441 Beijing XINHUA in English 0335 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 7 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Chen Muhua, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, reiterated China's long-term policy of opening to the world at the investment promotion meeting, which opened here this morning.

"The current investment promotion meeting is a useful attempt to seek cooperation with other countries and regions," she said.

The meeting is jointly sponsored by the Chinese Government and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (U.N.I.D.O.), and the session offers 130 projects for discussion with overseas investors.

Included are joint ventures, co-production enterprises and compensation trade undertakings. The projects, mainly small and medium-sized ones, cover light, textile, chemical, building materials, machine building, metallurgical and electronics industries.

Addressing the opening ceremony, Dr. Abd-El Rahman Khane, executive director of U.N.I.D.O., said that China has great potential with its vast area, big population and major technological breakthroughs achieved in the past. China's share of world manufacturing value added is now around 3.5 percent -- nearly a quarter of the value added total in the whole of the developing world.

This highlights the signficance of the investment promotion meeting, the U.N.I.D.O. official said. Dr. Khane expressed satisfaction with China's decision to hold this meeting as a sign of confidence in bringing about international cooperation, and voiced the hope of "conclusion of as many agreements as possible."

Addressing the meeting today also were Wei Juming, Chinese vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Nessium Shallon, resident coordinator for U.N. operational activities in China.

Present at the meeting were more than 1,100 Chinese representatives and visitors from 29 foreign countries and Hong Kong and Macao regions, including industrialists, businessmen and bankers. Diplomatic officials also attended.

A reception marking the opening of the meeting will be given here this evening by the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

Wei Yuming's Remarks

OW070406 Beijing XINHUA in English 0309 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 7 (XINHUA) -- China has made considerable progress in absorbing and utilizing direct foreign investment since the adoption of open economic development policy in 1979, said Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, at the opening ceremony of the investment promotion meeting here today.

Direct investment, as one form of utilizing foreign capital, includes joint ventures, cooperation enterprises, joint exploration and development, and compensation trade.

According to Vice-Minister Wei, by the end of 1981, 40 joint ventures had been approved with a total investment of more than 189 million U.S. dollars, of which the total investment from foreign and Hong Kong and Macao partners was about 87.5 million U.S. dollars.

More than 390 contracts for cooperation enterprises have been approved with a total investment of 1,800 million U.S. dollars provided by foreign and Hong Kong and Macao partners.

As regards oil exploration and exploitation, he said, China has concluded 9 agreements on geophysical survey in South China Sea and southern Yellow Sea with 48 oil companies from 13 countries, such as the United States, Japan, Britain, France and Italy. General geological survey work has been completed. In addition, he said, China has also concluded 4 contracts on oil exploration and development in the Bohai Sea and a part of Beibu Gulf with Japan's oil consortium and two French oil companies. The amount of investment for these projects totalled 839 million U.S. dollars, of which 498 million were provided by foreign investors, he said.

Five hundred and ninety contracts for medium and small projects in the form of compensation trade have been approved, with machines and equipment provided by foreign and Hong Kong and Macao investors valued at approximately 460 million U.S. dollars, he added.

Absorbing Foreign Investment

[Text] Guangzhou, June 7 (XINHUA) -- The absorption of direct investment from foreign countries must be coordinated with readjustment of China's national economy, its modernization program and the improvement of the people's life, said Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, at the opening ceremony of the investment promotion meeting here today.

Therefore, in establishing joint ventures and cooperation enterprises and conducting joint exploration and development and compensation trade, China puts emphasis on energy, textile and light industries, and food, pharmaceutical, electronics, building materials, machine building, iron and steel and chemical industries, tele-communications, agriculture, animal raising and breeding and tourism, he said. For instance, among the 40 joint ventures approved, 15 are light industrial and woolen textile industrial projects, he added.

In absorbing direct investment from foreign countries, close attention must be paid to economic results, he said. Specifically, the investments must be conductive to the adoption of advanced technology and scientific management and to increasing the varieties of products, improving quality and saving energy and materials. They should be able to bring about rapid and profitable returns, help expand export of products and increase foreign exchange earnings.

The transformation of existing enterprises was an undertaking with which the absorption of foreign capital should be combined, he said. This is not only essential to China's economic readjustment and modernization program but also favorable to foreign investors, he said.

The vice-minister also explained some questions concerning doubts among some foreign investors such as whether their capital or assets in joint ventures and cooperation enterprises would be requisitioned or confiscated.

He said, "the law of the People's Republic of China on joint ventures using Chinese and foreign investment" stipulates clearly "the Chinese Government protects, by the legislation in force, the resources invested by a foreign participant in a joint venture and the profits due him pursuant to the agreements, contracts and articles of association authorized by the Chinese Government as well as his other legal rights and interests."

"So long as the foreign investors do not violate the laws of the Chinese Government, and the joint ventures and cooperation enterprises do not infringe upon China's public interests and disrupt its public order, on no account would we confiscate or requisition their investments," the vice-minister declared.

"On the whole," he said, summing up the experience in the past three years, "China and foreign firms have cooperated satisfactorily in the joint ventures and cooperation enterprises. This is because China has conscientiously carried out the principle of equality and mutual benefit and the foreign investors have shown sincerity for cooperation," he said.

Investors Decisionmaking Power

[Text] Guangzhou, June 7 (XINHUA) — Joint ventures and cooperation enterprises are allowed to adopt more flexible styles of management and to enjoy compatible decision-making powers with regard to personnel, finance, goods, production, supply and sales, according to Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, speaking at the investment promotion meeting here today.

As special forms of economic organization in China, they enjoy the following rights:

1. To make decisions on their development program, and plans concerning production, management and labor wages;

2. To buy the necessary raw materials, fuel and equipment including components, spare parts and accessories on domestic and international markets, and sell products on these markets according to the provisions of the contracts signed;

3. To sign economic contracts with domestic and foreign companies and enterprises;

4. To raise RMB and foreign currency funds from internal and external financial institutions for production and management and to open accounts in RMB and foreign currencies with the Bank of China or other banks endorsed by it for depositing, drawing, raising and spending the funds;

5. To establish individual financial management and other management systems and to determine their own profit distribution program as well as the financial budget and final account of revenues and expenditures;

6. To hire and fire employees and to adopt the system of pay scale, wage form, bonus and allowance systems suitable to themselves; and

7. To take necessary measures to renovate and reform production techniques, to diversify products and improve quality and increase quantity according to provisions set in the contracts and the articles of association, and to add fixed assets with the funds accumulated by themselves for the expansion of production and operation.

The program on capital construction, supply, production and sales of the joint ventures and cooperation enterprises, which are a component of China's entire economy, should be incorporated into the state plan through competent authorities for the better realization of their rights, he said.

China is also doing its utmost to create a favorable investment climate and convenient conditions for foreign investors with regard to sales market, the purchasing and sales prices, taxation and land royalty, the vice-minister added.

Investors' Favored Treatment

HK050622 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1508 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, 4 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Vice Minister Wei Yuming said when receiving our correspondent this evening that China welcomed investment by Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese and Chinese of foreign nationality, and would give them favored treatment.

Vice Minister Wei Yuming will preside over the first China investment promotion conference, which will be held here. He said, relatively ample preparations have been made and the conditions are relatively ripe for the various tasks of this conference, which is being convened by China and UNIDO, especially in project feasibility studies. The holding of this meeting provides a wider choice of negotiating partners and projects for investors from outside, compared with the scattered and single activities of the past. It affords excellent conditions and opportunities, and there is a corresponding increase in the chances and factors for success. Investors from outside are therefore very enthusiastic. It was originally planned to invite 400 foreign businessmen, but this figure has been greatly exceeded, and there will be nearly 600. This fully reflects the interest and confidence of investors from outside.

With regard to investors among Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese and Chinese of foreign nationality, Wei Yuming said that in the past they supported our policy in opening up to the world and vied to be the first in seeking investment opportunities in China. A large proportion of the 40 Sino-foreign joint ventures we have set up are being operated by us in cooperation with Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Overseas Chinese, and Chinese of foreign nationality. This is an expression of their warm love for China. Now, when the China investment promotion conference is about to open, we extend a special welcome to those of them coming to attend it.

Wei Yuming conveyed through our agency the following message to Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese, and Chinese of foreign nationality: China specially welcomes and encourages them to come in and invest, and will give them more favored treatment than ordinary foreign investors as regards taxes, raw materials and power supplies, and so on.

The enterprise management experiences of Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese and Chinese of foreign nationality are useful for China to draw on. Wei Yuming stated, China has over 300,000 enterprises to reform, and for quite a large number of them foreign investment and technological import are possible and indeed necessary. The reform of these enterprises needs little investment and only a short cycle, and yields quick results. It is extremely suited to the investment capacity of Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese and Chinese of foreign nationality. Moreover China is about to come to grips with the reform of old enterprises. The prospects for investors are extremely broad.

Joint Investments Cited

[Text] Guangzhou, 6 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- "China has the capacity to draw in and make use of foreign investment, and moreover, this capacity is growing all the time." This was disclosed by Vice Minister of Foreign Trade Wei Yuming to our reporter.

Vice Minister Wei Yuming cited facts to illustrate the success of drawing in foreign investment in the past 3 years and held that China has the capacity to draw in and make use of foreign investment. He said that five projects, including the Beijing-Qinhuangdao and the Yanzhou-Shijiusuo electrified railroad lines, the double-track railroad from Guangzhou to Hengyang and extensions to the ports of Qinhuangdao and Shijiusuo, built with loans from the Japanese Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund, will have used about 100 billion yen by the end of this year. These projects are developing very rapidly. The quality of construction is good and management at the sites is orderly. A feasibility study agreement has already been signed with the Island Creek Coal Company of America for the joint exploitation of the open-cut coal mine in Pingshuo. Experts from both sides are now working busily and work is progressing smoothly. The Beijing Air Catering Company, the China Dongfang Chartering Company, the Tianshan woolen textile mill, the Zhejiang rattanware cooperative and the Tianjin winery are some of the more successful joint venture enterprises. Certain deficiencies in some of the joint venture enterprises have already been or are being corrected. The foreign economic activities of the past three years have enabled us to accumulate some valuable experience.

The vice minister pointed out to the reporter that the Chinese economy has already entered the stage of steady development. The technological transformation of old enterprises and the construction of basic energy, communications and transportation installations have provided excellent prospects and conditions for further increasing the use of foreign investment.

Vice Minister Wei said: If we say that we lacked experience in making use of foreign investment in the past, that our rules and regulations were imperfect, our standard of management was not high and that there were certain restrictions in work, then it is possible to say that all this has not been changed. In conclusion, Wei Yuming expressed confidence that all foreign businessmen who come to invest in China will obtain higher interest on bank deposits and profits and China will also benefit from this.

FURTHER ON PEASANTS' IMPROVED INCOME, STANDARDS

[Text] Beijing, 3 Jun (XINHUA) -- Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, peasants in China have seen a large increase in their income, marked improvement in their living standard and a fairly great change in consumption breakdown, according to a survey conducted by the State Statistical Bureau covering 18,529 peasant households in 568 counties of 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions (excluding Xizang).

In 1981, per capita living expenses of these more than 18,000 commune member households reached 190.81 yuan, which represented an increase of 74.75 yuan or an increase of 64.4 percent as compared to 1978.

An analysis of the State Statistical Bureau's survey shows that the proportions of food and fuel expenses decreased in those 3 years for the peasants, but the proportions of their expenses for homes and other daily necessities increased. In 1981, these more than 18,000 commune member households spent an average of 186.17 yuan of their total living expenses on consumer goods, or a 64.9 percent increase as compared to 1978, and 4.64 yuan for cultural life and services, which represented a 46.8 percent increase. A breakdown of consumer goods expenses and their increases as compared to 1978 shows that the expense for foodstuffs was 113.83 yuan and represented a 44.8 percent increase; clothing was 23.57 yuan, a 59.9 percent increase; fuels were 10.59 yuan, a 27.9 percent increase; home expenses were 18.67 yuan, an increase of 4.09 times; daily articles were 19.51 yuan, an increase of 1.56 times.

Compared to 1978, there were marked changes in the proportions of various kinds of expenses vis-a-vis each other in the total amount of living expenditures for 1981: Food expenses dropped from 67.7 percent to 59.7 percent, clothing expenses dropped from 12.7 percent to 12.3 percent, fuel expenses dropped from 7.1 percent to 5.6 percent, housing expenses rose from 3.2 percent to 9.8 percent, daily article expenses climbed from 6.6 percent to 10.2 percent and expenses for cultural life and services dropped from 2.7 percent to 2.4 percent. These changes are proof that peasants have begun increasing their living expenses to a new level.

There were also new changes in the composition of foods consumed. This is manifested by a drop in the proportion of staple foods consumed and a rise in the consumption of nonstaple foods. In 1981, as compared to 1978, peasants spent a per capita average of 61.07 yuan for staple foods, an increase of 19 percent; and 41.5 yuan for nonstaple foods, an increase of 68.2 percent. In this 3-year period the percentage of staple food consumption in the total expenditure for foods dropped from 65.3 percent to 53.7 percent, that of nonstaple food consumption rose from 31.4 percent to 36.5 percent. In 1981 the per capita consumption of unprocessed food grains of these rural households was 512.3 jin, or 16.6 jin more than in 1978. To break it down, the amount of rice and flour consumed reached 344.8 jin, an increase of 99.8 jin, and that of coarse food grains other than rice and flour was 167.5 jin, a drop of 83.2 jin. Compared with 1978, there were considerable increases in the per capita consumption of edible oils, meat, domestic fowl, eggs and their products, fish and shrimp, sugar, wine and other principal nonstaple foods by these rural households. The extent of increase was generally more than 50 percent.

In clothing consumption there was a gradual shift to medium grade commodities. There was a marked increase in the ownership of durable goods. Compared to 1978, these rural households logged a per capita increase of more than 1.5 times their expenses in chemical fiber cloth, woolen goods, silks and satins, woolen yarn and knitwear, while their consumption of cotton cloth and cotton decreased by 25.3 percent and 16.5 percent respectively. This shows that there has been some quality improvement in the clothes worn by peasants.

As for other consumer goods, compared to 1978, the figures at the end of 1981 showed that every 10 households of these peasants averaged 4.4 bicycles, which was a 41.9 percent increase; 2.8 sewing machines, a 55.6 percent increase; 4.2 radio sets, a 1.33 percent increase; 5.5 wristwatches, a 1.39 percent increase. A small number of well-off rural households began to have television sets, electric fans, radio-tape recorders, and so on.

There was an increase in newly built homes and an improvement in living conditions. In 1981 these rural households built an average of 0.27 new rooms per household, which was 0.16 more than in 1978. Most of the newly built houses in many localities were brick and wood structures. Their design, door and window fixtures, and natural lighting were more refined and of better quality. An estimate made at the end of 1981 showed that these rural households used an average of 4.28 rooms per household, which was an increase of 0.64 as compared with 1978. The average floor space reached 10.16 square meters per capita.

Peasants' cash on hand and savings deposits have both increased. Their potential purchasing power has increased. Statistics show that by the end of 1981 the average cash on hand and bank deposits reached 35.76 yuan per capita, which was 17.4 yuan more than in 1978.

At present, there are still some peasants whose incomes are relatively lower and whose daily life is difficult. It is necessary to continue to give a hand to these households in difficulty and help them develop production, increase income and gradually improve their living standard.

COLLECTIVE, SELF-EMPLOYED BUSINESSES EXPAND

OW041100 Beijing XINHUA in English 0822 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 3 (XINHUA) -- More than 95,000 shops, restaurants and other service centers have been added in China's most populous province, Sichuan, since the beginning of 1979, exceeding the peak figure registered in 1963, according to a report from the province.

These businesses were set up in tourist centers as well as in urban residential and commercial areas and in small townships.

Statistics from China's second largest port city, Tianjin, show that the city has added 3.300 collectively operated shops, restaurants and repair centers, and 19.071 household businesses in the same trades in the past two years.

Government departments at various levels have appropriated large amounts of money for establishing a number of key commercial and service centers and have encouraged the collective and self-employed sectors to assist in the endeavor by granting tax reductions, exemptions and preferential loan credits.

The boom in collective and self-employed businesses has stimulated the national economy, provided jobs for young school graduates and made the people's life easier, according to Chen Weida, first secretary of the party's Tianjin city committee.

Figures from Tianjin show that the newly established businesses have provided jobs to more than 80,000 young people waiting for employment, while in Sichuan 400,000 people are now working in collective businesses and 100,000 are self-employed.

This is one of the ways of achieving full employment, Chen Weida said, since state enterprises and businesses are unable to take in the increasing number of young people leaving schools every year. He said that Tianjin needs more collective and self-employed undertakings, as the city will build another three million square meters of new housing this year and another 100,000 young boys and girls are leaving middle schools.

But people in the collective and self-employed businesses should be educated to abide by the law and state policies in their operations, Chen Weida added.

NO NEW EXPORT DUTIES FOR EXISTING CONTRACTS

[Text] Beijing, June 4 (XINHUA) -- China's latest decision to levy customs duties on 34 kinds of export commodities beginning June 1 will not affect contracts signed before the date between Chinese foreign trade companies and foreign firms. A spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade made the announcement today in an interview with XINHUA. Commodities subject to the new duties were published on May 27 by the General Customs Administration. The commodities include coal, ferromanganese, pig iron, rice, soybeans, prawns, tung oil, crude lacquer, freshwater fish, Chinese lycium and cassia bark.

"It has always been our policy to faithfully observe the contracts we have signed," he said. "Under this policy, we will not demand a corresponding increase in the prices for our export commodities already contracted for export, nor will we cancel any of the contracts signed before June 1."

Asked about how the decision is to affect the export prices for the 34 kinds of commodities, the spokesman assured XINHUA that in China, taxation does not directly affect export prices. He said: "China fixes the prices of its export commodities by taking into account the international prices for the same commodities and the supply and demand on the international market. This principle will continue to apply to the 34 commodities."

Discussing the necessity of levying export duties on these commodities, the spokesman said that this aims at adjusting export of these commodities to better carry out the overall state economic plans and the principle of making China's economy develop mainly by depending on state planning while using market machanism as a supplement.

20 MORE FORMER KUOMINTANG PERSONNEL RELEASED

[Text] The judicial departments of Beijing and Guangxi recently held meetings at which announcements were made to release all 20 former Kuomintang party, government and military personnel and special agents below the county and regimental level in custody as an expression of leniency, 7 in Beijing and 13 in Guangxi.

At the release meetings, local courts and reform through labor departments issued court rulings and release papers respectively to the released personnel. When the former Kuomintang personnel received their release papers, they were greatly moved. They all expressed their determination from now on to observe discipline and abide by the law and to be of service to the people.

WANG ZHEN, WANG ENMAO VISIT URUMQI PLANT

[Text] Urumqi, 4 Jun (XINHUA) -- Meeting foreign and Hong Kong experts after visiting plants in Urumqi, Wang Zhen, member of the CCP Central Committee Politburo, said: China wants to continue to carry out the policy of opening to the world and revitalizing the domestic economy, using foreign capital and importing and studying advanced foreign technology; it will strive to successfully set up Chinese and foreign joint enterprises and vigorously develop the production of export goods in order to serve the needs of the four modernizations.

On the morning of 3 June, Wang Zhen inspected the construction site of the big chemical fertilizer plant of the Urumqi petrochemical complex. Much of the equipment for the big chemical fertilizer plant, which is expected to produce 300,000 dun of synthetic ammonia and 520,000 dun of urea a year, is imported from foreign countries. After visiting the construction site and attending a briefing given by leading comrades of the plant construction command, Wang Zhen met with representatives and technicians of Japanese and FRG companies helping with the construction. He welcomed them and thanked them for their assistance, hoping that more experts from their companies would come to help in the construction.

In the afternoon Wang Zhen visited the Xinjiang Tianshan Woolen Textile Products Company, Limited, which is a Chinese and foreign joint venture set up by Xinjiang and businessmen from Hong Kong and Japan. After receiving briefings by a representative of the company's general manager, the vice general manager, representative of the Chinese side Zhou Peide and representative of the Japanese side Ushio, Wang Zhen said: Xinjiang is a vast land and is endowed with rich resources and a large labor force. It is hoped that Chinese and foreign experts will work together to successfully run the enterprise.

In the afternoon Wang Zhen also visited the "exhibition of gems, jade, colored stones and handicrafts" jointly sponsored by the Xinjiang geological bureau and the museum affiliated to the Ministry of Geology and Minerals.

Accompanying Wang Zhen on the inspection were Wang Enmao, first secretary of the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Regional CCP Committee, and others.

WAN LI VISITS BEIJING ENVIRONMENTAL EXHIBIT

OW052030 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1520 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, 3 Jun (XINHUA) -- Comrade Wan Li visited an "exhibition on protection of China's natural environment" at the Beijing Museum of Natural History this afternoon. At the exhibition, he told responsible persons and experts of our environmental protection departments: Protecting the natural environment is a major task which will bring benefit to our posterity. Natural conditions throughout the country should be analyzed. Where the natural environment needs to be protected, we must do so. The environmental protection law must be strictly enforced, and plans for protecting the natural environment must be combined with agricultural planning.

The "exhibition on protection of China's natural environment" is jointly sponsored by the Environmental Protection Leading Group under the State Council, the China Society of Zoology, the Beijing Museum of Natural History and other units. More than 100,000 people have visited the exhibition since it opened on 5 April.

Comrade Wan Li visited the exhibition in the company of Li Ximing, minister of urban and rural construction and environmental protection, and experts of departments concerned.

DENG LIQUN WATCHES MODERN COMEDY AT ZHONGNANHAI

[Text] Beijing, 5 Jun (XINHUA) -- Exclusive report for JILIN RIBAO by XINHUA reporter Yang Huiming: The Jilin municipal pingju [local opera of north and northeast China] troupe staged "Neighbors," a modern comedy, for more than 1,000 cadres from various organs directly under the central authorities at Zhongnanhai on the evening of 4 June. Their performance won favorable comments from the audience.

Among those who watched the performance were Wang Shoudao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee; Deng Liqun, director of the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee; Li Bozhao, vice chairman of the Chinese Dramatists' Association; and Guo Shushen, deputy secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission under the CCP Central Committee. After the performance, they went up to the stage, shook hands with each performer and cordially praised their excellent performance.

All the members of the troupe were excited. They said that it was a great encouragement to them to have this chance to perform at Zhongnanhai, and they expressed their determination to make persistent efforts to give more and better performances. After the performance, all members of the dancing team, the band and all performers joined in a conscientious effort to clean up the stage.

CCP STRESSES ROLE OF DEMOCRATIC LIFE MEETINGS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 6 Jun (XINHUA) --A XINHUA reporter has learned from the Organization Department of the CCP Central Committee that since last year the practice of holding democratic life meetings for leading cadres of prefectural and county party committees and organs has been strengthened owing to the supervision, attention and guidance provided by the various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional party committees.

According to statistics from 18 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, of some 3,574 prefectural and county party committees and organizations, 3,142 -- or 88 percent -- held democratic life meetings last year.

At these democratic life meetings, the prefectural or county party committees or organs set out to solve problems encountered in implementing the party's line, principles and policies in light of the party's current central tasks and of local conditions. At their democratic life meetings during the first half of last year, standing committees of the Yijun and Huangling County party committees in Shaanxi's Yanan Prefecture reviewed the delay in implementing the production responsibility system in their localities, overcome ideological "fears of being called rightists, of changes, of disorder, of getting into trouble and of the system's degenerating into individual farming," and steadied their determination and confidence in implementing the central authorities' principles and policies concerning the production responsibility system.

The Standing Committee of the Shenyang Municipal CCP Committee held a democratic life meeting last October specifically to study the problem of lax and weak leadership on the part of the municipal party committee and worked out corrective measures. At a meeting of cadres of county and regimental level and above, Li Tao, first secretary of the Shenyang Municipal CCP Committee, set an example by making self-criticism and called on leading cadres at all levels to take the initiative in improving party style.

In a recent circular, the Organization Department of the CCP Central Committee pointed out that democratic life meetings of standing committees and organs of party committees of county level and above are of great importance in restoring and carrying forward the party's fine traditions, improving party style, strengthening and improving party leadership and enhancing the party's fighting capability. It is hoped that the various provincial, municipal and autonomous regional party committess will take effective measures to strengthen their supervision over democratic life meetings of standing committees and organs of party committees of county level and above, strictly follow the central authorities' relevant regulations and make the system of democratic life meetings a great success. At the same time, all leading cadres who are party members must participate as ordinary party members in the regular activities of the party branches and party groups to which they belong, gradually institutionalize their regular activities as required by their dual role as party members and leading cadres and persist in this practice so that it will play an important role in strengthening party building.

EDITORIAL STRESSES CITIZENS' RIGHTS, DUTIES

HK040830 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jun 82 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "The Rights and Obligations of Citizens Are Inseparable"]

[Text] In the process of discussing the draft of the revised constitution, people have eagerly concerned themselves with the stipulations on the rights and duties of the citizens. In accordance with the principles of the socialist democracy and socialist legal system, the draft sums up both positive and negative experience and contains more complete and explicit stipulations on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens. Compared with the previous three constitutions adopted since the founding of new China, a number of important amendments have been made with regard to citizens' rights and duties in the draft of the revised constitution.

The 1975 Constitution was worked out in 1975 under very abnormal conditions. Its contents were inadequate and a number of stipulations which should havebeen conscientiously worked out were carelessly dashed off. There were only four stipulations on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens. In addition, the chapter on citizens' duties preceded that of citizens' rights. Although the number of provisions for this part was increased to 16 in the 1978 Constitution, it still bore the traces of the "Great Cultural Revolution." For instance, the stipulations on citizens' right to "speak out freely, air views fully, hold great debates and write big-character posters" and so forth were included in the constitution. Comparatively speaking, the 1954 Constitution was more perfect. A total of 19 feasible and complete stipulations on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens were included in it. Notwithstanding, the constitution was formulated 27 years ago. The establishment of the socialist system and the development of the socialist construction in our country have enabled us to increasingly strengthen the material bases which ensure that citizens will enjoy various rights. Since the smashing of the "gang of four" and the convention of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee in particular, the democratization of our country has developed greatly. It is necessary and possible for us to work out more perfect and feasible stipulations on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens.

The number of stipulations on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens has been increased to 22 in the draft of the revised constitution.

Judging by the content, the stipulation that all citizens are equal before the law as laid down in the 1954 Constitution has been reinstated, and citizens enjoy greater rights in the political, economic, cultural, educational and other fields. Compared with the various versions of previous constitutions, the draft comprises more specific and comprehensive stipulations regarding citizens' rights to supervise state organs and functionaries, their freedom of religious belief, right to work and right to receive material assistance. In view of the bitter lesson of the "Great Cultural Revolution," some new content has been added to the draft for the purpose of protecting personal freedom, personal dignity and personal safety. For instance, "extra-legal detention of citizens, or extra-legal deprivation or restriction of citizens' freedom of person by other means, is prohibited; and extra-legal search of the person of citizens is prohibited," "searches of, or intrusions into, citizens' domiciles, in contravention of law, are prohibited," and so forth. All rights and freedoms which our country's citizens enjoy have been won through hard work. They should be fully affirmed in the new constitution. We should take good care of them and protect them as we do our eyes.

A salient feature of the draft of the revised constitution is that emphasis is laid on the principle that the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties. This is clearly stipulated in the draft: "The rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties. Every citizen enjoys the rights prescribed by the constitution and the law and at the same time has the duty to abide by the constitution and the law." All stipulations in the draft regarding the fundamental rights and duties of citizens are laid down in light of this principle.

Marx pointed out when he drafted the provisional general rules of the International Working Men's Association in 1864: "No rights without duties, no duties without rights." In a capitalist country, because the system of exploitation exists, it is impossible for the exploiters and the exploited and for the ruling class and the working people to enjoy equal rights and carry out equal duties. For this reason, the principle that the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties cannot be put into practice there. Ours is a socialist country where the system of exploitation of one man by another has been eliminated and the people have become masters of their country. This makes it entirely impossible to carry out this principle in our country.

The principle that the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties reflects that the interests of the state are fundamentally compatible with the interests of the people. In our country, the people are the masters, the state and the people share weal and woe and form an organic whole, and the interests of the state are inseparable from the interests of the people. The purpose of all activities of the state is to protect and enhance the rights of the people as masters of their country and to continuously raise the level of the material and cultural lives of the people. The citizens perform their duties for the state and the society for the purpose of doing a better job of building China into a powerful, modernized socialist country. When the state really protects all rights of citizens stipulated in the constitution and the law, and when the citizens seriously perform all duties laid down in the constitution and the law, the country will be prosperous and powerful and the people will live in peace and become well-off.

The rights and duties of citizens restrict and promote each other. The more extensive the rights of citizens are and the more secure their rights are, the more citizens will feel the superiority of the socialist system and consequently raise their ideological consciousness, work with greater enthusiasm and perform their duties more consciously and more faithfully. The citizens actively perform their duties for the purpose of creating conditions for better enjoying their rights. Marx pointed out: "Rights can never go beyond the economic structure of society and the cultural development conditioned by the economic structure." The rights of citizens are restricted by material and cultural conditions. Only by seriously performing their duties and accelerating the state's economic and cultural development can the citizens enjoy increasingly greater rights in various fields and have a better guarantee for their rights.

In upholding the principle that the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties, we must fight against two kinds of mistaken ideas and misdeeds. First is the idea of seeking privileges, as cherished by a few cadres. These cadres think that the duties of citizens stipulated in the constitution and the law are laid down for the ordinary people and that they themselves may enjoy rights and even privileges outside the law. The second is the anarchical idea among some people in society. These people hold that since they enjoy freedom of speech, press, assembly, association, prodcesion and demonstration, they can do what they want to do. Once they are criticized and interfered with, they will say that "this is against human rights." In view of this situation, the following articles have been added to the draft: "No organization or individual shall enjoy privileges that transcend the constitution and the law," "when exercising their freedoms and rights, citizens must not infringe upon the interests of the state, of society and of the collective, or upon the lawful freedoms and rights of other citizens" and "citizens are dutybound to safeguard the security, honor and interests of the motherland; acts damaging to the security, honor and interests of the motherland are prohibited." They are entirely necessary.

The articles on the fundamental rights and duties of citizens are an extremely important part of the content of the constitution. The exercise of rights of citizens and the performing of their duties according to law are compatible with the fundamental interests of the state and the citizens. We must seriously discuss the draft of the revised constitution and clarify the principle that the rights of citizens are inseparable from their duties, so that after the new constitution has been adopted we can exercise the rights of citizens better and perform the duties of citizens more consciously.

EDITORIAL URGES EQUALITY AMONG NATIONALITIES

[Editorial: "The Fundamental Guarantee for the Quality, Unity and Common Prosperity of Nationalities"]

[Text] At present, people of various nationalities in our country are enthusiastically discussing the "draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China." The draft of this revised constitution has recorded the revolutionary results of the arduous struggle of the Chinese people and summed up the experiences and lessons of the past 30 years or so since the founding of new China. It is in accord with the national conditions and the orientation of the development of our country and reflects the common aspirations of the people of various nationalities.

One of the basic contents and spirits of the revised constitution is strengthening nationality unity and national unity, developing the socialist relationships between different nationalities, guaranteeing equal rights for the minority nationalities, expanding nationality regional autonomy, and speeding up the economic and cultural development in the minority areas for the common prosperity of the Chinese nation. The revised constitution has carried forward the correct principles, which were contained in the 1949 "common programs" and the 1954 Constitution, concerning the question of minority nationalities. Apart from that, new stipulations have been made in accordance with the abundant practical experiences and thus the revised constitution has become perfect and substantial in content. This conforms with the common interests of the people of various nationalities and reflects the fact that the people of minority nationalities fully enjoy equal rights and have become the masters of their own affairs in the big family of the socialist motherland.

The preamble and general principles of the draft of the revised constitution point out: "The People's Republic of China is a unified multinational country created commonly by its various nationalities. Socialist relationships of equality, unity and mutual assistance have been established between these nationalities and will continue to be strengthened." "All the nationality autonomous areas are inalienable parts of the People's Republic of China." This is an unchangeable historical conclusion. Over a long period of time, more than 50 nationalities in our country have labored, lived and multiplied in the vast land of China.

Although turmoil and divisions have occurred in the past, a unitary multinational country has always been the main aspect of historical development. In modern times, various nationalities in our country were oppressed by imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat capitalism. Under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party, they carried out great revolutionary struggle and succeeded in achieving the great victory of the new democratic revolution and founded the People's Republic of China. The history of the past 30 years or so has proved that only by upholding the four basic principles and constantly consolidating and developing the socialist nationality relations of equality, unity and mutual help and the unification of the motherland, can various nationalities in our country exert their common efforts to establish a powerful socialist country. Thus, the political, economic and cultural development of various nationalities will be truly guaranteed and invasion by and subversive activities of foreign countries resisted. Any activity of dividing our nationalities violates the common interests of various nationalities and fundamental interests of the specific nationality itself. Therefore, such activities have been cast aside by the people of various nationalities.

Important stipulations have been made in the draft of the revised constitution to guarantee that various nationalities will enjoy their equal rights. Article 4 of the general principles reiterates: "All nationalities in the People's Republic of China are equal. The state protects the lawful rights and interests of the various minority nationalities." Article 2 stresses: All citizens of the People's Republic of China are equal to enjoy the rights prescribed by the constitution and the law and at the same time have the duty to abide by the constitution and the law. Article 3 points out: All the minority nationalities are entitled to appropriate representation in the NPC; minority nationalities are entitled to appropriate representation in the NPC Standing Committee. All these stipulations protect nationality equality and the equal rights of various minority nationalities to administer state affairs.

The application of national regional autonomy is the basic policy of the party and state for solving the nationality questions. It ensures the rights of the minority peoples to manage local affairs in their national autonomous areas. The organs of self-government of the national autonomous areas, as local state organs, exercise equal functions and powers as other local government organs. However, they also exercise autonomous powers as self-government organs. The draft of the revised constitution restores or retains relevant stipulations in previous constitutions, such as: national autonomy in the areas where nationality minorities live in compact communities; the right of the people's congresses in national autonomous areas to formulate statutes governing the exercising of autonomy as well as to carry out separate regulation in light of the political, economic and cultural characteristics of the local nationalities; the autonomous rights of the self-government organs to administer local finance; the rights of the self-government organs with the approval of the State Council to establish public security forces to maintain local social order; the right of self-government organs to employ the spoken and written language or languages commonly used by the nationality or nationalities in a given area in performing their functions, the restoration of nationality villages and so forth. At the same time, some new and important stipulations have been made in the draft of the revised constitution to clearly define and expand the rights of nationality regional autonomy. These new stipulations mainly include: First, chairmen of autonomous regions, heads of autonomous prefectures and heads of autonomous counties shall be persons of the nationality or nationalities exercising regional autonomy in these areas. Second, the self-government organs of national autonomous areas will independently administer the economic construction of their areas under the guidance of the state plans. Third, in developing natural resources and building enterprises in the national autonomous areas, the state should give due consideration to the interests of those national autonomous areas. Fourth, the self-government organs of national autonomous areas will independently administer education, science, culture, public health and physical culture in their respective areas, take charge of and protect national cultural heritage, develop the good cultures of the nationalities and help them to flourish.

All these stipulations in the new constitution, based on the practical experiences accumulated since the founding of new China, have reflected the correct integration of the centralization and unification of the state and nationality regional autonomy and the correct integration of the common interests of the people of the whole country and the particular interests of the minority nationalities. All this has demonstrated the further development and improvement of the system of nationality regional autonomy in our country under the new historical conditions. Article 124 of the draft of the revised constitution stresses: "The state safeguards the right to nationality autonomy of the self-government organs of national autonomous areas in the implementation of the laws and policies of the state according to the local conditions." This is a complete and scientific explanation of the right of nationality autonomy. During the 10 chaotic years, there were some erroneous acts of neglecting and not respecting the right of nationality autonomy in the autonomous areas. They have now been corrected. We should continue to exert our efforts to prevent and overcome their recurrence. At the same time, we should prevent and overcome the erroneous acts of neglecting unified leadership, plans and policies.

In the new era, speeding up the economic and cultural development in the minority regions to gradually eliminate the de facto inequality between nationalities, which has been left over from history, is also the party's basic task in the minority regions. We should persist in implementing the guiding principle of combining state aid and local self-reliant efforts in this respect. The draft of the revised constitution stipulates: "In accordance with the characteristics and demands of various nationality minorities, the state unswervingly helps the minority regions speed up their economic and cultural development to promote the common prosperity of various nationalities of the whole country." "The state gives financial, material and technical assistance to minority nationalities to accelerate their economic and cultural development." "The state helps the national autonomous areas train large numbers of cadres, specialized personnel and skilled workers from among the nationality or nationalities in a given area." All these are important conditions for changing the economic and cultural backwardness of the minority nationalities. With the improvement of the state finances and economy year by year, the state will give more help to the minority nationalities. Party organizations and the self-government organs in various minority regions should combine state aid with their self-reliant efforts so that the economy and culture in various minority regions will develop more rapidly.

The draft of the revised constitution also stresses: "The state upholds and develops the relationship of equality, unity and mutual assistance between all the nationalities of China. Discrimination or oppression with regard to any of the nationalities, and acts which undermine the unity between them are prohibited; bit nationality chauvinism and local nationality chauvinism must be opposed." Citizens of our country "are dutybound to safeguard the unity of the country and the unity of all its nationalities." The unity of the country and the unity of all nationalities in China is where the fundamental interests of the people of all nationalities throughout the country lies. The socialist relationships between different nationalities, which are marked by equality, unity and mutual assistance, have taken shape in China. It was not easy for us to attain this objective. Relations between all nationalities in China -- between the Han people and the minority nationalities, or between the minority nationalities -- are interdependent and they cannot be separated from each other. To maintain and develop such nationality relations is the sacred duty of the people of various nationalities, and cadres of various nationalities in particular. Over the past 30 years or so since the founding of new China, we have accumulated abundant experiences and lessons in this respect. The most important thing which we should do is provide people of various nationalities and their cadres in particular with education on national policies and nationality unity. While paying attention to preventing and overcoming the Han nationality chauvinism (the main nationality chauvinism in our country), we should also do our best to prevent and overcome local nationality chauvinism. In a region mostly inhabited by a certain minority nationality, the people of this minority nationality should also pay attention to preventing and overcoming local nationality chauvinism in handling their relations with the people of other minority nationalities.

We should make a correct distinction between the appropriate nationality feeling and narrow nationalism. With regard to big nationality chauvinism and local nationality chauvinism, we should regard them as contradictions among the people and handle them by the method of persuasion and education. We should neither pin political labels on people nor categorize people on this basis.

In our country, the nationality question is a strategic question which is related with the unification of the motherland, consolidation of frontier defenses, stability and unity and the four modernizations. The basic policy of the party and state is to promote equality, unity, national autonomous regions and common prosperity for nationalities. Various stipulations made in the draft of the revised constitution on the nationality question have a vital bearing on the interests of the minority nationalities and the fundamental interests of the people of various nationalities throughout the country. People of minority nationalities should actively take part in the discussions of the draft of the revised constitution and exercise their rights to be the masters of their own country. According to the conditions of the minority national regions which are characterized by vast areas, scattered population and backward culture, the party organizations and people's governments of these regions should strengthen their leadership and conscientiously organize the discussions. In their discussions, the people and cadres of the Han nationality should concern themselves with the problem of minority nationalities and conscientiously study the nationality policy of the party and state. Through the discussions of the draft of the revised constitution, we should provide people of various nationalities with education on nationality policy and nationality unity so that our relations between nationalities will be greatly improved and nationality unity greatly strengthened.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES STATE CHAIRMAN SYSTEM

[Article by Wang Dexiang [3769 1795 4382]: "A Tentative Discussion on Our Country's State Chairman System" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] The state chairman is our country's supreme representative in domestic and international fields. All principles concerning the election, term of office, powers and activities of the state chairman and relevant laws and systems represent our country's state chairman system. This system is an important part of our political system. One of the most important changes in the recently promulgated draft of the revised constitution, as compared with the 1975 and 1978 versions, is the reinstatement of the state chairman, with the state chairman system improved.

In our country, the state chairman system with features peculiar to our country -- the system of chairman of the People's Republic of China -- was first established in 1954. In the "Report on the Draft of the Constitution of the PRC," Comrade Liu Shaoqi pointed out at that time: "In line with the actual conditions of our country and with the experience in establishing the supreme state organ of power since the founding of the PRC, the powers of our country's leader are jointly exercised through the NPC Standing Committee elected by the NPC and the chairman of the PRC. Our country's leader is a collective state leader." Comrade Liu Shaoqi's report spelled out in simple and clear language the basic feature of our 1954 Constitution -- the state chairman system. The feature was that only the combination of the NPC Standing Committee and the chairman of the PRC could be the total embodiment of our country's leader in every sense of the word. It was a combination of collective effort (the decisions collectively made by the NPC Standing Committee) and a unitary form of expression (execution by the state chairman as the leader). In actual political life, our state leader played a very important role.

After 1966, due to the 10 years of turmoil, the state chairman was forced to stop playing his role. Comrade Liu Shaoqi, then acting as state chairman, was persecuted to death. When the Constitution was revised in 1975, the post of state chairman was officially abolished, leaving people confused about the state chairman system. After the downfall of the "gang of four," the 1978 Constitution still adhered to the decision of "not appointing a state chairman." The guiding ideology for these two constitutions concerning the matter of state chairmanship was wrong, because it regarded the question of appointing a state chairman as something based on personal whim. This inevitably produced a negative effect on the establishment of state organs in our country. Only since a series of measures were taken, from the third plenary session to the sixth plenary session of the CCP Central Committee, to turn chaos into order has our state chairman system been embodied in the current draft of the revised constitution.

Why should the current draft of the revised constitution call for the reinstatement of the state chairmanship? I believe that there are at least the following several reasons:

First, THIS IS DICTATED BY THE FEATURES THAT MARK THE POST OF STATE CHAIRMAN. Our state chairman is an indispensable part of our political system. The state chairmanship represents not an individual with given powers, but a state organ in a given form. The chairman plays the role of state representative. In a state with a sound legal system, if there is no such post or if the post is not clearly defined, that means that the state lacks a central representative and an authoritative symbol in state activities, thus affecting the results of state activities.

Second, THE APPOINTMENT OF THE STATE CHAIRM AN IS DICTATED BY THE DIVISION OF WORK IN STATE ORGANS. Every state organ is a complete and organic whole. Division of work between state organs involves domestic, diplomatic, legislative, judicial, military, economic and other affairs. The authority and role of the state chairman cannot be replaced by other state organs. He plays the role of supreme representative of the state. If there were not such a post, there would be "a vacancy" in the state administrative structure.

Third, THE APPOINTMENT OF THE STATE CHAIRMAN IS ALSO DICTATED BY EXCHANGES BETWEEN COUNTRIES. Every country is a member of international society. Exchanges between states are unavoidable. The policy of staying in a rut and staying aloof from the affairs of other countries does not work in contemporary relations between states. Everything involving major issues between states, such as the declaration of war, the negotiation of peace, the conclusion of a treaty, the formation of an alliance, and other important state activities call for the personal appearance of the supreme state representative to assert the authority of the state. As far as diplomatic protocol is concerned, when one country is represented by its supreme representative, the other should also be represented by its supreme representative.

Fourth, STATE CHAIRMANSHIP IS SOMETHING LONG KNOWN TO THE MASSES OF OUR COUNTRY AND ITS PRACTICE IN THE PAST PLAYED AN IMPORTANT ROLE. It entirely suits the conditions of our state. The reinstatement of the state chairmanship marks a further improvement in our state system and is conducive to our country's stability and unity.

By saying that it is necessary to reinstate the state chairmanship, we do not mean that we must borrow all the provisions in the 1954 Constitution in their entirety. The draft of the revised constitution has summed up our country's experiences. In light of new conditions and on the basis of carrying on the basic principles and rules embodied in the 1954 Constitution concerning the state chairman system, a new state chairman system of our country has been formed. There have been five major changes in this system.

1. The draft of the revised constitution first clarifies the legal status of the state chairman of our country. The draft says: "The chairman of the PRC represents the state in domestic and international fields." (Article 78)

This provision is clearer than that in the 1954 Constitution. Article 41 in the 1954 Constitution says: "The chairman of the PRC represents the PRC in international matters and receives foreign diplomats. Based on the decisions of the NPC Standing Committee, he appoints or recalls plenipotentiary representatives stationed abroad and approves the treaties concluded with foreign countries." Here it is only stated that the state chairman represents the country in international matters. It says nothing about whether he also represents the country in the domestic field. According to the logic of the language in the relevant provision, the state chairman seems to represent the state in the domestic field only in carrying out various concrete duties. Thus, the legal status of the state chairman is not clear enough. The provision in the draft of the revised constitution based on the general approach to the state leader adopted by most countries explicitly spells out the legal status of the state chairman as a representative of the state in domestic and international fields. This is of great significance in perfecting our country's state chairman system.

2. The basic principles embodied in the 1954 Constitution are upheld. In the state leader systems adopted by various countries, state leadership assumes two forms. The first is individual leadership, the second is collective leadership. It is in collective leadership that the state leader's authority and executive power represent the collective. It is in individual leadership that the leader is a single individual. Given different political systems and different concrete conditions, the authority of leaders of various countries is not quite the same. But generally speaking, the common duties of the leaders of various countries are: presiding over the meetings of one or two chambers of a parliament, promulgating laws and decrees, choosing important state leaders, appointing and recalling plenipotentiary representatives stationed abroad, receiving credentials and the like, approving treaties and important agreements concluded with foreign countries, controlling the armed forces of the whole country, and so forth. The draft of the revised constitution promulgated by our country this time has upheld the basic principle prescribed in the 1954 Constitution, that is, that all activities of the state chairman must be based on the decisions of the NPC and the NPC Standing Committee and are only promulgated or executed by the supreme representative of the state, who cannot make independent decisions on major state issues.

3. One of the changes in the provision in the draft of the revised constitution on our country's state chairman system, compared with that in the 1954 Constitution, is the elimination of such powers of the state leader as calling the supreme state conference, controlling the whole country's armed forces, and so forth. This actually means he is no longer to be involved in government work. In our country, the appointment of the state chairman has its own peculiar features. He is neither the head of government nor the head of the conference. Instead, he represents an independent state organ. The 1954 Constitution said that the state chairman had the right to call the supreme state conference and to act as the chairman of the supreme state conference. The supreme state conference was attended by the chairman and vice chairman of the state, chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, premier of the State Council and other relevant personnel. The supreme state conference could discuss and put forth views on major state issues. This is to say that the then state chairman had the right to interfere in the state's administrative affairs. This system subjected our government work to multiple plural leadership. Supreme state power was also not unified. The state chairman was also involved in administrative affairs. The draft of the revised constitution has changed this, enabling the state chairman to not only become the supreme state representative, but also be relieved from administrative affairs to serve as the supreme state symbol. This is conducive to the division of work between our state organs.

4. The draft of the revised constitution has also made an important change in our country's state chairman system -- the abolition of lifetime tenure that has actually existed for the state chairman.

The draft of the revised constitution says: "Citizens of the PRC at or above the age of 45 have the right to elect and be elected chairman and vice chairman of the PRC. The term of office for the chairman and vice chairman of the PRC is 5 years. The term of office can be renewed when one is reelected, but not for more than two terms." (Article 79) This provision is of great significance. Lifetime tenure for main state leadership posts is a heritage from feudal society. Its existence is likely to give rise to personality cults. It hampers the development of democracy. It may also cause such unhealthy phenomena in state life as taking a conservative approach, staying in a rut, practicing nepotism in appointing people, and so forth. The draft of the revised constitution puts a limit on the terms of office for a state chairman. This helps in putting the whole country on a democratic basis and making the leadership cadres younger.

5. According to the draft of the revised constitution of our country, there is also a vice chairman installed in our country's state chairman system. The vice chairman does not represent any independent state organ. His duty is to help the chairman with his work. As authorized by the state chairman, he can act as a replacement, carrying out part of the latter's duties. For example, the vice chairman can act on behalf of the state chairman in receiving diplomatic envoys, and so forth. In addition, the vice chairman also has his own unique status. This chiefly means that in case of a vacancy occurring in the post of the state chairman of the PRC, the vice chairman can take over as successor. A provision of this nature is also found in constitutions of foreign countries. For example, the U.S. Constitution says: "If the president is dismissed, dies, resigns, or is incapable of discharging the presidential duties, the presidency should be taken over by the vice president." The draft of the revised constitution has simplified the relevant provision in the 1954 Constitution and abolished the provision in the 1954 Constitution stating that the vice chairman shall act on behalf of the chairman when the chairman cannot work for a long period of time for health reasons. Instead, it has added the provision: "When both posts of chairman and vice chairman of the PRC are vacant, the NPC will hold relevant elections. Before a successor is elected, the chairman of the NPC Standing Committee shall temporarily act as chairman." (Article 84) These changes have enabled our state chairman system to be more suited to actual conditions.

GRAIN DEPARTMENTS STRIVE TO INCREASE REVENUES

[Excerpts] Beijing, 6 Jun (XINHUA) -- According to a report by XINHUA reporter Zhang Baode, the grain departments at all levels throughout the country have taken various effective measures since the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee to achieve even better economic results, increase enterprises' revenues and reduce the financial burdens to the state. From 1979 to 1981, they reduced state subsidies by a total of 3.3 billion yuan.

Over a protracted period, grain departments paid little attention to improving economic results and suffered losses from not only wrong policy but also poor management. All this has increased the financial burdens to the state. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the grain departments at all levels, in an effort to improve economic results and reduce financial losses, have mainly adopted the following measures:

1. Gradually change the situation of selling and buying food grain and pay attention to the processing of food and oil bearing crops.

From 1979 to 1981, the grain departments throughout the country set up more than 2,300 noodle shops and bakeries, turning out over 4 billion jin of bread and noodles. Among the 20,000 grain shops, 40 percent sell grain crops in front, while processing grain and oil-bearing crops in the back of the shops. They have processed over 10 billion jin of grain and oil-bearing crops and foodstuffs in a period of 3 years.

2. Make rational use of resources for grain and oil-bearing crops and incessantly carry out the diversified utilization of byproducts from grain and oil-bearing crops. In recent years, enterprises that sell grain and edible oil have made good use of the leftovers and bran cakes in processing peanut, soybean and rice bran oil.

3. Actively buy and sell grain crops at negotiated prices after the grain purchase targets have been fulfilled and overfulfilled.

4. Enthusiastically and steadily implement the economic responsibility system on a trial basis.

After 3 years of strenuous efforts, 70 percent of the 11,000 enterprises that buy and sell grain crops in the country and receive state subsidies have made profits. Ninety percent of the units at the county level in Hunan, Anhui and other provinces that sell and buy grain have netted profits.

FORUM ON OVERSEAS CHINESE EDUCATION HELD

[Excerpts] Beijing, 3 Jun (XINHUA) -- In recent years the number of Overseas Chinese residing abroad and foreign youths of Chinese descent who demanded to return to the country to study Chinese language and culture has been increasing with each passing day. To satisfy their demands and aspirations, the State Council's Overseas Chinese Affairs Office recently held a forum on the educational work of Overseas Chinese continuation schools, exclusively discussing the educational orientation of these schools, improvement of their teaching quality, betterment of their conditions for carrying out educational tasks and other issues.

Attending the forum were responsible persons from Overseas Chinese continuation schools in Beijing, Guangdong and Fujian, cadres of Overseas Chinese education departments and representatives of the departments concerned.

The participants maintained that it is mandatory for Overseas Chinese continuation schools to implement the fundamental principle of "protecting and developing the warm love of Overseas Chinese for their country and their homeland." The forum decided that to propagate the Chinese nation's language and culture among Overseas Chinese residing abroad and foreign youths of Chinese descent shall be the orientation and major task for Overseas Chinese continuation schools.

Lin Xiude and Peng Guanghan, deputy directors of the State Council's Overseas Chinese Affairs Office, were present at the forum.

AFP CITES SPOKESMAN ON U.S. ARMS TO TAIWAN

OW070456 Hong Kong AFP in English 0434 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Excerpt] Beijing, 7 Jun (AFP) -- The Chinese Government today reaffirmed its opposition to any sale of United States arms to Taiwan.

Asked about U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater's comments last week in Taipei, a Foreign Ministry spokesman repeated Beijing's position of principle on the question of arms sales. "We have time and again stated that we are firmly opposed to any arms sales to Taiwan by the United States," the spokesman said.

RENMIN RIBAO ON DEPENDENTS OF TAIWAN PERSONNEL

[Commentary by Mu Yang [4476 2254]: "Who Has Supported Them?"]

[Text] After reading the selected manuscripts of "The Life of the Dependents of the Personnel Who Have Gone to Taiwan," people are very naturally recalling the following event in history: In 1949, when the Kuomintang authorities fled hastily from the mainland, they transported to Taiwan under duress some 2 million military, political and educational personnel of mainland origin, leaving behind several times that number of relatives. Of these, the old, the weak, women and children accounted for a considerable proportion. Viewed from the general situation in the old society, it was very difficult for these people to subsist and some of them might even have met with misfortune. Therefore, for a long time in the past, questions such as "Are they still alive?" "How do they manage to live?" and "How do they fare now?" have become a matter of the greatest concern to the personnel who have gone to Taiwan. Facts speak louder than words. Newsletters such as "Since Daddy Has Gone to Taiwan" and "Her Only Son Is in Taiwan" have supplied the best answers to their questions.

From these reports it will not be difficult for people to note that it is precisely the CCP and the people's government as well as the broad masses of people living under the socialist system that have supported those "orphans," "widows" and old people who have been left behind on the mainland and that have brought up their children into people that are useful to the motherland and the Chinese nation. They are living a pretty good life. I do not think anyone will remain untouched after they have read these reports.

The Kuomintang authorities in Taiwan, however, invariably fly in the face of historical facts and refuse to see the development of the situation. Up to now they still oppose the CCP, the people's government and the people on the mainland and stubbornly refuse to achieve peaceful reunification with the mainland. They have even rejected the proposal of the CCP on the "establishment of transport, trade and postal relations" aimed at creating conditions for the realization of this objective. As far as the numerous personnel who have gone to Taiwan and their family members are concerned, is this not a policy decision that is as unamenable to reason and as unpopular as the one that forced them to sever themselves from their own flesh and blood in 1949!

FURTHER ON VISIT OF U.S. SENATOR GOLDWATER

Visit to Cultural Sites

OW040323 Taipei CNA in English 0234 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Taipei, June 4 (CNA) -- Senator Barry Goldwater said Thursday that he would not visit mainland China even if the Peiping regime invites him to go there. The U.S. senator said that he sees no point in holding talks with the Chinese Communists because communism is against his belief and principles. Goldwater and his party spent Thursday in leisure, visiting the National Palace Museum, Chung Cheng Memorial Hall, and other cultural complexes. In the evening, he attended a dinner given in his honor by National Defense Minister Adm. Sung Chang-chih.

Meanwhile, many people have sent letters and gifts to Goldwater expressing their respect and appreciation to him for his moral courage and support of the Republic of China.

Predeparture Remarks Cited

OW041419 Taipei CNA in English 1400 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Taipei, 4 Jun (CNA) -- U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater Friday reiterated that the United States Government has no intention to amend the "Taiwan Relations Act."

At a pre-departure news conference Goldwater stressed the act is a law passed by a majority at the U.S. Senate. He had not heard any word in his country about amendment or repeal of the act before he came here, he added. The senator told reporters that he does not believe in communism and is disgusted with their behavior, including what the Chinese Communists have done or are attempting to do to the Republic of China. He will not go to the mainland to visit and hold discussions, he stressed.

On U.S. weaponry sales to the Republic of China, the senator said the matter was not mentioned in President Reagan's message to President Chiang Ching-kuo. However, President Reagan has confirmed repeatedly that the U.S. Government will continue to sell arms to the free Chinese Government, Goldwater said, giving the 60-million-U.S.-dollars sale recently submitted by the U.S. President to the Senate as an example. But the United States Government should sell more weapons to the Republic of China, the senator urged.

Goldwater and his wife arrived in Taipei last Saturday for a seven-day visit. During the past several days, he was received by President Chiang and met Premier Sun Yun-hsuan and other Chinese officials. He was pleased to see that President Chiang is in good health. Premier Sun and Mrs Sun said a good-bye to the Goldwaters at the Grand Hotel before they left for Chung Cheng International Airport in the company of Vice Foreign Minister Fredrick F. Chien. At the airport, the visitors were seen off by Defense Minister Sung Chang-chih and Mrs Sung and many Chinese friends.

Further on Remarks to Press

OW051247 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 5 Jun 82

[Text] U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater said today in Taipei that the U.S. Government would have to make a decision on the proposed sale of F-5G high performance jet fighters to the Republic of China by the end of this month. However, when asked by reporters, a spokesman for the Republic of China's Ministry of National Defense declined to make any comment concerning the proposed U.S. sale. According to a CNA report, State Department spokesman Alan Romberg, at a regular briefing today, said that the U.S. policy toward the Republic of China and the sales of military weapons remains unchanged.

Speaking at an airport news conference shortly before his departure, Goldwater said he would urge President Reagan to get rid of certain State Department officials who, he says, are giving Reagan and Taiwan a bad time. Goldwater did not mention the names of those he would like to see fired, yet he said he has been battling with the department for more than 30 years. He said President Reagan should have cleaned the house of the State Department long ago. At the Grand Hotel press conference, Goldwater announced his plan to meet with Reagan as soon as the President returns from the present European trip, and he also plans to meet with Vice President Bush and Secretary of State Haig. The senator, who has been in the Republic of China for a 6-day visit, said that in view of an increasing trade between the United States and the Republic of China, rather than setting up additional Republic of China offices in the United States, the idea would be an exchange of ambassadors or official representatives of the two countries.

In response to the recent invitation from Teng Hsiao-ping asking Goldwater to visit Communist China, Goldwater responded that he is strongly against communism and it would be entirely against his principles to go to Peking [as heard] and talk to the communist leaders. He did say, however, that he was interested in making a visit to Chungking and Kunming with his wife in the future. Goldwater also repeated that he had told the reporters in Taipei that he thinks there is nobody in Washington suggesting abrogation of the Taiwan Relations Act. [Begin Goldwater recording] And I have heard no word in Washington about anybody wanting to change the Taiwan act. Of course, every time somebody goes to visit mainland China, that is about all they hear from Mr Teng is: Amend the act, repeal the act, make it impossible to sell arms to Taiwan, and then we can move in. But we say no. Now I cannot speak for the extent of 5 years, 10 years, 40 years from now, but I don't think that the attitude in my country would support any repeal or altering of that act. [end recording]

Senator Goldwater and his wife concluded their visit to the Republic of China at 10:50 a.m., when they boarded a China airline flight for the United States. Among the well-wishers at the airport were Republic of China's Vice Foreign Minister Frederick Chien and his wife and the minister of national defense, Sung Chang-chih, and his wife. The Legislative Yuan of the Republic of China decided today to enter Senator Goldwater's speech made at the American Chamber of Commerce luncheon meeting last Wednesday into the national archives of the Legislative Yuan.

TAIPEI COMMENTS ON TAIWAN RELATIONS ACT

[Text] Howard Baker, the majority leader of the U.S. Senate, says he is going home from Peking [as heard] to seek an amendment of the Taiwan Relations Act. The Taiwan Relations Act is the U.S. law which provides for arms sales to the Republic of China and also implies that the Americans will give assistance in the event of aggression against Taiwan.

Presumably, any such amendment would terminate the arms sales provisions and the promises to intervene if the communists attempt to cross the Taiwan Strait. The Chinese Communists might as well be proposing the amendment themselves. They have been demanding that the arms sales end either immediately or according to a time schedule stipulated by the Americans.

As for armed action against Taiwan, the communists say that is their business. According to the Japanese, U.S. Vice President George Bush warned Peking not to use force in attempting to gain sovereignty over Taiwan. The Chinese Communists replied that the use of force is a reflection of their plan toward sovereignty.

The longer the United States talks to Red China about Taiwan, the closer things come to the Chinese Communists' truth. Senator Baker, an honorable man who is always considered an intelligent as well as an honest one, is now prepared to do the Chinese Communists' bidding on the Taiwan Relations Act which he supported.

President Reagan has been a strong batter for the Taiwan Relations Act. He has said that he upholds its terms. Will he sign an amendment changing those terms to the point of leaving the Republic of China without a source for defensive arms? That seems unlikely. However, so much has changed in the U.S. relationship with the Republic of China that it is impossible to be sure. Can the Congress be persuaded to vote for such an amendment? No recent polls have been made of Congress on the China problem. Therefore, it is hard to say. How much of an impression have the Chinese Communists made with their threat to break or delimit relations with the United States? How many congressmen think this is important? How many of them really believe that the Chinese Communists would be a useful and reliable ally against the Soviet Union? It is unlikely that Congress will do anything this year. A congressional election is scheduled for November. All of the members of the House of Representatives and a third of the members of the Senate will be involved. It is already June. Congressmen seeking reelection are not going to become involved in the controversy over the Taiwan Relations Act and the sale of arms to defend the people of Taiwan.

The Republic of China's deep concern involves U.S. morality. When President Carter broke relations with the Republic of China and recognized the Chinese Communists, Americans were aware of the necessity to protect Taiwan against communist aggression. The U.S. Government emphasized its policy of unification only through peaceful means. Congress thought pious expressions were not enough and went on to write the Taiwan Relations Act. Although the law went farther than President Carter wished, he signed it anyway. He said later in Peking that the United States never promised the Chinese Communists that it would stop selling arms to the Republic of China. In the last 13 years, the United States has made many decisions with adverse affects on the Republic of China and Taiwan. However, the Americans have always said they will never desert the Republic of China, they will never stand by and see the people of Taiwan communized against their will. Many people of Taiwan still believe in these assurances; some do not. Some say that the Republic of China can only depend on itself and must develop its own weapons to assure survival against a communist attack. This would be a good time for the President to speak out and clarify the U.S. position. If he still stands on his promises to the Republic of China, the Taiwan Relations Act is a safe reliance.

CHENG CHIEN-JEN NAMED TO FOREIGN MINISTRY

[Excerpts] By a decree released on 1 June, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs appointed Cheng Chien-jen [4453 1696 0086], director of the Department of North American Affairs of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, as an adviser to the Coordination Council for North American Affairs [CCNAA] in the United States.

The Ministry of Foreign Affairs has also decided that Cheng's vacancy at the Department of North American Affairs will be filled by Yen Hsiao-chang, now chief secretary of the CCNAA.

DELEGATION TO SEEK HONG KONG INVESTMENTS

OW050614 Taipei CNA in English 0312 GMT 5 Jun 82

[Text] Taipei, 5 Jun (CNA) -- The government is stepping up its efforts to attract Hong Kong companies to invest in Taiwan. For this purpose, a trade mission consisting of officials from the Investment Commission and of specialists from the Industrial Technology Research Institute will visit electronics firms in Hong Kong in September. They will discuss with them opportunities here for technical cooperation and joint ventures, as well as the possibility of supplying them with parts made here. The purchase of parts from the Hong Kong firms will also be on the agenda. Vice Economic Affairs Minister M.T. Wu said that the local electronics industry is the area which is most likely to attract more investment from Hong Kong. In the textile dyeing and finished field, the Ministry of Economic Affairs has been in touch with a West German company in this line. It has asked the firm to make its technology and machinery available for a possible joint venture with local firms. The dyeing and finishing of textile products is known as one of the weak spots of the industry both here and in Hong Kong. Firms here have to ship their high-quality products to Japan for finishing.

ZHAO ZIYANG SPEAKS ON SPECIAL ZONES, HONG KONG

[Dispatch from WEN WEI PO Japan correspondent Chi Hsi-ching: "Zhao Ziyang Speaks on Development of Special Zones, Comments on Relevant Hong Kong and Macao Issues"]

[Text] Tokyo, 4 Jun -- Premier Zhao Ziyang was interviewed at the request of WEN WEI PO and TA KUNG PAO correspondents on the train on his way to Kyoto following his visit to Nara. Zhao Ziyang spoke on China's policy of opening up to the world, the special economic zones, and issues of concern to Hong Kong and Macao compatriots.

Question: Last year you visited the special economic zones. While the motherland is stressing persistent practice of the policy of opening up to the world, what new views do you have on the Shenzhen and Zhuhai special economic zones?

Answer: There has been no change in our policy of opening up to the outside world, and we must continue to operate the special zones. The special zones represent an experiment, as far as China is concerned. There will not necessarily be any increase in the number of special zones in the near future, but we must continue to run the Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamen zones that have already been opened up. As for special zone legislation, this will be gradually perfected. Of course, in practice, we have found that certain laws need to be supplemented. Certain people outside China hold that the special zone laws are too simple. No doubt the solution of this problem will involve going through a process. This is because the special zones are a new topic. Since China has decided on the guiding principle of running special zones, and this is an unswerving principle, it is certain that we will have to advance from imperfection to perfection. We still need to rely on practice to decide what laws to make and what things to perfect. At present, China is launching a drive against crime in the economic field. There is no relation at all between this and the policy of opening up to the world. Our main goal in this drive is to solve the problem of honesty. Precisely, we need to open up to the world and uphold the principle of running special zones, and thus we have to guard against certain possible phenomena of corruption. Far from there being any contradiction between this and the policy of opening up to the world, this drive can enable us to practice in a healthy way the policy of opening up to the world and the principle of running special zones. There would be no need to do this if we practiced a closed-door policy. It is wrong to think that we are "drawing back" by striking at economic crime. Any economically successful country in the world takes measures to prevent the emergence of decay. Acting in this way does not mean organizing a campaign or restoring the "leftist" things of the past. Our methods in this respect are aimed at Chinese people in China. As for foreign businessmen who follow international conventions, such as practicing the sales commission method, there are no problems for us to make a fuss over. However, no individual in China can accept a sales commission. This is the Chinese people's own law.

Question: You stressed on many occasions in Tokyo that China must prepare in the 1980's for vigorous economic development in the 1990's. What can the Hong Kong and Macao compatriots do in this respect?

Answer: During most of the 1980's, that is, throughout the entire period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan and part of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we want to achieve two things. First, we must tackle the question of reforming economic management, and rationalize economic management. Second, in material terms, we must carry out technical reforms in the existing enterprises and also promote the so-called infrastructure, that is, energy, communications, telecommunications, urban construction, and other areas. A country must have a relatively good infrastructure in order to truly develop its economy, and this is precisely China's weak link. Hong Kong is a trade and finance center, and is also the birdge by which we import advanced technology. I hold that there are many things the Hong Kong and Macao compatriots can do, whether in the technical reform of our existing enterprises or in building China's infrastructure, either through cooperation or through direct investment. Foreign and Overseas Chinese capital in Hong Kong can also enter China to take part in exploiting our resources, energy and so on. China is politically stable, and we guarantee the necessary profit to investors.

UN SPECIAL SESSION ON DISARMAMENT OPENS

[Text] United Nations, June 7 (XINHUA) -- The second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament opened here today in a bid to create a new momentum to halt and reverse the spiraling arms race. The Soviet Union and the United States, which possess the biggest quantities of nuclear and conventional armaments, are expected to be the main targets of blame for their global arms race.

The session will focus attention on reviewing the implementation of the decisions and recommendations adopted by the first disarmament session of 1978 and work out new measures to lessen the danger of war, especially nuclear war, and to bring the arms race under control.

Ismat Kittani, elected as the president of the session, said in his opening speech that the session was convened at a time "when the mounting threats to international peace and security are not in the distant future, but are alrady upon us." Commenting on the progress of disarmament since the first special session, Kittani said, "Not a single weapon has been destroyed over the past four years as a result of a disarmament agreement," and "the situation has deteriorated seriously in several important respects."

He pointed out that "world expenditures for armaments have now passed the 600 dollars billion figure annually," and "since the end of World War II, some 40 per cent of the world's research and development expenditures have been directed at achieving military ends."

U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said in his speech that the quest of the international community for means to halt the arms race had achieved some limited success, but, "there was no abatement in the ever more menacing growth of nulcear and other arsenals. The main objective -- to arrest and reverse this process -- had not been achieved." He described the programme of action adopted by the first U.N. special disarmament session, as largely remaining "a dead letter."

Criticizing the conception of "limited nuclear war," Perez de Cuellar asserted, "once a nuclear exchange begins, there will be no way to contain it within a pre-determined framework." "There is no possiblity of winning a nuclear war in any conceivable sense of the word 'win'," he stressed.

There will be 16 heads of states or governments, 4 vice presidents or deputy prime ministers and 46 foreign ministers out of 157 participating countries who will address the general debate on the international situation.

During the session scheduled to end on July 9, a number of peace rallies and other activities in connection with disarmament are expected to take place outside the U.N. Headquarters to exert more pressure on disarmament. Among other things, thousands of peace marchers from Asia, North America and West Europe, walking across the United States from Los Angeles; San Francisco; Washington, D.C.; New Orleans and Montreal; arrived here today to greet the opening of the session; an Olympic torch symbolizing world peace was brought here today from Greece. The peace campaign will be culminated by a half million strong mass rally on July 12.

Huang Hua's Activities

[Text] United Nations, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, leader of the Chinese Government delegation to the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament, was the guest of honor at a luncheon today given by U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

The Chinese foreign minister also paid a courtesy call on Ismat T. Kittani, president of the special disarmament session, and met with Belgian Minister for Foreign Affairs Leo Tindemans this afternoon.

Yesterday, Huang Hua gave a luncheon in honor of Ieng Sary, leader of the government delegation and deputy prime minister in charge of foreign affairs of Democratic Kampuchea.

CHEN MUHUA MEETS UNIDO EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

OW071659 Beijing XINHUA in English 1635 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, met this afternoon with Abd-El Rahman Khane, executive director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization.

Chen Muhua thanked U.N.I.D.O. for its preparations for the China investment promotion meeting, which opened today. Both sides expressed satisfaction with the cooperation in the past years, and exchanged views on further cooperation. Present were Nessim Shallon, resident coordinator for U.N. operational activities in China, and Wei Yuming, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade.

PUBLICATION CITED ON USSR, U.S. ARMS EXPORTS

[Text] United Nations, May 29 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union overtook the United States as the world's leading arms salesman in the period 1979-81, said the SIPRI 1982 yearbook.

The Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI) is an independent research organization. Statistics compiled by SIPRI show that, averaging the past three years, the Soviet Union accounted for 36.5 percent of major weapons sales, in contrast to the United States share of 33.6 percent.

In its 1981 yearbood based on a four-year average, the institute had reported the U.S. share of total major-weapon exports at 43.3 percent, or 24.89 billion U.S. dollars, in contrast to the Soviet Union's 27.4 percent share, or 15.76 billion dollars of a total of 57.46 billion dollars.

It is believed that the current yearbook's statistics reflect a true increase in weapons shipments by the Soviet Union. There was a big increase in Soviet arms exports to India, Cuba and countries in the Middle East and North Africa. The Soviet arms sales to the Third World in 1981 amounted to 2.4 billion dollars, compared to the 2.67 billion dollars of the United States. The current yearbood doesn't provide any dollar estimates for total major-weapon shipments by either the Soviet Union or the U.S. The yearbook pointed out that "the Soviet Union uses arms transfers as an important instrument for maintaining and expanding its influence in the Third World; arms transfers play a greater role than economic aid or trade in this respect."

NORTH KOREAN ARMY DELEGATION CONTINUES VISIT

Meeting With Xu Xiangqian

OW071234 Beijing XINHUA in English 1223 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Xu Xiangqian, member of the Political Bureau of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee and vice-chairman of the committee's Military Commission, met here today with a goodwill delegation from the Korean People's Army led by Lieutenant General Pak Chung-kuk, vice-minister of the People's Armed Forces of Korea. Xu, 82, walked to the entrance of the meeting hall to shake hands with the visitors and have pictures taken with them, followed by a cordial talk in the hall. Xu told the visitors: "China and Korea are socialist countries. We share a close, fraternal relationship. Through the visit, you have brought the friendly feelings of the Korean people and armed forces to the Chinese people and armed forces."

Pak Chung-kuk said that he and his delegation were struck during the visit by the rigorous military training of the Chinese soldiers to raise their combat capabilities.

Xu wished the Korean people, under the leadership of President Kim Il-song, greater achievements in their socialist revolution and construction. At the end of the 30-minute meeting, the Korean visitors wished Xu Xiangqian good health.

Present were Director of the Foreign Affairs Bureau of the National Defense Ministry Chai Chengwen, Deputy Director Zhao Chunzheng, Ambassador to China of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea Chon Myong-su, and the military, naval and air attache of the Korean Embassy Senior Colonel Kim Byong-ho.

["Newsletter from Japan" by correspondent Cheng Bowei [7115 3124 1792]. "The Tremendous Attraction of the Three-Point Principle for Sino-Japanese Economic Relations"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang has successfully completed his 6-day official visit to Japan. This visit not only helped to promote mutual understanding between China and Japan but will also give new impetus to Sino-Japanese relations of friendship and cooperation.

Since the normalization of Sino-Japanese relations in 1972, the exchanges between the two countries in the political, economic, cultural and other fields have reached an unprecedentedly far-ranging extent. This is extremely welcome. How to ensure the continuous advance of the relations of friendship and cooperation between the two countries in the future in the new conditions, and make them still more fruitful and extensive, is an issue of great concern to people. During his visit to Japan, Premier Zhao expressed the aspirations of the people and conformed to the demands of the new era by clearly putting forward a three-point principle for developing Sino-Japanese economic relations -- peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, and duration and stability. The proposition of the three-point principle has evoked a positive response in Japan. YOMIURI SHIMBUN said in an editorial, "The summit meeting agreed to Premier Zhao's proposal on the three-point principle of peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, and duration and stability in developing future Sino-Japanese relations. This should be evaluated highly." ASAHI SHIMBUN said in its editorial: "That the two governments have agreed to develop Sino-Japanese relations along the lines of the three-point principle shows that they have chosen relations of stable and sustained cooperation. This can be described as a welcome and wise choice."

During his visit to Japan, Premier Zhao gave an account of China's economic readjustment to the Japanese Government and economic circles; he explained its necessity and reviewed the successes already gained, and also repeatedly expounded on the question of the open-door policy. Speaking at a lunch given by economic groups, he said: "China's economy mainly relies on its own efforts, and at the same time we need to extensively absorb and learn the good points of other countries, and maintain our open-door policy." At a welcoming rally staged by friendly organizations, he said "The open-door policy is a national strategy we must maintain for a long time to come." Premier Zhao stated, China desires to work together with friends in Japanese economic circles to build and develop Sino-Japanese economic cooperation relations of peace and friendship, equality and mutual benefit, and duration and stability.

During Premier Zhao's visit to Japan, the Japanese side expressed a strong desire to develop Sino-Japanese economic relations. Japan's demands were still more urgent as regards exploiting resources. When talking with Premier Zhao, Premier Suzuki said that Japanese corporations also have the right conditions for taking part in tendering for South China Sea oil-drilling and exploration. He was very concerned for this matter. Japanese Chamber of Commerce Director Nagano said at the lunch given by economic groups for Premier Zhao that Japan hopes to take part in exploiting China's resources in oil, coal, nonferrous metals and so on. A number of Diet members also spoke on cooperation on exploitation of China's resources in their talks with Premier Zhao. While accompanying the Chinese guests on their visits, Japanese Ambassador to China Katori also spoke to Premier Zhao and State Economic Commission Vice Chairman Gan Ziyu on cooperating in exploiting resources. He said to Gan Ziyu, Japan is willing to provide advanced equipment to exploit the Bohai oilfield, and also hopes to take part in drilling and exploration in the South China Sea. It can be said that Japanese views are fully united on the issue of actively requesting cooperative exploitation of China's resources. This is a major reason why the three-point principle for economic cooperation relations advocated by Premier Zhao was warmly welcomed. It is precisely because in cooperative exploitation of resources each helps supply what the other needs and both sides benefit that the two premiers adopted a positive attitude on this matter in their talks. The 2 June communique aid, the leaders of the two countries "unanimously hold that, proceeding from the long-term view, promoting cooperation between China and Japan in the field of exploiting resources is extremely significant."

Friendly exchanges and cooperation between China and Japan have undergone nearly a decade of testing since relations between the two countries were normalized in 1972. Tremendous results have already been achieved. In the future, with the efforts of the governments and peoples of the two countries, and on the basis of the three-point principle, the economic cooperation and exchanges in other fields between them will certainly enhance the tremendous achievements of Sino-Japanese friendship.

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "A Successful Visit"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang returns today from his successful state visit to Japan, which both countries consider of profound and far-reaching significance. We welcome our premier back from his first official visit to Japan and the glad tidings he is bringing back from that friendly, neighbourly country.

Premier Zhao's visit, and the fact that Japanese Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki will return it later this year, climax the first 10 years of cordial co-operation since the normalization of relations between the two countries in 1972. Never has three been a time marked by such understanding between the peoples and such statemanship of the leaders of both countries. We are pleased that they are now committed to furthering this amicability on a lasting basis and for decades to come.

Based on the achievements and lessons of the years since the founding of the People's Republic, China has finally found the path to socialism suitable to her conditions, and after three years of readjustment beginning in 1979, has entered a period of steady progress towards modernization. As the premier reaverred in Tokyo, China will not deviate from her course towards socialist modernization unless compelled to do so by large-scale external invasion.

Economic co-operation between China and Japan is necessitated by the times, facilitated by geographical proximity and, most importantly, favoured by the people of both nations. There is every reason to believe that the three principles of friendship in peace, equality and mutual benefit, and durability and stability will continue to govern Sino-Japanese economic relationship. Both countries have agreed that it is specially significant from a long-term point of view for them to co-operate in developing China's rich energy and other resources.

The general principles of China's foreign policy continue to be opposition to hegemonism and maintenance of world peace. The two countries have jointly reaffirmed that they will continue their efforts to safeguard peace and stability in Asia and the whole world, from their respective standpoints and together with other peace-loving nations.

The present international situation is characterized by growing tension and unrest. The independence, security, sovereignty and territorial integrity of some countries are being undermined by open aggression and foreign interference. And there are serious threats to the peace in the Asian-Pacific region and other parts of the world. Whatever changes in the international situation, it is hoped that the development of amicable relations between China and Japan, which forms an important part of China's foreign policy, will not be affected.

It was very timely for Chinese and Japanese leaders to have had the opportunity to exchange views on the international situation and bilateral relations. We believe both sides have been much benefited by their cordial, frank and constructive exchange of views.

Autumn will come to the capital in a few months. The skies will be clear and the air crisp and cool when Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki is welcomed in Beijing's best season. We expect a new upsurge of friendship to mark the next and following decades of mutually beneficial and very cordial relations between Japan and China.

IMELDA MARCOS ARRIVES IN BEIJING FOR VISIT

She was welcomed at the airport by Yang Shangkun, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress; Han Nianlong, advisor to the Foreign Ministry, and his wife, Wang Zhen; Chai Shufan, chairman of the Board of Directors of the China State Shipbuilding Corporation; and Mo Yanzhong, Chinese ambassador to the Philippines. A Chinese boy presented the first lady with a bouquet.

She is accompanied on the visit by government ministers and other high-ranking officials of the Philippines. Philippine Ambassador to China Fortunato U. Abat and embassy officials were present.

Meeting With Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang met in Zhongnanhai here this afternoon with Madame Imelda Romualdez Marcos, wife of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, minister of human settlements and governor of Metro Manila.

Zhao Ziyang welcomed Mrs. Marcos on her fourth visit to China. "Since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the Philippines in 1975, our relations have developed very well. The Chinese government is satisfied with it," he said. He spoke highly of the contributions the Philippine president and his wife had made to the development of Sino-Philippine friendship.

The premier briefed the guests on China's political situation and economic development.

The first lady said that she was very pleased the Chinese premier met her shortly after he returned from Japan. "The Philippines and China are close neighbors. Your achievements in national construction are also ours, we are greatly interested in what is happening in China, so we have often come here."

They also exchanged views on international issues.

Zhao Ziyang asked her to convey the Chinese Government's and his own cordial greetings and wishes to the Philippine president.

Present were Teodoro Pena, minister of natural resources; M. Collantes, deputy minister of foreign affairs; Edmundo Reyes, commissioner of immigration; Mrs. Edmundo Reves, minister of state for social service and development; Jesus Tanchanco, administrator of the national food authority; and General Fabian Ver, chief of staff of the Armed Forces of the Phillipines. Philippine Ambassador to China Fortunato U. Abat was also present.

Also in attendance were Hu Xueqian, Chinese vice-minister of foreign affairs; Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry; other officials Lu Xuejian, Chai Shufan and Han Kehua; and designated Chinese Ambassador to the Philippines Mo Yanzhong.

Banquet by Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet in the Great Hall of the People Monday evening in honor of Philippine First Lady Imelda Romualdez Marcos. The premier and the first lady both spoke highly of the friendship between China and the Philippines.

Zhao Ziyang said: "The first lady is a respected and well-known friend of the Chinese people. She has visited China three times as a good-will envoy of the Filipino people and made important contributions to the promotion and development of the relations between China and the Philippines." The premier recalled the warm reception he received last August when he visited the Philippines. "During my visit, I had an opportunity to see the successes made by the Filipino Government and people under the leadership of President Marcos in economic and cultural development. That visit left with me pleasant and unforgettable memories," he said.

Premier Zhao Ziyang said: His Excellency President Marcos and the first lady arrived in Beijing today seven years ago for a good-will visit to China. "During that visit, our two governments issued a joint communique, proclaiming the establishment of diplomatic relations between the two countries, and the amicable relations between China and the Philippines thus entered upon a new stage. In the past seven years, our friendly ties have developed smoothly. The two countries have carried out fruitful cooperation in the economic, trade, cultural and scientific and technological fields and cooperated in the joint efforts for the maintenance of peace and security in Southeast Asia and the establishment of a new international economic order. The exchange of visits between leaders of our two countries, in particular, has deepened our mutual understanding and trust and laid a solid and sound basis for our friendship. I am convinced that the current visit to China by the first lady will make new contributions to the further strengthening of the friendly ties and cooperation between China and the Philippines," he concluded.

In her speech, the first lady said that "our visit takes its meaning from the friendship between our peoples and governments, and that brief as it may be, we fervently hope that our stay will serve to deepen and strengthen relations between China and the Philippines.

"It has been well said that kinship between nations is not reckoned according to size or age, but by the intangible things that peoples and nations share with each other. We know this well in the bonds of friendship that have grown between your country and mine in the course of nearly a thousand years.

"Historians tell us that as early as the 10th century, the Philippines enjoyed commercial and cultural relations with China, seat of one of the great civilizations of the world." She said: "In a sense, therefore, we are brothers. And it is fully in this spirit of close affinity tht today we mutually strive to expand the areas of cooperation between our peoples.

"By the accidents of history, relations betwee China and the Philippines were disrupted for a time. But once again we find, to use the words of President Marcos, the old bridges restored and a new time of opportunity for our relations to broaden and prosper. What began in exchanges and contact between our peoples in ancient times, we can today deepen and enrich, as we have indeed deepened and enriched, in ties of cooperation and amity between modern states: through the venues of diplomacy, of trade and culture."

Present were Yang Shangkun, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, Wu Xueqian, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1617 GMT on 7 June carries a report on this banquet which adds the following to the end of the item: "...to the Foreign Ministry, responsible persons of other government departments as well as notables who have visited the Philippines Huang Zhen, Wang Bingnan and Mo Yangzhong [5459 3601 1813], Chinese ambassador to the Philippines who will soon leave for that post.

[The banquet was held in a cordial and pleasant atmosphere. With the accompaniment of the national orchestra of the broadcasting art troupe that has visited the Philippines, the first lady sang a Filipino song on the spur of the moment to the warm applause of all present. Philippine Ambassador to China Fortunato U. Abat and diplomats from the embassy were also present.]

Meetings with Deng Xiaoping

[Text] Beijing, June 8 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, met here this morning with Philippine First Lady Madame Imelda Romualdez Marcos, minister of human settlements and governor of Metro Manila, and principal members of her party.

Vice-Chairman Deng thanked Madame Marcos for taking time out to visit her Chinese friends. He spoke highly of the smooth development of Sino-Philippine relations. "This is the result of the common efforts of our two peoples," Deng Xiaoping said. During her third visit to China three years ago, Madame Imelda R. Marcos also met with Deng Xiaoping.

She said that the Philippines and China have had diplomatic relations for seven years and that bilateral relations are now closer than at any time. The Philippine first lady said that she and her party are very glad to find that China has made rapid progress. "Your progress is an encouragement to the Third World countries," she said.

Deng Xiaoping also exchanged views with Madame Imelda R. Marcos on major international and Asian issues.

Vice-chairman Deng asked Madame Marcos to convey to President Marcos his best wishes. Madam Marcos also conveyed to Deng Xiaoping the president's esteem and friendly feelings. Han Nianlong, adviser to the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs, was among those present. Philippine Ambassador to China Fortunato U. Abat was also present.

FOREIGN MINISTRY ANNOUNCES SRV PRISONER RELEASE

OW041836 Beijing in Vietnamese to Vietnam 1400 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] This morning Zhang Dewei, deputy director of the First Asian Affairs Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry, met by appointment with Tran Viet Ha, charge d'affaires of the Vietnamese Embassy in China. He was authorized to inform him that China on 16 June will release Nong Van Can and 11 other Vietnamese armed personnel who had been taken prisoner by China.

Deputy Director Zhang Dewei said that Vietnamese armed personnel Nong Van Can and Vuong Quang Binh were captured by Chinese borders guards because they illegally intruded into the Chinese province of Yunnan for sabotage. Nguyen Thanh Sang and nine others were captured by the Chinese navy for their reconnaissance activities in the Xisha Islands area in the South China Sea. During the interrogations by responsible Chinese authorities, they all confessed being guilty of having intruded into Chinese territory and territorial waters to conduct illegal and hostile activities against China on the Vietnamese authorities' orders. The Chinese Government, in the spirit of humanitarianism, decided to release the 12 above captives for reunion with their families in their country.

Deputy Director Zhang Dewei informed the Vietnamese side that the 12 Vietnamese will be escorted by representatives of China's friendship gate border guard station in Guangxi Province to the zero-signed milestone at the Chinese friendship gate at 1100 Beijing time on 16 June to enable them to cross the border there. He proposed that the Vietnamese side send its representatives to receive them and go through the reception formalities there.

CONTINUED ASEAN SUPPORT FOR DK'S SEAT NOTED

[Text] Bangkok, Jun 7 (XINHUA) -- The 15th Association of Southeast Asian Nations foreign ministers' meeting to be held soon in Singapore is expected to continue support for the legitimate Kampuchean Government's seat in the United Nations. Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila said Monday in an interview that to leave Kampuchea's seat vacant will certainly have disastrous effect.

He also said the formation of a united government by the three Kampuchean resistance forces is an internal matter of Kampuchea. When it will be formed will not affect the ASEAN stance on the Kampuchean issue: Namely, upholding the relevant resolutions of the U.N. General Assembly, demanding the withdrawal of foreign troops from Kampuchea, and leaving the Kampuchean people alone to decide the future of their country, he added.

Sitthi said it remains the hope of ASEAN that other countries will also contribute to the solution of the Kampuchean issue by pressing for the implementation of the U.N. General Assembly resolutions. Also during an interview with the NATION REVIEW, the Thai foreign minister said his country supports the Philippines' proposal for an ASEAN summit.

ASEAN'S ECONOMIC TIES WITH THIRD WORLD VIEWED

["ASEAN Develops Economic Cooperation With Other Third World Countries" --XINHUA headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, June 2 (XINHUA) -- The five member states of the Association of Southeast Asian nations (ASEAN) have readjusted their foreign economic policies to develop economic cooperation with other Third World countries.

In the past few years, the economies of Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia and the Philippines have been somewhat affected by the economic recessions and trade protectionism in Western countries. As a result, the total volume of foreign trade for these countries have declined by a big margin and their international balance of payments have worsened.

While trying to improve economic relations with Western countries, the ASEAN member states have actively developed economic cooperation with other Third World countries. Since early last year, leaders of the ASEAN member states have visited Sri Lanka, Bahrain, Oman, the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia to discuss ways to strengthen economic cooperation. The ASEAN member states have also sent high-ranking officials and economic, trade and technical delegations to some Asian, African and Latin American countries for visits or to attend international fairs.

As a result of these contacts, joint committees, economic cooperation groups and joint companies formed by the ASEAN member states and other Third World countries have been established, and trade between the ASEAN member states and some other Third World countries has sharply increased.

For example, exports from Singapore to Africa totaled 1.916 billion Singapore dollars (2.1 Singapore dollars equal one U.S. dollar) in 1980, an increase of 87 percent from the previous year. Exports from Indonesia to the Middle East totaled 130 million U.S. dollars last year compared to 79.3 million U.S. dollars in 1980.

Joint investment enterprises by ASEAN member states and other Third World countries have also been established. By the end of 1981, private companies in Singapore had signed agreements with 25 manufacturers in Sri Lanka for the joint production of textiles, diamonds, printed goods and car parts.

Singapore and Bangladesh have built factories with joint investment to manufacture clocks, watches, calculators and clothing. Indonesia and India have signed 11 agreements to establish joint enterprises manufacturing steel, cement and sugar. Malaysia and Kuwait established a joint Malacca Straits oil refinery in Malaysia last year. Since the beginning of this year, Malaysia has been receiving investments from Bahrain, Oman and the United Arab Emirates to develop cooperative manufacturing industries. The Philippines recently signed agreements for economic cooperation with Saudi Arabia in industry, agriculture, communications and construction.

The ASEAN member states have also increased their scientific cooperation with other Third World countries. Singapore is training Sri Lankan technicians on how to repair ships and how to manufacture textiles, garments and electronic appliances. Malaysia has agreed to provide technical assistance and train personnel in the production of rubber and palm oil for Brazil and Bangladesh.

Indonesia has signed agreements with India and Pakistan to develop nuclear energy. Last year, the Philippines and China exchanged study groups and conducted vocational courses to train employees in industry, agriculture, fishery and medicine.

A mixed commission on science and technology from Thailand and China held its fourth meeting early this year in Beijing. During the meeting, 35 proposals were submitted for this year's scientific exchange and cooperation.

The present economic cooperation between the ASEAN member states and Third World countries is developing rapidly and has a bright future because of the ASEAN member states' rich natural resources and desire to develop their economies.

NETHERLANDS COMMUNIST PARTY CHAIRMAN VISITS

Meeting With Ji Pengfei

[Text] Beijing, June 4 (XINHUA) -- Ji Pengfei, member of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party and state councillor, met with and hosted a banquet here this evening for Henk Hoekstra, chairman of the Communist Party of the Netherlands, and his wife. After extending welcome to the Dutch visitors on their visit to China, Ji said: "The current visit of our Dutch comrades is of important significance to developing relations between our two parties." He said: "We may take this opportunity to discuss in an in-depth way many issues concerning the present international situation and international communist movement."

Hoekstra said that the Communist Party of the Netherlands will continue to develop relations with the Chinese Communist Party. "Even though the two parties did encounter some difficulties before in their relationship, relations between the two parties have not been severed," he said. "We have never forgotten the traditional militant friendship that exists between the two parties," he said.

Qiao Shi, head of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee, and Qian Liren, deputy head of the department, were present. Hoekstra and his wife arrived in Beijing yesterday at the invitation of the CCP Central Committee. This morning, Hoekstra and Qiao Shi held talks on issues relating to the present world situation, the international communist movement and the relations between the two parties.

Meeting With Hu Yaobang

[Text] Beijing, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, today reiterated principles on developing relations among various communist parties. Speaking at a meeting with Chairman of the Communist Party of the Netherlands Henk Hoekstra, Chairman Hu said the Chinese Communist Party favors the principles of independence, full equality, mutual respect and noninterference in each other's internal affairs. "Why should we uphold these principles?" he asked. "Because, in the final analysis, the success of any nation's revolution lies in the aspirations of the party and people of that country and in the correctness of the party's line and policies. It does not depend on any other party's line and policies."

He said every party has successful experience, unsuccessful experience, even the experience of failure. "There is no party in the world which is always correct," he said. "A country, a nation or a party has its strong points as well as weak points. So, we think party to party relations should be established on these principles."

Referring to the relations between the Communist Parties of China and the Netherlands, Chairman Hu said the Chinese Communist Party is willing to increase relations with the Communist Party of the Netherlands. "We welcome Chairman Hoekstra to exchange views with us on the world situation, the international communist movement and relations between our two parties. We also welcome you to investigate the work of our party and make proposals," he said.

Hoekstra said "our China visit is of special importance to developing relations between our two parties. Our talks with the comrades of the Chinese Communist Party are fruitful.

"We completely agree on the principles on development of relations between the parties, which Comrade Hu Yaobang has just talked about," he said.

"We believe each party, big or small, in socialist or capitalist countries, should be equal. This is one of the foundations for solving crises in the international communist movement. Otherwise, dogmatism will prevail and it will aggravate crises," he said. Hoekstra said the Communist Party of the Netherlands firmly opposes one party's interference in another's internal affairs. He said communist parties are working under different conditions, and they should strengthen interparty cooperation and contribute to the development of the international communist movement.

Hu Yaobang also briefed the guests on the Chinese party's work in recent years. After the meeting, Hu Yaobang gave a banquet for Hoekstra and his wife. Present were Qiao Shi and Qian Liren, head and deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee.

PEACE DEMONSTRATIONS IN WESTERN EUROPE NOTED

FRG Demonstrations

OW060754 Beijing XINHUA in English 0704 GMT 6 Jun 82

[Text] Bonn, June 5 (XINHUA) -- About 170,000 West Germans converged on Bonn and Munich to demonstrate for peace today. The demonstrations were sponsored by the opposition parties, the Christian Democratic Union and the Christian Social Union, on the eve of U.S. President Ronald Reagan's visit to West Germany and the forthcoming NATO summit in Bonn. The demonstrators held placards inscribed with slogans: "Peace in liberty", "Maintain friendship with U.S." and "Disarmament on both sides". At the 100,000-strong rally in Bonn, Chairman of the Christian Democratic Union Helmut Kohl declared that the rally showed that West Germany wants friendship with the United States, that it belongs to the Western alliance and that it supports a balanced reduction of arms by East and West. He appealed to Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev and U.S. President Reagan to show good faith toward detente and disarmament when they meet. At the 70,000-strong rally in Munich, Chairman of the Christian Social Union Franz-Josef Strauss stressed the importance of West Germany's relations with the United States and the Western alliance. "We firmly oppose the use of military means," he said. "We do not want arms race. We are only replenishing our armaments rather than working for the destruction of others through armaments," he added.

London Demonstration

[Text] London, June 6 (XINHUA) -- About 230,000 anti-nuclear demonstrators rallied in the Hyde Park today under the slogans "No nuclear bases" and "Europe demands a future." The peace demonstration took place in conjunction with the United Nations disarmament session and on the eve of U.S. President Ronald Reagan's visit to Britain. It was organized by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, Britain's biggest mass organization for peace. Speakers at the rally called for world nuclear disarmament. Many participants also wore badges and carried posters calling for an end to the hostilities over the Falkland Islands. The Labor Party's leading left-winger, Tony Benn, said at the rally that the Falklands conflict had taught the peace movement how the poison of nationalism could be used to neutralize the United Nations as a force for peace.

YANG DEZHI HOSTS BANQUET FOR ROMANIAN GENERAL

[Text] Beijing, June 1 (XINHUA) -- General Vasile Milea, first vice-minister of national defense and chief of the General Staff of the Armed Forces of Romania, Mrs. Milea and their party were honored at a banquet here tonight given by Yang Dezhi, chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army.

Proposing a toast, Yang praised the friendship between the peoples and armed forces of China and Romania. The two armed forces, he said, have kept close contacts, learned from and helped each other, contributing to the further development of the friendship.

General Milea said that he was very happy to have the chance to be in China and know about the achievements gained under the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and various activities of the Chinese Armed Forces. His current visit, he added, is a vivid demonstration of the continuous development of the friendly relations between the armed forces of the two countries.

Present at the banquet were Liu Huaqing, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army; Xu Xin, assistant to the P.L.A. chief of General Staff; and Dumitru Mocioiu, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Romanian Embassy here, and Mrs. Mocioiu.

General Milea and his party arrived here yesterday for a holiday and visit at the invitation of the Chinese Ministy of National Defense.

ISRAELI ACTIVITIES IN LEBANON CONDEMNED

Foreign Ministry Spokesman

[Text] Beijing, June 8 (XINHUA) -- The spokesman of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China issued a statement here today condemning the Israeli bombing raids on Beirut and other areas in Lebanon. The statement reads:

Since 4 June the Israeli authorities have, in gross violation of the principles of international law and in open breach of the cease-fire agreement, carried out bombing raids on Beirut and other areas and mounted a large-scale invasion into southern Lebanon, causing great losses to the lives and property of the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples. Israel's brutal aggression constitutes a renewed flagrant provocation against the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples as well as the entire Arab people. It has not only seriously encroached upon Lebanon's sovereignty and territorial integrity, but also gravely worsened the Middle East situation, thus endangering peace and security in the world.

The Chinese Government and people have always supported the Palestinian and other Arab peoples in their just cause to safeguard independence and sovereignty, regain their national rights and recover their lost territories. We strongly condemn the Israeli authorities for the above acts of aggression and express our deep sympathy for the sufferings of the innocent Lebanese and Palestinian peoples. We maintain that the national rights of the Palestinian people must be protected and the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon respected. Israel must implement the U.N. Security Council resolutions and withdraw its aggressor troops from Lebanese territory immediately and unconditionally.

Ling Qing at Security Council

[Text] United Nations, June 6 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. Security Council today urges Israel to withdraw all its military forces forthwith and unconditionally to the internationally recognized boundaries of Lebanon. A resolution unanimously adopted by the council this evening demands that all parties observe strictly the terms of paragraph 1 of Resolution 508 (1982) adopted yesterday which called on them to cease immediately and simultaneously all military activities within Lebanon and across the Lebanese-Israeli border. The document calls on all parties to communicate to the U.N. secretary-general their acceptance of the present resolution within 24 hours.

In a report to the council, U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said that he regretted to state that despite all efforts throughout the night, it was not possible to effect a cease-fire. Hostilities had escalated dangerously, with a very large number of Israeli ground forces beginning to move into Lebanese territory, he noted. Lebanese representative Ghassan Tuwayni accused Israel of its armed aggression against his country. Ever since its inception, United Nations Interim Forces in Lebanon (UNIFIL) had been challenged by the Government of Israel and its troops, he said. Representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization Hasan 'Abd ar-Rahman condemned Israel for its attempt to destroy the national will of the Palestinian people and to impose servitude on them. He stressed that the Palestinian people would resist to the end. Chinese representative Ling Qing said that the Chingese Government and people expressed strong indignation and condemnation at the Israeli acts of aggression and firmly supported the Lebanese people's struggle against aggression and the Palestinian and Arab peoples' struggle to restore their national right and recover lost territories.

WIFE OF COLOMBIAN PRESIDENT PAYS VISIT

Culture Ministry Banquet

OW041704 Beijing XINHUA in English 1611 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 4 (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Culture gave a banquet tonight at the Great Hall of the people in honor of Madame Nydia Quintero de Turbay Ayala, wife of Colombia's President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala. She arrived last night for a week's visit.

Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture, presided over the banquet. He said the cultural exchanges between China and Colombia have shown encouraging progress in the past two years, which will be enhanced by Madame Turbay's visit.

Madame Turbay described her China tour as "an unusual opportunity to live among the Chinese people and experience their friendly feelings towards the Colombian people." She is expected to open the exhibition of ancient Colombian gold jewelry tomorrow before going to south China.

Among the guests tonight were Mr. and Mrs. Rafael Gama Quijano, president of the bank of the Colombian Republic; Dr. Luis Duque Gomes, curator of the Gold Museum in Bogota; President Turbay's daughters Claudia Turbay Quintero and Maria Victoria de Ricardi and her husband Dr. Pascual Ricardi, who are accompanying Madame Turbay on her tour of China. Julio Mario Santo Domingo, Colombian Ambassador to China, and his wife jointed the entourage and attended the banquet. Also present were Han Xu, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Lu Zhixian, vice-minister of culture; Luo Shigao, vice-president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries; and Zhang Jiexun, member of the secretariat of the All-China Women's Federation.

The Colombian guests were met by Zhu Muzhi and Zhang Jiexun at the airport upon their arrival last night.

Officials at Exhibit Opening

OW051520 Beijing XINHUA in English 1501 GMT 5 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 5 (XINHUA) -- An exhibition of ancient goldwork from Colombia, which is described as "magnificent and invaluable," opened here today at the China National Art Gallery. It is the first exhibition from this Latin American country every held in China.

Nydia Quintero de Turbay Ayala, Colombia's first lady, and Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress, attended the opening ceremony and cut the ribbon.

On display are 600 gold objects, including necklaces, earrings, bracelets, nose rings, pendants and other ornaments and utensils. Many Chinese visitors seemed fascinated by their beautiful shapes. The exhibits are provided by the gold museum of the Bank of the Republic of Bogota, which houses the world's largest collection of 26,000 gold pieces, all made by native goldsmiths before colonialists' invasion in the 16th century. The oldest object so far discovered dates back to 1,500 B.C.

Addressing the ceremony, Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture, said that the exhibition "mirrors the achievements of the Colombian people in developing their national culture by preserving and making use of their cultural heritage and their efforts and resolution to safeguard the national independence and sovereignty." "We are confident that the Colombian people's future will be even more brilliant than gold," he said.

In her speech, the Colombian first lady said China and what is today Colombia "have a common cultural background" and expressed the hope that through this exhibition the two countries "will learn more of each other with the purpose of intensifying their cultural exchanges, increasing commerce and strengthening the ties of friendship."

Attending the ceremony were Madame Turbay's entourage and Julio Mario Santo Domingo, Colombian ambassador to China, and his wife. Also present were Han Xu, vice-minister of foreign affairs; Lu Zhixian, vice-minister of culture; Luo Shigao, vice-president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries; and Zhang Jiexun, member of the Secretariat of the All-China Women's Federation. The exhibition will last ten days before it moves to Shanghai, according to the China Exhibition Corporation that sponsors the show.

Meeting With Wan Li

[Text] Beijing, June 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Vice-Premier Wan Li met here this afternoon with Madame Nydia Quintero de Turbay Ayala, wife of Colombia's president Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala, and her party.

During the conversation, Wan Li said: "Since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Colombia, the relations and cultural exchanges between the two countries have been expanded satisfactorily. President Turbay has made important contributions to the development of the friendly relations. We will welcome him if he has an opportunity to visit China." Madame Turbay thanked the Chinese Government for its hospitality. She said: "President Turbay could not visit China this time. He asked me to convey his best wishes to leaders of the Chinese Government. He will be very glad to have a chance to visit China."

Present at the meeting were Zhu Muzhi and Lu Zhixian, Chinese minister and vice-minister of culture, and Julio Mario Santo Domingo, Colombian ambassador to China.

RENMIN RIBAO: OFFICIALS' CHILDREN SUBJECT TO LAW

[Article by Chen Ping [2525 1627]: "Also Talking About 'Market Conditions' in China"]

[Text] He Deming, the principal criminal of the gang of rapists, wonderfully showed his true colors in the face of the indignant rebuke of his victim. He said with swollen arrogance, "Do you understand the present market conditions in the Chinese society? My father is a seventh rank cadre. His official rank is as high as the commander in chief of the Chengdu PLA units. Do you know who will win the suit if you prosecute me! We also have friends in the public security organ. Well, if you do not believe me, we'll have a test of strength!"

These arrogant words thoroughly revealed the ugly features of this gang of criminals. They have trampled on the innocent and scorn the law so arrogantly that words fail to describe them. In their view, the weak women whom they have trampled on have no alternative but to suffer their insults submissively. If these weak women try to resist them or even to prosecute them, it shows, in their opinion, a lack of understanding of the "market conditions" of Chinese society today.

However, in the China of today, there are no stock markets nor any paradises for adventurists. How can there be any "market conditions" to inquire into? Since He Deming and his ilk have prated about the "market conditions" in the manner of the speculators in the old society, we had better write something about just what the "market conditions" are in China.

We cannot deny that in the past, there actually were "market conditions" in China where evil people were allowed to do things at will. The practice of "the noble are not subject to legal punishment, and no allowance will be given to the common people for their sense of shame" stemming from a very ancient source. In the novel "Water Margin," the author described the son of a top official, Gao Yanei, who took a fancy to Lin Chong's wife to be his mistress until she was forced to commit suicide. In the corrupt old society, there were quite a large number of children of rich families who acted like Gao Yanei. During the time when Lin Biao and the "gang of four" were in power, there were also such "market conditions." At that time, as long as a man followed their line, he or his son would be free from any legal punishment, no matter what serious crimes they committed.

But our history turned over this leaf of corruption and crimes long ago. The criminal law of the PRC has already been promulgated. Our socialist legal system is being perfected day after day to ensure that everything we do in our society is based on the law. What did He Deming and his ilk rely upon when they followed the old corrupt practices and publicly challenged the society and defied the law? According to He's words, he relied on two things, namely, first, his father was a seventh rank cadre and second, he had friends in the public security organ. He thought that since he had a clear understanding of "market conditions," he could despise all law and authorities and that no one could do anything to him.

In fact, this was only his personal belief. As a result, he was mistaken about the "market conditions" and was himself caught by the net of the law.

The law accepted his defiance, but not in a weak manner as he imagined. The comrades in the police battalion in Chengdu who were responsible for overcoming crimes resolutely said: "Even if the criminal is the emperor of heaven, we will punish him according to the law!" This was also the case for former public security policeman Zhang Jianmeng. For a time, he hoped that his relatives and friends in the public security organ would help him and some top officials would intervene in his case. But his hope turned out to be a foolish dream. The law is sacred and merciless. Whoever violates the law will not evade its punishment. In the past, the "two bears in Hangzhou" failed to evade its punishment and so will He Deming, Zhang Jianmeng and Cao Jingping today. They will never be able to evade legal punishment. This is the disgraceful end that is deserved by those who defy the law.

The parents of the criminal have also accepted the challenge of their unworthy son. With a clear-cut stand, they have sided with party discipline, state law, the victims and the masses of the people. When they were faced with the choice between party spirit and their feelings for their son, they correctly adhered to the principle of party spirit. They are not "behind-the-scene backers" of the criminal, but on the contrary, they belong to the forces that are fighting against evil.

The female worker, the victim, was not scared by the threat of the arrogant criminals. In order to prevent other young girls from being trampled on by the criminals, she has resolutely fought against these villains and finally won her suit and succeeded in exposing these villains. This fact has provided a sonorous answer to the question of who is the winner and who is the "strong one."

Touching on the "market conditions," the following is the actual "market conditions" in today's China: The law is no longer subject to the discretion of a few people. The law has shown its tremendous power in protecting the people and in fighting against evildoers. This is precisely where our hope lies.

ARTICLE STRESSES STREAMLINING ORGANIZATIONS

[Article by Sui Xiwen [7131 0823 2429]: "A Bloated Bureaucracy Creates Many Disadvantages"]

[Text] Recently I read a number of classic works and I found that the people of that time talked about the disadvantages of too many government officials and the benefits of cutting them. I will quote from some of the articles because I think they will enlighten us in the streamlining of our organizations which is being carried out today.

Posts Are in Line With Work and Excessive Staff

To explain this in today's world, this question means employing staff according to the volume of work or employing more staff than is needed. Zhang Ruyu of the Sung Dynasty said in his "Examination System for Government Officials": "It is only when the positions are in line with the volume of work that the officials will be able to work for the people; but if the number of positions is more than needed, the officials will know nothing but working for their own interest." He held that only when the number of officials was in line with the volume of work they were responsible for would they be able to work for the country and the people; otherwise they would just work "for themselves" or they would "become harmful to the people." In this way, he grasped the gist of the question. Another example is Bao Cheng of the Sung Dynasty. In his work "A Talk About Bloated Bureaucracy and Use of Finance" Bao Cheng pointed out that for more than 4 decades after Emperor Sung Jingde came to power, the number of government officials more than doubled. He said: "Those people living on official salary have been increasing with each passing day while those people toiling in agriculture have been decreasing." ("Selected Works of Bao Cheng," vol 1) In the later period of the Yuan Dynasty there were situations in which "10 herdsmen are taking care of 9 head of sheep" that resulted in "too many officials than were needed in higher and lower departments." In such situations, people naturally had heavier burdens, the country was weakened and the people became poorer. Therefore, as the people of that time said, it was necessary to enable "officials to have their own positions as well as their own work." ("Biography of Wei Zhi and Wang Xiao") Yang Wanli of the Sung Dynasty spoke more explicitly about bloated staffs in his "Bloated Officials" when he said: "It is better that the amount of work surpasses the number of staff than that the number of staff surpasses the amount of work." What does it mean by "the amount of work surpasses the number of staff?" "An amount of work is done by an official and an official is responsible for an amount of work" and consequently although there were less officials, they were still able to do more work. "Officials will have no spare time, nor will they have surplus time to think of other things." Thus, even officials worked busily every day under heavy pressure and consequently they had no time to consider dishonest practices.

But of course there is a positive effect in considering the question in this way. But if the situation is otherwise, that is to say, if "several persons are appointed for one position and a job is managed by several persons and several persons are in one position, they will contend not for the sake of public interest but for the sake of personal gain; if several persons are responsible for a job, they will work for their own merit and they will not be responsible.... These are the disadvantages of having the number of staff surpass the amount of work." With the number of staff surpassing the amount of work, the staff would concentrate their efforts in seeking private gain and would become irresponsible. The situation of holding positions with no responsibility was very common at that time. It was commonplace that in a small business five or six persons were holding one position and in a small city two or three persons were responsible for a job. Yang Wanli held that with such a bloated bureaucracy, "the country cannot but become poor and the people cannot but become weak even though they have progressed."

Select Persons According to Posts and Select Officials According to Positions

To interpret this in today's situation, this means that in establishing organizations and forming positions we must proceed from the needs of our work and we cannot just carry out our work according to the number of staff. Without solving this problem, we will not be able to streamline our organizations. The establishment and scale of an organization must be based on the needs of our work before we are able to select the right persons. Xu Yinglong of the Sung Dynasty profoundly explained this question in his "Cut Down on Bloated Officials" that was written in the year Chun You 5. He said: "When candidates are selected to fill positions, we may have only a small number of officials, but it is a sufficient number to get the work done. When positions are created for the candidates, we may have a large number of officials, but they still will not be a sufficient number to get the work done." The number of appointed officials must be based on objective actual needs. If we do otherwise, that is to say, if we appoint officials not only according to need but also considering such other things as merit, salary, rank and experience, or if we build a temple and form a position according to persons, we will certainly form a bloated bureaucracy and "with the gate of luck opened, people will spare no effort in contending." The only way to eliminate the "disadvantages of a bloated bureaucracy" is to "select persons according to posts and not select officials according to positions so that each will be responsible for his post and will not resort to deception."

Save Officials and Save Work

How to save officials? The key question is whether we can save work. Xun Mao of the Jin Dynasty said: "It is better to save officials than saving their attendants, while to save work is better than saving officials." He thus considered saving work as the basic way to save officials. He said that the Han Dynasty was able to "streamline work in its early period and consequently it was able to save officials." He said: "Emperor Guang Wu combined officials and 10 prefectural and municipal offices were cut by one official and this means saving officials. The later Wei Dynasty sent officials to help cut down the number of officials in localities while during the Zhengshi year, provincial officials were merged with prefectural officials and this also saved officials." He said: "In order to basically solve the problem, it is necessary to give priority to saving work." ("Works on the Jin Dynasty," vol 39) The so-called "saving work" referred to in ancient times means to minimize corvee labor and let people recuperate so that they would be able to concentrate their efforts on agricultural production. This was also mentioned in "Works on the Jin Dynasty and Biography of Fu Xian": "The urgent work at present is first of all to merge official posts so as to save work and stop wars so that the whole country will be able to concentrate its effort on agriculture." Lu Zhi of the Tang Dynasty also put forth the "Five Points for Saving Work" that concisely summarized how to save work. They are: "Do not supply excessive food to soldiers; legally pardon the weak; save officials when they are not needed; eliminate useless things; and get rid of unnecessary work." ("New Work on the Tang Dynasty," vol 157) The key point is "simplification" and it embodies the ideology of "simplifying administration" in ancient times.

Of course, what was mentioned here occurred more than 1,000 years ago. The so-called "administrative work" at that time basically differs from our socialist construction today. But we can learn something from this ideology. For example, the situation of "several thousand pieces of thread in high departments and a needle in lower departments" still exists in our work today. It means that with so many people in higher departmetns blindly directing work, the lower departments are at a loss as to whom to follow; it is just wasting money and manpower. Shouldn't this situation be abolished?

HONGQI VIEWS ROLE OF INDIVIDUAL TRADESMEN

HK071211 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 10, 16 May 82 pp 30-31

["Questions and Answers" by Dong Yancheng [5516 5888 2052]: "Is an Individual Undertaking Practicing Exploitation of Labor If It Employs Assistants and Takes On Apprentices?"]

[Text] In our economy today, a small number of individual tradesmen own some means of production and, with the permission of the state managerial departments of commerce and industry, have one or two assistants or several apprentices, and these operators make more money than their assistants and apprentices. Is this exploitation through hiring labor? To answer this question, it is necessary to examine the sources and nature of the earnings of these individual tradesmen.

First of all, it should be noted that the income of individual tradesmen is greater than that of their assistants and apprentices and is not solely a result of gratuitous ownership of surplus labor. The amount a tradesman earns includes, first, the value created by his own labor. An individual tradesman owns a little means of production but he is a laborer at the same time. More often than not, he also has higher skills and more managerial competence, playing an important role in the process of production. He does more sophisticated labor than his assistants and apprentices, so it is right that he earn more than they. Second, the earnings of a tradesman include the money made through his earlier investment in the business. These earnings are equal to or modestly higher than the bank interest for the same amount of money. Therefore, although it is earnings on investments, it is justified and permitted by the socialist economy. Third, the earnings include the extra income resulting from pricing factors. The individual economy is a small commodity economy, the economic effects and earnings of which are closely related to the changes of supply and demand on the market. Since some problems still remain in balancing supply and demand in our country at present, and some prices are irrational, a tradesman can often sell at an inflated price and purchase at a discount. This extra income is not created by the labor of the individual tradesman, nor by the labor of his assistants and apprentices, but is created by the labor of laborers in other departments and transferred through price adjustment (it is also transferrable to the state through price adjustments and tax collections.) Fourth, the individual tradesmen make profit from the surplus labor of their assistants and apprentices. The amount of this is determined by the number and productivity of the assistants and apprentices. The productivity of individual trades is rather low, and one individual tradesman is permitted to have a few assistants. Therefore, the value of the surplus labor of his assistants and apprentices is very little and cannot provide the bulk of his income.

One cannot indiscriminately regard the individual tradesman who has assistants and apprentices as a capitalist exploiter of hired labor because there are essential qualitative and quantitive differences between the two.

Qualitatively speaking, exploitation means that the workers have no alternative to selling their labor power to the capitalists. The relationship between the capitalists and the workers is characterized by the workers' forced labor and the capitalists' gratuitous ownership of the surplus value created by those workers. But the relationship between the assistants and apprentices and the masters of such individual trades is a coalition based on contract, which sets down the rights, obligations, tenure and income of both parties. Even though the assistants and apprentices are not paid for a part of the value they have created, it can be thought of as payment for the techniques they have learned.

Speaking on the nature of apprenticeship Engels pointed out: "Apprentices and assistants are not working to earn sustenance, but rather to make themselves masters too." (Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol 3, p 310) These two essentially different kinds of labor relations and ownership relations should not be confused.

Quantitatively speaking, the portion of income derived from surplus labor by the individual tradesmen differs from that of the capitalists.

Under the conditions of hired employment, capitalists' income is totally derived from surplus value, which enables them to devote themselves to activities of surplus value, rather than labor-oriented activities, and to continuously increase their wealth. Under individual trade conditions, a tradesman is permitted by the state to hire not more than two assistants, and no more than five apprentices if he has some special skills. This limitation ensures that the value of surplus labor only constitutes a small portion of his income. Moreover, he cannot spend all his time on activities of surplus labor; instead, he has to take part in laboring.

Small commodity production like these individual trades, needless to say, has a spontaneous tendency to expand, to hire more assistants and make more profits. But socialist public ownership and state policies are predominant in our state today. They regulate the scope of business, selling prices and indices of income and expenditure of individual trades. So, with efficient management, proper guidance and support, the negative aspects of the individual economy can be restrained and the business of individual tradesmen can play a positive role.

BAN YUE TAN WRITES ON EXTERNAL ECONOMIC POLICY

HK050412 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0935 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 4 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In the 3 years since its institution, China's policy of opening up to the outside world in economic work has brought about major advances in external economic and trade relations and played an important role in economic readjustment and development. Practice has proven that this policy of China's is completely correct. This is the gist of an article in BAN YUE TAN which is about to be published.

This article, entitled "Three Years of Practicing the Policy of Opening Up to the World," dwells on the following facts:

-- A number of projects built with foreign loans have played a positive role in strengthening the weak links in the national economy and promoting the technical improvement of old enterprises. China started to raise foreign investment in 1979; the government has signed agreements for a number of medium or low-interest loans, and the banks have also raised some buyer's credits and cash loans. Construction has already started on the three railroads (Beijing-Qinhuangdao, Yanchuan-Shijiusuo, and Guangzhou-Hengyang) and the two ports (Qinhuangdao and Shijiusuo) being built with loans from the Japanese overseas joint effort fund. If these projects are completed on schedule, there will be an increase of 35 million tons in the annual coal transport capacity of railroads and ports. In the past few years, Tianjin Municipality has used $110 million in foreign investment, supplemented by the necessary domestic capital, in carrying out 123 technical improvement projects. The construction cycle of these projects generally ranges from 1 to 3 years. When all the projects are completed, total value of the city's annual industrial output will rise by 1.17 billion yuan, profits and taxes by 400 million yuan, and export revenue by $270 million.

-- A number of Sino-foreign joint ventures and cooperative enterprises have been set up, and progress has also been made in cooperative exploitation of oil resources. In recent years approval has been given for setting up 40 Sino-foreign joint venture enterprises and 390 cooperation projects. These have drawn in a total of about $1.88 billion in investment by foreign businessmen. Most of these ventures and cooperation projects have already started production or are now going into operation.

In order to speed up survey and exploitation of China's offshore oil resources, offshore oil geological survey agreements have been signed with several dozen oil companies from more than 10 countries, and surveying of more than 600,000 square kilometers of the sea has been completed. The first round of tendering for exploiting offshore oil in cooperation with China was completed in April this year.

-- Notable results have been scored in the work of importing advanced technology and advanced management experiences suited to China.

-- A very good start has been made in undertaking projects for foreign countries and in the export of technology and labor. The total value of such contracts signed in 1981 was $490 million, 150 percent more than in 1980, and the revenue yield was $100 million. More than 17,000 persons have been sent to work abroad in accordance with the contracts.

-- There has been relatively great development in import and export trade. The volume of export trade has risen annually in recent years. The volume in 1980 was 140 percent greater than in 1977. In 1981, there was a further big increase in China's export trade, with a rise of 18 percent over 1980, despite only a very slight increase in world trade as a whole. At the same time there was a relatively great change in the structure of export commodities. Heavy industry products accounted for 43.6 percent of last year's total trade volume, compared with about 25 percent a few years ago, and exceeded the proportions of light industry, textiles, and agricultural and sideline products exports for the first time. The volume of imports rose correspondingly. The volume in 1980 was 180 percent greater than in 1979, and 1981 saw a further increase of 5 percent.

The BAN YUE TAN article says, the development of China's import and export trade has brought a number of notable advantages for the state: it has helped promote production and enliven the economy; it has expanded employment; and it has increased the country's ability to pay in foreign exchange. Hence, China must continue to unswervingly practice the policy of opening up to the world, actively import and use foreign investment, correctly import advanced foreign science and technology, strive to develop external economic relations, strengthen her ability to rely on her own efforts, and speed up the building of socialist modernization.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON PLANNED COMMODITY ECONOMY

[Article by Lu Zhenmao [0712 2182 5499]: "A Summary of Discussions Over the Past 3 Years on the Problems of Planned Economy and Regulation by Market Mechanism"]

[Text] Correctly understanding and handling the problem of the relations between planned economy and regulation by market mechanism constitutes a key problem in the reform of the economic system. Over the past 3 years, economic theorists and practical workers in our country have conducted extensive research and discussions on this problem. On some of the points a breakthrough has been scored, while on others further studies and deliberations are still necessary. The following is a summary of the basic views concerning certain of the major problems in the discussions:

1. The Basic Special Features of Socialist Economy

The first view holds that the basic special feature of a socialist economy is that it is a planned economy. A planned economy is an important landmark which differentiates the socialist form of production from other forms of production, whereas a commodity economy cannot be so differentiated. Although commodity production has a history of several thousand years and has existed in various socioeconomic patterns, it cannot become a special feature differentiating a certain social production form from other forms and, in fact, has never determined the nature of any socioeconomic system. When commodity production reaches the highest point of development, not only do all the products of labor become commodities but also the labor power of mankind becomes a commodity.

Marx himself never took the commodity economy as being a special feature of the nature of capitalism. On the contrary, he warned people of the following: that what differentiates the capitalist form of production from other forms of production does not rest on commodity production but rather on labor power becoming a commodity and on the manifestation of labor as wage labor. Hence, we cannot denote the special feature of a certain socioeconomic system with the criterion of whether or not it practices a commodity economy. Naturally, we cannot take commodity production and commodity exchange as the basic special features of socialist economy.

A second point of view believes that the basic special feature of a socialist economy should be described as a commodity planned economy or, in other words, a planned economy with commodity relations. A planned economy is divided into two states: a stage of commodity-planned economy and a stage of product-planned economy. The planned economy of a socialist society is a commodity-planned economy while the planned economy of a communist society is a product-planned economy.

A third point of view contends that the special feature of a socialist economy is that it is a commodity economy with a plan. Under socialist conditions, a planned economy and a commodity economy are two sides of the same thing. True, the planned economy is an important special feature of the socialist economy but commodity production and commodity exchange are not outside the socialist conditions, nor are they the heritage of the old society but, rather, they are intrinsic and inherent in a socialist society. Therefore, the basic special feature of a socialist economy should be described as a commodity economy with a plan.

A fourth point holds that socialism is a developed stage of commodity economy. The process of productive force gradually developing to a high stage of socialization can be completed only in the full development of the commodity economy. A natural economy can only develop to the stage of a commodity economy and only when a commodity economy has developed to a high degree can it enter into mankind's high-grade social form which is devoid of commodity and currency. The stage of a developed commodity economy cannot be surpassed but the stage of capitalism can be avoided. We do not take the capitalist road. We cannot but take the road of the developed socialist commodity economy. But the socialist commodity economy is a type of developed commodity economy which does away with labor power as a commodity.

A fifth view contends that neither the planned economy nor the commodity economy should be considered as the basic special feature of a socialist economy. The planned economy is spoken of as opposed to the state of anarchism of a capitalist economy, whereas a commodity economy is spoken of as opposed to a natural economy. Strictly speaking, this is not a problem of the same category or the same series. As a problem of the same series, then one is "with a government" and the other is "without a government" or anarchic, one is planned and the other is unplanned, and one is a natural economy and the other is a commodity economy.

2. Relations Between Commodity Economy and Planned Economy

One point of view holds that a planned economy under socialism must rely on commodity production and commodity exchange. At present, the productive force of our country has not reached a high degree of development, the socialist public ownership system still retains two separate forms, namely, that of ownership by the state and that of ownership by the collective, while the production units of the state-run economy still possess to a certain extent different kinds of economic interests. Under such conditions, the existence and development of commodity production are objectively necessary. For this reason, under socialist conditions, a planned economy must be pursued on the basis of the public ownership system while commodity production and commodity exchange must also be vigorously developed. At the same time, in exercising planned control over the whole national economy, the state must give sufficient thought to, and utilize, the law of value and resort to the use of such levers as profits, prices, interest rates, taxation, and so forth.

Another viewpoint contends that a socialist economy is a combination of a planned economy and a commodity economy. A socialist economy is a planned economy built on the foundation of the public ownership of the means of production. A planned economy demands that the reproduction process be subjected to meaningful social regulation, that is to say, to planned regulation, and that suitable proportionate relationships be maintained within the national economy, that production and demand be relatively balanced, and that the maximum economic effect be obtained with the minimum consumption of labor. At the same time, the level of development of the productive force of our country is still not sufficiently high. There still coexist the economy under the system of ownership by the whole people and the economy under the system of ownership by the collectives and the laboring masses. The disparity in the material interests of the individual and of the collective still exists while commodity production and commodity exchange are very much in evidence. Therefore, under socialist conditions, the planned economy and the commodity economy are combined.

Another view believes that in a socialist economy, the commodity economy is the real content while the planned economy is the outside crust.

3. On the Intention of Regulation by Planning Mechanism and Regulation by Market Mechanism

Concerning regulation by planning mechanism, one point of view holds that in reality it is carrying out planning by means of directives, that is to say, the state and planning departments at various levels issue directives to the lower levels designating targets which the units responsible for the execution of the plan must firmly carry out and be sure to fulfill.

Another view holds that regulation by planning mechanism should embody, on the one hand, regulation to be executed by means of the directive type of planning and, on the other hand, regulation to be executed through planning of a guiding nature and by the use of economic levers and the law of value. However, some comrades contend that in the future, under conditions of a normal development of the economy, regulation by planning mechanism can considerably reduce the targets which are designated by directives, or eliminate the directive type of planning altogether and replace it by planning of a guiding nature. On the other hand, some comrades believe that a socialist economy cannot greatly reduce the targets designated by directives, far less eliminate altogether the directive-type of planning. The directive type of planning is a basic landmark of the socialist planned economy. Its elimination will necessarily result in social production being in a state of anarchy.

As for regulation by market mechanism, one view contends that in essence regulation by market mechanism is regulation by the law of value. This is because regulation by market mechanism is always connected with the commodity economy. The socialist economy is a planned economy which embodies commodity relations but the law governing the relations of a commodity economy is the law of value. Hence, regulation by market mechanism is principally the utilization of the regulatory function on production and circulation of the law of value and the utilization of the active role of the various economic levers which are related to value, so as to promote the smooth realization of planned control. Comrades holding this view further contend that irrespective of whether the law of value is consciously utilized in regulation, or whether the law of value itself spontaneously exerts the regulatory function, both belong to the sphere of regulation by market mechanism.

Another view holds that in essence regulation by market mechanism is regulation exerted spontaneously by the law of value and is realized principally through the spontaneous fluctuations of prices. It believes that in general regulation by market mechanism should not be called regulation by the law of value, except when the law of value spontaneously exerts its role of regulation. At the same time, this view contends, regulation by market mechanism should not be called regulation by price fluctuations, except when prices spontaneously exert their regulatory function. Comrades holding this view believe that conscious utilization by the state of the law of value when formulating plans is not regulation by market mechanism, but is regulation by planning mechanism.

4. Relations Between Regulation by Planning Mechanism and Regulation by Market Mechanism

The first point of view holds that under socialist conditions, regulation by planning mechanism should be the leading factor and regulation by market mechanism should be supplementary. Since a socialist economy is a planned economy built on the basis of the system of the public ownership of the means of production, the law governing the planned development of the national economy becomes the principal regulator of socialist production and the state must consciously and in a planned manner arrange for social production in accordance with the public's common interests. At the same time, since a socialist economy is also a commodity economy built on the basis of the system of public ownership, it must naturally be regulated by market mechanism. Hence, in actual socialist life, the law governing the planned and proportionate development of the national economy and the law of value both play a regulatory role. But the two do not play an equal role. Rather, the regulatory role of the law governing the planned development of the national economy occupies the leading place. This is determined by the innate nature of the socialist economy.

The second view believes that in a socialist economy, regulation by planning mechanism and regulation by market mechanism perform a mutually supplementary and mutually complementary role. A socialist economy is a planned economy based on the public ownership system and is also a commodity economy based on the public ownership system. Hence, in a socialist economy, we should unify its planned character and its commodity character, that is, in regulation by planning mechanism full use is made of the market mechanism and in regulation by market mechanism planned guidance should be strengthened.

A third point of view contends that a socialist economy should practice planned commodity economy. Hence, in addition to the law governing the planned development of the national economy, the law of value also plays a role in the regulation of the national economy. These two laws exert their functions subject to the limitations of the basic laws of socialism. Thus, this objectively determines that what a socialist economy practices is planned regulation by market mechanism, in other words, full utilization of the regulatory function of the market mechanism but under planned guidance.

A fourth point of view holds that under socialist conditions, regulation by planning mechanism and regulation by market mechanism can be combined, or can work together in many different ways and forms. Irrespective of whatever form is chosen by a socialist state, it must be assured that coordination exists between the various departments of the national economy, between the various links such as production, circulation, distribution and consumption, and between the two forms of regulation, namely, regulation by planning mechanism and regulation by market mechanism. Moreover, the principal role of regulation by planning mechanism must be ensured so that regulation by market mechanism can only play a supplementary role under the guidance of planning and within a general limit specified by planning to the end that the proportionate and coordinated development of the national economy is fostered and not hindered.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES LEARNING FROM POSTAL WORKERS

[Commentator's article: "Learn From Outstanding Postal Workers"]

[Text] The meeting to honor outstanding postal workers that was called by the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications was a great event in the political life of the postal and telecommunications staff and workers in our country. This meeting is of great significance in carrying out the activities of learning from and catching up with the advanced personalities in the postal and telecommunications circles and in promoting the continuous improvement of the postal and telecommunications services.

As Comrade Hu Yaobang has pointed out, the postal and telecommunications departments should serve as the vanguards for propagating socialist spiritual civilization. Postal and telecommunications work is related with and provides services for millions of customers every day. Therefore, it is the outpost of the construction of spiritual civilization. The hundreds of thousands of postal workers in our urban and rural areas have worked hard year-round and have delivered mail in both rural and urban areas consistently through all types of weather. Thus they have made their contributions to socialist construction. The 104 outstanding postal workers and the 202 commended postal workers who have been selected in various areas are the excellent representatives of our rural and urban postal workers. They have noble virtues and have done moving deeds. Not only postal workers but the comrades of all trades and professions should learn from them. Some people look down upon postal work and think that it has no prospects. This is a wrong view. A postal worker is assigned a very glorious task. Every letter, package, money order, newspaper or magazine that he delivers has a bearing on the four modernizations of the country and on the material and cultural life of our people. Therefore, his labor must enjoy the respect of the society. In order to do their postal work well, all postal workers should study hard to heighten their sense of responsibility as masters of their country and to master the skill and knowhow of their postal operations. Some outstanding postal workers have, through making great efforts, become very familiar with the names, ages and occupations of the thousands of people in the areas where these postal workers deliver mail. They are praised by the masses of people as "walking maps," "walking residence register books" and "intimate friends of the residents." This provides satisfactory evidence that postal workers deserve the respect of the people.

Of course, we should realize that the postal and telecommunications facilities in our country are still very backward and they have remained a weak point in our national economy. In the rural and urban postal and telecommunications services throughout our country, there are many problems to be solved. We earnestly hope that the outstanding postal workers will refrain from feeling satisfied with what they have already achieved and that they will strive to make new contributions to the state and the people together with the broad ranks of postal workers. The postal and telecommunications departments at all levels should understand the importance of improving postal and telecommunications services in light of their bearing on the construction of the two civilizations. They should conscientiously sum up and popularize the advanced thoughts and experiences of outstanding postal workers, develop the movement of learning from outstanding postal workers and mobilize the broad ranks of their staff and workers to develop their spirit as masters of their country and to do their work satisfactorily.

PARTY HISTORY CADRE ON DEMOCRACY, CENTRALISM

HK041143 Beijing RIBAO in Chinese 31 May 82 p 3

[Feature: "Comrade Liao Gailong Points Out When Reviewing Theory and Guiding Principles Since the Third Plenary Session, That It Is a Pioneer Undertaking for the Central Committee To Propose a High Degree of Democracy and Civilization and the Building of a Party With Sound Democratic Centralism"]

[Text] Editor's note: Comrade Liao Gailong, deputy director of the Party History Research Office of the CCP Central Committee, delivered a report at the forum on the work of teaching party history in all party schools held toward the end of 1981. In his report, he expounded on the great significance and essence of the important goal of achieving a high degree of democracy and building a party with sound democratic centralism as proposed by the party Central Committee. The following are excerpts of the report: [end editor's note]

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the party Central Committee has repeatedly summed up historical experiences in order to actually set to right things which have been thrown into disorder ideologically and politically.

While shifting the focus of the party's work to the building of socialist modernization, the party Central Committee proposed, as our major goals in building socialism, to gradually establish a socialist political system with a high degree of democracy, promote a great socialist spiritual civilization and build up a party with sound democratic centralism. This is a pioneer undertaking and a creative work in both theory and practice in the history of socialist movements, Chinese or foreign. The theories and principles relating to the issue are put forth on the basis of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. They can be traced to the same origin as the principle of seeking truth from facts, the mass line and the policy of the correct handling of contradictions among the people which were formulated by Comrade Mao Zedong. At the same time, these theories will ensure the realization of the line and principles.

First, the high degree of democracy proposed by the party Central Committee is not empty words, but has its specific contents. It calls for the realization of the right of people to govern both the state and economic and cultural undertakings, the right of people to enjoy full freedoms and democracy and the right of people to give full play to their skill and wisdom. Meanwhile, leading organs at all levels must adhere to the system of collective leadership and the system of one man one vote. The making of an arbitrary decision by an individual is not allowed. Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: The high degree of democracy we strive for is a democracy which is more practical and of a higher level than that of the bourgeoisie. It is a development from the mass line which was proposed and expounded by Comrade Mao Zedong and is put forward in line with numerous instructions made by Comrade Mao Zedong for fully developing democracy. The new work and new contribtuions that our party Central Committee is now striving for, is aimed at turning a high degree of democracy from theory into practice, formulating it as a system and legalizing it as a law. We must make it our standard of action by which everyone should abide and which no one is allowed to trample and change.

Second, we must build up a highly advanced spiritual socialist civilization. This includes two aspects. One is that this spiritual civilization must be socialist and must serve the people and belong to the people. Therefore, all our cadres and people must have noble socialist ideas, ideals and morals. For this, it is necessary to arm the minds of cadres and people with the basic theories of Marxism so that they can master the law of the development of society and so they can consciously serve the people and bring benefit to society. To attain this goal, the people should carry out long-term self-education and self-remolding in order to sweep away all bad influences left over by the reactionary exploiting classes and to resist the corrosive influence of bourgeois ideology from abroad. On the other hand, under the guidance of the noble ideas and ideals of socialism, we must step-by-step build up our highly advanced undertakings in the fields of education, science, culture, the arts, public health and sports. This means that we should catch up with the world's advanced level in science and culture as quickly as possible.

Third, we must build a party with sound democratic centralism. The Chinese Communist Party is the leading core of the people of all nationalities in our country, and must be built on the basis of a high degree of democracy. Only by so doing, will the party always maintain the nature of a proletarian revolutionary party which wholeheartedly serves the people, and only thus will the party maintain its correctness of leadership as well as the continuity and stability of its principles and policies. Comrade Mao Zedong always advocated that conscious observance of party discipline and the unified will and action of the whole party could only be ensured by broadening the scope of democracy within the party and by means of sound democratic life within the party. A sound democratic life within the party is more important especially during the high tide of a revolution. The new work and new contributions which the party Central Commitree is striving for, is to resolutely bring into full play the democracy within the party by formulating basic norms and resolutions for the party and earnestly improving the party work style. To this end, six important measures have already been defined in the "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee.

ARTICLE URGES PROTECTING WATER RESOURCES

[Article by Wang Dengsan [3769 6260 0005]: "Save Water, Protect Underground Water Resources"]

[Text] With the social economy developing and the population greatly increased and, in particular, with the productive forces in society developing tremendously at present, the demand for water increases with each passing day and a shortage of water resources is felt in many regions. People have begun to realize that water resources are not, as they had imagined, inexhaustible.

According to 1977 statistics supplied by the United Nations, the total volume of water on the earth (including water in the oceans, underground, in glaciers, rivers and lakes as well as in atmosphere and the biotic realm) amounted to 1,386 quadrillion cubic meters, of which freshwater reserves amounted to 35 quadrillion cubic meters of 2.6 percent of total water reserves. Of the freshwater reserves, 104.6 trillion cubic meters lay in rivers and lakes and at a shallow underground level and were within easy reach of man for his use in daily life. This volume accounted for only 7/100,000th of the total volume of water on the earth.

In China, the volume of underground water resources is 800 billion cubic meters (some of this is linked with surface water) and accounts for about 30 percent of the total surface runoff of water of the whole country. In many major cities and industrial bases in our country, underground water is the chief source of water supply. In agriculture, well irrigation has developed very quickly. Especially in the northern areas where surface water is insufficient and rainfall is scanty, the exploitation and use of underground water has become an important aspect of water conservation. The area of land included in the well irrigation networks in the past few years in northern China accounted for one-third of the total irrigated acreage, and the volume of water taken underground each year equalled the total water flow of the Huange He in a year. This played an important role in changing the appearance of agricultural production in northern China. However, due to the excessive exploitation of underground water and the frequent attacks of drought in many areas in the past few years, the level of underground water has fallen by a large degree.

At present there is a great waste of water in our country. Compared with those in developed countries, industrial units in our country waste much more water and the rate of reuse of water is very low, being an average only about 10 percent throughout the whole country, as against over 70 percent in developed countries, With regard to the use of water in everyday life, the staff and workers in many localities or units pay water charges at a fixed rate, and each of them pays a nominal fee and can use as much water as they want. When fees are charged by this method, water consumption is two to three times greater than it is if a meter is installed in every household to measure the volume of water used and fees are charged proportionately.

To protect underground water resources, guarantee people's lives and ensure industrial and agricultural development, it is first necessary to strictly practice economy in water consumption and minimize the waste of water. In recent years, remarkable results have been achieved in making economical use of water in Dalian, Tianjin, Shanghai, Qingdao and other cities, and the rate of reuse of industrial water is above 50 percent, and even 75 percent in some of these cities, In Dalian, the daily supply of water for industrial use last year dropped from 1.2 million tons to 0.24 million tons, without impeding industrial production. This showed that there is great potential for economizing on water. According to calculations, the supply of one additional ton of tapwater needs 150 yuan in investment, 0.34 kilowatt-hour of power, and the construction of a project for treating waste water, which again needs per ton of water, about 300 yuan in investment and 0.06 kilowatt-hours of power. If a project is built to economize on and recover water, it will require only 30 yuan or so in investment and 0.1 kilowatt-hour of power per ton of water. Moreover, less waste water will be discharged and there will be fewer sources of pollution.

In economizing on water, it is imperative to have a plan for water consumption and to specify a water supply quota. In cities, overall arrangements should be made for use of water in industrial production and everyday life according to the conditions of water resources and water supply. A plan should be drawn up, including the city's major water consumers such as mines, factories, service trades, public offices, schools and army units, under which seasonal and monthly quotas are assigned to them, strictly carried out by them and seriously inspected. Charges for consumption of water above the quota should be increased at graduated rates, and the supply of water to these consumers should be reduced or suspended. Those who have consumed less water than specified may be given bonuses proportionate to the volume of water saved. In this way, awards will be given to those who have used too much water. In the past 2 years, Dalian, Shanghai, Tianjin and other cities have drawn up plans for water supply and methods of rewarding those who have saved water and punishing those who have used too much water, thereby greatly promoting the work of economizing on water.

The recycling of water coolant is one of the various important measures for saving water. The volume of water used as a coolant accounts for about 50-70 percent of the volume of water used by industry and can be recovered quite easily for further use. If the recycling rate is 70 percent, more than 40 million tons of water can be saved every day throughout the country.

Furthermore, it is necessary to strengthen unified management of underground water resources and to wipe out anarchy in cities. Underground water is the state's precious resource, and it must be put under unified management. Unauthorized sinking of wells and overuse of underground water must be strictly prohibited. Sinking of wells must be approved by the department concerned and be incorporated in unified water consumption plans. Meters should be installed to calculate the volume of water used, use of water should be put under control, and fees should be charged for the water used. In handling problems of town planning, industrial installations and population distribution in the future, underground water resources should be taken into consideration and work should be done according to the objective law. Industrial projects consuming a large volume of water should not be set up in water deficient cities, so as to avoid the practice of blindly developing industry at the expense of water needed by the people in their everyday life. In suburban areas, measures should be taken to strengthen control of water for agricultural use and improve the irrigation techniques. The layout of crops should be readjusted according to the conditions of water resources. In water deficient cities, it is particularly necessary to develop the growing of farm crops which need less water, yield high output value and also yield a high percentage of commodities.

In exploiting underground water, the location and number of wells should be considered according to local hydrogeological conditions. In areas where there are many water-bearing strata, water should be obtained from a single stratum and should not be obtained from different strata at the same time, so as to guarantee balanced use of underground water resources and prevent them from being ruined. Besides, actively channeling surplus water above ground to fill the underground strata during the rainy season and vigorously reserving water in winter for use in summer are good methods for economizing on water and conserving water resources.

Vigorously treating waste water in urban areas is an important aspect which should not be neglected in protecting underground water resources. Once urban underground water is polluted, water resources will be greatly diminished, thereby aggravating the water shortage. After being treated, the waste water can replace some of the water obtained from the taps. This is also a water resource which should not be neglected.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE ON LIN BOQU'S DIARY

[Article by Chen Dengcai [7115 4098 2088]: "An Important Document About the Northern Expeditionary War During the KMT-CCP Cooperation -- Introducing the 'Diary of Lin Boqu'"]

[Text] "The Diary of Lin Boqu" (July 1926-June 1927) has now been published by the publishing house of the CCP Central Committee Party School. It is the original manuscript written by Comrade Lin Boqu himself. Before the publication of the diary, comrades from the party history materials research office of the archives library of the CCP Central Committee and from the editorial department of the STUDY OF MODERN HISTORY by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences carried out such work as compiling and checking, and on the basis of the original manuscript they made notes. Comrade Li Shizhang, who once worked together with Comrade Lin Boqu in the political department of the 6th Army of the national revolutionary corps during the great revolutionary period, wrote the preface for the published diary. This diary is an important document about the northern expeditionary war during the KMT-CCP cooperation and it provides us with invaluable firsthand historical materials for the study of the first KMT-CCP cooperation.

The 6th Army was formed from a motley collection of groups and was used in attacking Hubei Province. Its commander was Cheng Qian. It was formed into the 6th Army of the national revolutionary corps with support from Comrade Lin Boqu, who was then the party representative and director of the political department of the army. In this army, he formed a party organization and a system of political work at various levels, worked to publicize and implement the three policies of uniting with the Soviet Union, uniting with the Communist Party and supporting peasants and workers. He reformed this army with revolutionary spirit. When the northern expeditionary war began, the 6th Army was turned into a reserve army to support the 4th Army in attacking Wuhan. This diary recorded the course of the battles fought by the 6th Army. According to the operational planning of the war, the 6th Army was to support the 4th Army in attacking the army of warlord Wu Peifu and therefore it had to quickly march to Pingxiang, Liuyang, Liling and Changsha. After the main force of the 4th Army -- the independent regiment led by Ye Ting -- captured Hesheng bridge and Dingsi bridge, the 6th Army quickly marched to Jiangxi Province and it heroically conquered Nanchang and Jiujiang and after this it marched east along the Chang Jiang into Nanjing.

The diary summarized the important events that occurred during the period when Comrade Lin Boqu was working with the KMT Central Committee and the Wuhan government. It vividly reflected the situation in which he tirelessly worked night and day during the northern expeditionary war in his effort to consolidate and develop the united front of KMT-CCP cooperation. He carried out wide and frequent activities for the sake of this cooperation. He marched along with the army, read and revised documents and handled military and administrative affairs. He often consulted on matters with the army Commander Cheng Qian, deployed the army in case of fighting and paid attention to the work of promoting the unity between the army and the people. He paid attention to keeping contact with friendly armies and Soviet advisers and often met leading members from the party, and administrative and military departments. He presided over political work meetings of the 6th Army and attended various meetings such as the meetings of the political committee for the CCP Central Committee, the military committee of the CCP Central Committee, party-government joint meetings and the meetings of local party organizations, peasants' associations, army-civilian celebrations and mass rallies against imperialism. In many of his speeches he repeatedly published and implemented the three main policies and spared no effort to consolidate and develop the united front of KMT-CCP cooperation.

The diary also reflected the struggles launched by the party in uniting the leftists of the KMT in opposition to the Chiang Kai-shek military dictatorship and in carrying out blow for blow struggles against the plot of the new rightists to divide the revolution and to sabotage KMT-CCP cooperation. For example, the diary recorded the main contents of the struggles involving the removal, from Quangzhou to Wuhan, of the Nationalist government and the KMT Central Committee that began in December 1926, about the struggle involving the attack of Nanjing and particularly about the struggles during the Third Plenary Session of the Second KMT Central Committee that was convened in February, 1972. Lin Boqu was sick at that time and yet he took part in the prepartory work for the plenary session and he noted in his diary the preparations, the investigation and the whole course of the session. Because of the efforts made by the comrades from the party such as Mao Zedong, Dong Biwu, Wu Yuzhang, Yun Paiying and Lin Boqu in cooperation with KMT leftists such as Soong Ching Ling, He Xiangning and Deng Yanda, the session defended the three main policies of uniting with the Soviet Union and the Communist Party and supporting peasants and workers, reiterated the KMT-CCP cooperation and adopted the resolution on unifying the party's leading organizations and revolutionary forces.

The session affirmed the legitimate standing of the joint meeting between the executive committee of the KMT Central Committee and the committee of the Nationalist government, acknowledged that the resolution of the Wuhan provisional joint meeting continued to be effective, approved the rules and regulations on the punishment of local tyrants and evil gentry in Hubei Province and adopted the resolution and declaration on peasant problems. It must be particularly pointed out here that the session passed the amendment of the regulations regarding the commander in chief of the national revolutionary army and it was set down that only the members of the central executive standing committee had the right to make decisions in party affairs, political affairs, military affairs and administration. All important military appointments and dismissals and decisions of mobilization before the army began to fight had to be made by the military committee and had to be approved by the central executive committee. The commander in chief had no right to make his own decision. The session resolutely opposed Chiang Kai-shek's military dictatorship and removed him from his posts as chairman of the central standing committee, chairman of the military committee and minister of central organizations. Thanks to the resolute struggles carried out by communists and KMT leftists, the session smashed Chiang's plot to control the KMT Central Committee and the Wuhan Nationalist government. But the session let Chiang continue to retain his post as commander in chief of the national revolutionary army; he was not deprived of his military power. In this session, Lin Boqu was elected member of the standing committee of the central political committee. He was also appointed secretary-general of the military committee.

The diary also recorded the dauntless spirit showed by Lin Boqu in his unremitting struggles to save the revolution at the critical moment. Following the occupation of Shanghai by the workers of the city after the victory of the armed uprising, Lin Boqu visited Nanjing at the end of March to discuss with Cheng Qian the matter of punishing Chiang Kai-shek, but he did not succeed in achieveing this. Later in Yenan when he recalled this part of history he said: "By that time, Cheng Qian had a chance to make a sudden attack and solve this matter, but he said that the forces were not sufficient to defeat Chiang's army." Cheng Qian then asked Lin Boqu to go to Wuhan to discuss the matter, but the 6th Army had already been sent out of Nanjing by Chiang Kai-shek. Following the "12 April" counterrevolutionary coup d'etat that was launched by Chiang Kai-shek, Lin Boqu wrote in his diary that on 14 April he visited Borodin and it was decided that the central and military committees would issue a serious warning to Chiang Kai-shek. The diary also recorded that on 17 April he was informed that "Wang Xuelin, head of the cadet corps of the 6th Army led the cadets, disarmed pickets, killed workers and prevented people shouting anti-Chiang slogans" and he at once sent a message to Chief of Staff Tang Guiliang. The message read: "Investigate this case and escort him to the central authorities for punishment." All these showed Lin Boqu's firm proletarian stand and dauntless revolutionary spirit. He also wrote the following: At a time when the revolutionary united front was splitting up, Chiang Kai-shek stepped up his counterrevolutionary activities while Soviet advisor Borodin proposed a concessionary policy.

Following the uprising by reactionary officer Xia Douyan and others, Lin Boqu warned people to guard against the attack by "Chiang's rebel forces." But a a critical moment in the revolution, under the leadership of Chen Duxiu's capitulationism and because the CCP was still immature, on "15 July," the KMT Central Committee in Wuhan under the control of Wang Jingwei disregarded the firm opposition on the part of the KMT leftists headed by Soong Ching Ling and brazenly held a meeting to "split with the Communist Party," Thus Ningbo collaborated with Wuhan and Chiang Kai-shek collaborated with Wang Jingwei to openly massacre communists and revolutionary people and as a result the first revolutionary civil war failed.

PLA AIR FORCE UNIT SETS 30-YEAR SAFETY RECORD

[Text] According to JIEFANGJUN BAO, a certain bombardment aviation corps [hong zha hang kong bing tuan] under the Beijing PLA Air Force units has achieved a perfect safety record for nearly 30 years. Recently the CCP Central Committee's Military Commission issued an order awarding the corps a first class merit citation.

The bombardment aviation corps has performed meritorious services since 1952. It has twice changed its aviation equipment and visited 26 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions in the country during flight training. It has successfully completed 3 National Day military inespections, a scientific test flights, 36 military exercises and other war preparedness missions. It has achieved a perfect safety record for nearly 30 years and won a first class merit citation once, a second class merit citation twice, and a third class merit citation once.

SYMPOSIUM ON MAO'S EDUCATIONAL THOUGHT HELD

[Text] Wuhan, 4 Jun (XINHUA) -- China's first symposium on Mao Zedong's educational thought was held in Wuhan from 29 May to 3 June.

The symposium studied in depth the basic content and important meaning of Mao Zedong's educational thought. The participants pointed out that Mao Zedong's educational thought has been the basic guiding principle for China's great achievements in education. Comrade Mao Zedong's theories on the relationship between education and politics and economics, on the training of talented people who are socialist minded, vocationally proficient and developed in an all-round way -- morally, intellectually and physically -- on the integration of intellectuals with the masses of workers and peasants, on the combination of mental and manual labor, on the application of theory to reality, and on the mass line and policy of "walking on two legs" in education have proved correct in practice over the years and are still of great significance in education work at present and in the future. Along with the development of history and the changes in the situation, it is necessary to adopt a scientific attitude toward Mao Zedong's educational thought, while upholding and developing it at the same time.

The participants also pointed out that only by diligently studying Comrade Mao Zedong's stand, viewpoint and method in studying and solving China's problems in education on the basis of application of the fundamental principles of Marxism can we continuously solve new problems under new situations and make education better suit the needs of socialist modernization.

The symposium was jointly sponsored by the China's Education Association, the National Society for Marxist Educational Thinking and the Huazhong Teachers College.

GUANGDONG BANS BUSINESS ACTIVITIES OF ORGANS, PLA

[Report: "Guangdong Bans Illegal Business Activities, Strengthens Market Controls, Strictly Prohibits Organs, PLA Units and Others From Engaging in Import and Export Business"]

[Text] "State organs, PLA units, schools and institutions are strictly prohibited from engaging in commercial activities or import and export business, and individual work personnel of state organs, bodies, PLA units, schools, enterprises and institutions are similarly prohibited from such activities." This is proposed in the "Regulations on a Number of Questions in Banning Illegal Business Activities and Strengthening Market Controls" recently issued by the Guangdong provincial government.

In the past 2 years there have been instances in Guangdong of non-commercial departments engaging in commerce, the operation of unlicensed businesses, undertaking operations cutting across different trades, driving up prices, arbitrarily engaging in import and export business and other activities. These things have disrupted the socialist unified markets and sabotaged the state planned economy. They have also provided a hotbed for illegal and criminal activities such as smuggling and peddling contraband, engaging in bribery and corruption, and profiteering and swindling. These activities pose a very great menace.

In order to ban illegal business activities and tangibly strengthen market controls, the Guangdong provincial government's "regulations" point out: In the future, all unlicensed business operations will be regarded as illegal and banned. In light of their needs, organs, PLA units, schools, enterprises and institutions may, after gaining approval, operate worker consumer service cooperatives (small attached shops), but these can only serve the workers of their own units. They may not engage in wholesale business. If a unit opens retail shops, catering establishments and repair service shops for the purpose of providing employment for its young people awaiting employment or its family dependents, it must gain the approval of the industry and commerce administrative departments, take out a business license, and strictly carry out business according to the scope of its license. It must carry out independent accounting, be responsible for its own profits and losses, and pay tax according to the regulations. The "regulations" also point out: It is necessary to straighten out the display and sales departments of all state-owned and collective industrial production units. These units may sell that portion of their products the state allows them to sell themselves, but they may not resell items at profit or engage in operations cutting across different trades; the supply and marketing management departments of the commune and brigade enterprises and street industries may not engage in reselling items at profit, and are strictly prohibited from transferring or lending accounts and making out receipts on behalf of others. Offenders will be dealt with as speculators. The credit companies and trading warehouses operated by state commerce, supply and marketing, grain, aquatic products and other systems at and above commune level must work within the bounds permitted by state policy and concentrate their main efforts on acting as agencies for purchasing, marketing, storage and transport. Private individuals in the specialized companies subordinate to these departments and the rural brigades and production teams are not allowed to open credit companies or trading warehouses. The retail sales and management departments of agriculture-industry-commerce joint undertakings, production, supply and sales joint enterprises dealing with specialized products, and agricultural and forestry farms are not allowed to engage in operations beyond their scope and cutting across different trades.

REN ZHONGYI ATTENDS YOUNG PIONEERS RALLY

[Summary] A rally of Young Pioneers to commend "four goods" collectives and review the parade of the Young Pioneers was held this morning in the provincial gymnasium. "Provincial, municipal, party, government and PLA leaders and other responsible persons concerned, including Ren Zhongyi, Liang Lingguang, Li Jianzhen, Chen Yueping, (Chui Yan), (Xu Shijie), Ou Mengjue, Zhong Ming, Yang Kanghua, Wang Yue, (Zhen Ming), (Tao Cheng), (Lian Guoqi), (Ou Chu) and others, attended the rally and reviewed the parade of the Young Pioneers."

Despite heavy rains this morning, the provincial gymnasium was permeated with a jubilant, festive atmosphere. Colorful flags fluttered inside and outside the gymnasium and the singing was loud and clear. Large-sized slogans and placards read: "Celebrate 1 June Children's Day," "Study well and make progress every day," "Long live the Chinese Communist Party," "Long live the People's Republic of China" and so forth. The rally began at 0900. Guided by the flag of the Young Pioneers, one group of children after another marched and shouted slogans loudly and clearly. More than 2,300 members of the Young Pioneers were reviewed by the presidium. They danced beautifully to express their determination to be the flowers of the motherland who are striving to be good collectives. Despite heavy rains, all the children were full of vigor, courage and energy. This fully showed the new mental outlook of Young Pioneers in Guangzhou, who observe discipline, fear no hardship and surmount every difficulty. Everyone in the audience responded with warm applause.

Liang Lingguang, first secretary of the Guangzhou Municipal CCP Committee and mayor, spoke at the rally. He said: "On behalf of the provincial and municipal CCP committees and people's governments, I extend my warmest greetings and send my cordial regards to children and youngsters of the whole municipality." He added: "We are very happy that you grow healthily under the care of the party and people. On such a rainy day, you display your dauntless spirit and sense of discipline. This shows that there is no lack of successors to carry on the socialist cause. Therefore, we feel relieved." He went on to say: "Young Pioneers, the future of our great socialist motherland lies with you. You should listen to the party, study and build up your willpower well. You must love the motherland and socialism, be interested in science and take an active part in labor and concern for public property. You should foster communist ideology and develop a new work style. I hope that you will always remember you are the masters of new China."

SHENZHEN RECEIVES APPROVAL TO BUILD CHIWAN PORT

[Text] Shenzhen, 28 May (XINHUA) -- XINHUA correspondent He Yunhua reports: The State Council recently gave formal approval for the Shenzhen special economic zone to establish a limited company to raise funds for the construction of the Chiwan port. This is a meaningful attempt in our country's economic restructuring. In the past, the departments concerned have carried on endless discussions for years on questions such as where to get the money for the construction of the Chiwan port, who should be in charge of the construction, and so forth. Now, it has been decided that a China Nanshan Development Company, Ltd will be jointly organized by the Hong Kong China Merchant Steam Navigation Company, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone Development Company, the Eastern South China Sea Oilfield Company, the Hong Kong Bank of China, the Hong Kong Hua Run Company and other units, as well as some foreign enterprises. This company will be responsible for fundraising, port construction tasks and land development work in the designated area of the Nanshan Peninsula. The company's board of directors will be established in the very near future.

The construction of the Chiwan port is of great economic significance. The port is located on the eastern side of the Zhujiang Kou [Pearl River Estuary] and near the Nanshan Peninsula. It is flanked by Shi Shan [Lion Mountain] on the left and Hu Shan [Tiger Mountain] on the right. In the past this was the first line of defense when Lin Zexu defended the Humen Fort on the Zhujiang Kou. There is a 2-kilometer-long deep-water coastline here suitable for the construction of deep-water wharves. It is only 20 nautical miles by sea from here to Hong Kong's central district, and about 80 nautical miles to Guangzhou. The construction of the Chiwan port will provide a good logistics base for the exploration and development of the Zhujiang Kou oilfield and a port for the Shenzhen special economic zone to open domestic and foreign shipping lines. At the same time, it will provide a new port for the south China-Guangdong-Guangxi region to develop foreign trade

According to the port construction plan jointly proposed by the Guangdong Provincial People's Government, the Shenzhen Municipal People's Government and the Ministry of Petroleum Industry, the Chiwan port will be built in stages, and will be used while under construction. As the port and wharves are under construction, land in the Chiwan area will be fully utilized for the development -- in a planned way -- of relevant enterprises to serve petroleum exploration and exploitation and shipping businesses.

The first stage of the Chiwan port project includes the construction of two longitudinal wharves of the 5,000-ton class, one or two anchorages or berths of the 10,000-ton class, anchorages and berths for the loading and unloading of ships and the completion of roads, water, power, telegraph, telephone and other basic facilities on an 0.6 square kilometer area of land. The plan calls for raising 100 million HK dollars for the above-mentioned projects first. The second stage construction will begin after 1985 and the plan calls for the construction of wharves and berths of the 10,000-ton and 50,000-ton classes and corresponding ancillary facilities to give play to the port's role as the logistics base for the Zhujiang Kou oilfield.

HENAN RADIO DISCUSSES PROBLEMS OF RURAL LEADERSHIP

HK280841 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 27 May 82

[Station commentary: "Give Full Play to the Functions of Rural Organizations at the Basic Level"]

[Excerpts] Following the promotion of all types of production responsibility systems and the all-round development of rural economy in this province, production has increased by a large margin and there has been a notable change in the face of our rural areas. This is the principal aspect. However, some new conditions and new problems have emerged at the same time which require that we safeguard the mainstay position of the collective economy and strengthen unified leadership, centralized management and coordination work. Due to the fact that some of our cadres have fallen short of present demands on ideological understanding and method of work, some of them either dare not or are unwilling to handle new problems. Many of them are unable to handle new problems. As a result, they feel that there is no work to be done and that their burdens have been lightened, and thus slacken their efforts to carry out leadership work. Some of them have even turned into either a state of paralysis or a state of semiparalysis, resulting in production losses that should not have occurred. In fact, under the current situation in which most production teams have divided management duties among households and implemented the decentralized allocation of the labor force, we should pay more attention to conscientiously implementing the party's economic policy, fully mobilize the enthusiasm of commune members, do more painstaking ideological and political work, strengthen education in loving the country, the party and socialism, guide our commune members to correctly handle relations among the state, the collective and the individual, do a more solid job of popularizing advanced technology, and spread scientific knowledge among all households. Moreover, we must also improve our methods of promoting planned parenthood work, militia training and public security work. It is quite evident that not only have the burdens on cadres not been lightened, but instead they have been increased. The key to strengthening leading groups at the basic level lies in promoting training and education for cadres. We must assist them in enhancing their understanding of policies, in improving their work style and in suiting the needs of the new situation.

We hope that all work teams will make unremitting efforts and continue to assist leading groups at the basic level in successfully guiding the three summer tasks [planting, harvesting and field management]. We hope that vast numbers of cadres at the basic level will be bold in shouldering heavy loads, have the courage to assume responsibility, and stand up to all tests and continuously improve their leadership in doing the three summer tasks.

SHAANXI RIBAO ON ECONOMIC CRIME CAMPAIGN

HK071510 Xian SHAANXI RIBAO in Chinese 29 May 82 p 2

["Weekly Commentary" by Yuan Zuji [5913 4371 1015]: "Clarifying Certain Erroneous Ideas"]

[Text] At present, a campaign is being launched against serious crimes in the economic field. It is an important manifestation of our socialist society's class struggle under the new historical conditions in the economic field and a struggle being carried out among Communist Party members and state workers to preserve the purity of communism and oppose decadence. Only by resolutely clearing away this obstacle to modernization will it be possible to ensure our progress along the course of socialism. In order for this struggle to be launched resolutely and effectively, certain erroneous ideas need to be rectified.

The first is that economic crimes are being committed all the time and therefore it is not worth making a fuss about them.

To be sure, econmic crimes are being committed all the time. We have had them in the past and we will have them in the future. However, they are particularly rampant at present. They are already seriously hindering the progress of modernization. Noteworthy are the smuggling and selling of contraband, corruption and bribery, speculation and deception, the stealing of state and collective property, and other criminal activities. Not only has there been a clear increase in the last few years, but many have been the result of the collusion of a minority of people in state organs and in enterprises and institutions with lawless elements in society. From the cases that have been uncovered, it can be seen that some people have even used credit loans and funds from banks, credit cooperatives and units, appropriated garages and facilities and used vehicles, railway cars, accounts, contracts, evidence, bills and so forth. They have got their hands on quite a few important state-controlled goods and materials and commodities in short supply and are conducting illegal transactions. The amount of property they have appropriated would easily amount to thousands and thousands of yuan. It can be said that the scale of economic crimes and the damage they cause are greater than at any time since the founding of the PRC. If, in view of this, we do not exercize a high degree of vigilance, how can socialist modernization be carried out smoothly?

Second: People are concerned that this struggle will deviate from the central task of economic construction.

This anxiety is uncalled for. The building of a material civilization and the building of a spiritual civilization are mutually complementary and closely linked. The damage brought about by serious economic crimes not only jeopardizes our economic construction, causing our economic activities to gradually depart from socialist principles and direction, but it also corrupts our cadre ranks, pollutes the social climate and poisons people's minds. If we completely ignore this and continue to grasp production regardless, we cannot possibly do a good job of economic construction. Wherever resolute measures have been taken to grasp this struggle, a healthy atmosphere prevails, people's hearts are at one, Taishan could be moved and a prosperous scene has emerged on the production front. Thus, we can say that the grasping of this struggle is not only beneficial to speeding up economic construction, but it is also indispensable for correcting and improving the social climate and constitutes the most effective and practical means of rectifying party style under the present conditions.

And third is the fear that this will be unfavorable to implementing the open-door policy of stimulating the domestic economy.

This is wrong. The aim of the open-door policy is to utilize foreign capital and technology to speed up the modernization of our country. However, economic criminals do not care about state and human dignity, for they harm the reputation and interests of the state for the sake of their own wallets. The aim of the stimulation of the domestic economy is to proceed from the actual conditions prevailing in our country at present to arouse the initiative of everyone into speeding up the development in the shortest time and raising economic returns in a flexible and lively way. However, economic criminals take advantage of the situation to create disorder. They fish in troubled waters and do their utmost to steer the course of our country's economic construction in the direction of capitalism. From this it can be seen that the grasping of this struggle is for the purpose of clearing away obstacles, so that this policy can be smoothly implemented. If we are plagued by worries and softhearted, normal economic activities with foreign countries and domestic economic activities will be adversely affected and this correct policy will suffer interference. Only by resolutely launching a struggle can we bring about a healthy, new look in our economic construction.

WANG ZHEN INSPECTS URUMQI FERTILIZER PLANT

[Summary] On 3 June Comrade Wang Zhen, member of the CCP Central Committee Political Bureau, member of the Central Military Commission Standing Committee, and director of the Central Committee Party School, visited and inspected the worksite of the big chemical fertilizer plant of the Urumqi petrochemical plant. He was accompanied by regional CCP committee First Secretary Wang Enmao.

The State Council decided to build this chemical fertilizer plant in 1978. It is planned to produce 300,000 tons of synthetic ammonia and 520,000 tons of urea a year. "In May last year, when Comrade Wang Zhen was temporarily working in Xinjiang, he personally carried out investigation and study at the worksite and held a forum with experts and technicians. He delivered important instructions on how to speed up construction of the plant in view of the fact that most of the equipment was already on site and the work force was also there, and in accordance with the suggestions and demands of the experts, engineers, technicians, and worker masses. The workers, engineers and technicians were greatly encouraged thereby. Work rapidly started on the installation work of the project."

After listening to reports on 3 June, Comrade Wang Zhen said: "This big chemical fertilizer installation is one of the major modern projects built in Xinjiang since the liberation 32 years ago. Its technology is advanced and there is a high degree of automation. Completing this project and putting it into production will play a major role in stimulating the development of Xinjiang's agriculture and animal husbandry and increasing production of grain, cotton, oil crops and animal products. It will play a major role in increasing Xinjiang's revenue and promoting the development of the entire national economy."

"Wang Zhen expressed the hope that everyone would continue to work hard, carry forward the achievements and complete the installation work and put the project into production as quickly as possible."

Comrade Wang Zhen also cordially received representatives of Japanese and FRG companies helping with the construction work, and thanked them for coming to Xinjiang. He said: "China is still very poor and backward compared with the developed countries. China's progress from poor to rich and from backward to advanced will be beneficial for preserving world peace."

WANG ENMAO AT XINJIANG RURAL CONSTRUCTION MEETING

[Summary] The second Xinjiang regional conference on rural construction, held recently, stressed: It is necessary to integrate all rural construction with the building of material and spiritual civilization and fully mobilize the enthusiasm of the communes, brigades and peasants for building new socialist rural areas.

Regional CCP Committee First Secretary Wang Enmao spoke at the meeting on the importance of rural construction, the relationship between house-building and the building of "five goods" in the rural areas, the design, investment, and rights in rural houses, building materials for rural houses, construction management organs, and the strengthening of leadership over rural construction.

The meeting held: In the 1960's, the regional CCP committee summed up the experiences of the basic agricultural construction plans of the Xinjiang production and construction corps and put forward guiding principles and the demand for building good farmland, channels, roads, tree belts and residential settlements. In view of the fact that this "five goods" construction was sabotaged during the 10-year catastrophe, it is now necessary to develop it further in addition to reviving it as quickly as possible. The region should gradually accomplish its blueprint for a new socialist countryside. Construction scales and methods should be decided on in light of local conditions. The initiative of both the collectives and the individuals should be brought into play.

This conference was held in Urumqi from 25 May to 1 June. Regional leaders including Ismail Amat, Tomur Dawamat, Huang Luobin, Li Jiayu and Janabil attended.

URUMQI PLA LEADERS COMMEND AIR FORCE UNIT

HK060421 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 5 Jun 82

[Text] On the morning of 24 May, Urumqi PLA units Commander Xiao Quanfu and Political Commissar Tan Youlin visited the commanders and fighters of the Hongqilapu navigation station on the Pamir Plateau — the roof of the world -- of a certain unit of the air force command center, and commended them for their contributions to paving a "silk road of the air." They urged them to maintain their fine reputation and score still greater achievements in defending the border.

While at the site, Comrades Xiao Quanfu and Tan Youlin earnestly asked the cadres and fighters about their study, daily life and health. Accompanied by cadres of the station, they visited the company's room of honor. They also presented the personnel with fresh melons they had brought with them. Before leaving, they were photographed with all personnel of the station.

SOUTH XINJIANG PLA MEN FOUGHT BLIZZARD IN MAY

[Summary] The commanders and fighters of south Xinjiang military district recently fought 4 days and nights to crash-rescue 160 marooned vehicles and personnel marooned by a blizzard. This blizzard started on 11 May, blocking traffic on the Xinjiang-Xizang highway. Some 160 PLA and local vehicles were marooned. Over 300 drivers and passengers were thus endangered. On 14 May, on receiving this information, the leading organs of the south Xinjiang military district of the Urumqi PLA units immediately ordered all subordinate units to dispatch five rescue groups and equipment to crash-rescue the people and vehicles. Some of them persistently carried on the fight despite snow blindness. The rescue work was completed in 4 days.

SENATOR GOLDWATER'S TAIWAN VISIT ASSAILED

[Commentary by XINHUA correspondent Yu Enguang: "Goldwater Goes Against the Trend of the Times"]

[Text] Washington, 6 Jun (XINHUA) -- U.S. Republican Senator Barry Goldwater visited Taiwan from 29 May to 4 June. It is reported that, at the invitation of the American Chamber of Commerce in Taibei, he went to Taiwan to spend his vacation along with his family. In fact, however, he rushed about in Taiwan to actively engage in activities to oppose the Chinese Government and undermine Sino-U.S. relations.

During his stay in Taiwan, Goldwater held talks with the Taiwan authorities and had wide contacts with people of all walks of life. He also made several statements to reporters. His statements can generally be summed up as follows: Regarding Taiwan as the largest "aircraft carrier" in the world, he called on the United States to recognize the so-called "free China" in Taiwan, opposed the great cause of reunifying China and denounced the Chinese Government's nine-point proposal for the peaceful reunification of the motherland by alleging that that proposal was "propaganda" and the "prelude" to the use of force against Taiwan. He advocated implementing the "Taiwan Relations Act" and declared that this law "is absolutely unamendable." He not only asked the Reagan administration to continue arms sales to Taiwan, but also clamored that he would, upon his return to the United States, urge the Reagan administration to sell more fighters to Taiwan, and so on and so forth.

These statements by Goldwater are but the same old tune he has played for years in opposing communism, China and the Chinese people. The fact that he went to Taiwan at this time to play the same old tune cannot but attract people's attention.

Goldwater visited Taiwan at a time when Sino-U.S. relations have been undergoing a serious test. Ten years after the publication of the Shanghai Communique and 3 years after the normalization of Sino-U.S. relations, the U.S. Government is still continuing its arms sales to Taiwan on the pretext of implementing the "Taiwan Relations Act," which runs counter to the Shanghai Communique and the communique on the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and the United States. China and the United States have continuously held negotiations on this issue for more than 10 months, but the issue of U.S. arms sales to Taiwan remains unresolved and the danger of a retrogression in Sino-U.S. relations still exists. In going to Taiwan to spout a stream of empty rhetoric at this time, his real aim was to poison and undermine Sino-U.S. relations.

Goldwater is obviously aware that the broad masses of people and sensible statesmen in the United States all advocate the continuing development of Sino-U.S. relations. They hold that any setbacks in Sino-U.S. relations are not in the interest of the two countries and world peace. However, Goldwater still obstinately clings to his course and goes against the trend of the times. This only shows that he is headstrong and blind to reality and the overall situation.

Goldwater spouted a stream of rhetoric in Taiwan at a time when the Chinese Government's nine-point proposal for the peaceful reunification of China has been putting down roots in the hearts of people on both sides of the Taiwan Strait. Slandering the Chinese Government's proposal and undermining the great cause of reunifying China was another objective of Goldwater's visit to Taiwan. Goldwater described himself as "an old friend of China," but he is hostile to new China with a population of nearly 1 billion. Earlier, on several occasions, he denounced the Chinese Government's opposition to U.S. arms sales to Taiwan as a so-called "interference in U.S. internal affairs" and called on the U.S. Government to resist "China's threat." Now he went to China's Taiwan Province where he talked glibly about support for the so-called "free China" and opposed socialist new China, thus undisguisedly interfering in China's internal affairs. Goldwater's acts show that what he has in mind is still power politics of the 19th century and that he thinks he has the right to determine the destiny of the Chinese poeple.

Goldwater's visit was not a fortuitous event. In the United States there is, indeed, a small diehard anti-China force and Goldwater is a representative of this small force. This force is small in number, but it has big, wide ambitions. Members of this force carry out activities everywhere. They write articles with two aims in mind. One aim is to undermine Sino-U.S. relations, and the other is to oppose the reunification of China. Now, as Sino-U.S. relations are at a critical point, they are carrying out their activities even more vigorously.

However, history is developing and the times are advancing. Sino-U.S. relations will certainly develop and the great cause of reunifying China will certainly be accomplished in the long run. No matter how overbearing the anti-China diehards are, they will all eventually be spurned by the trend of the times.

ARGENTINA NOT TO PARTICIPATE IN SOFTBALL MEET

[Text] Buenos Aires, May 20 (XINHUA) -- Argentina has decided not to participate in the fifth world women's softball championship to be held in China's Taibei next July.

The president of the Argentine Softball Federation, Fernando Jorge Arem, told XINHUA this morning that the decision of the federation not to take part in the contest was made at the suggestion of the Argentine Olympic Committee. He siad that his country respects the resolution adopted by the International Softball Federation at its congress in Honolulu. Any acts in violation of that resolution are absurd, he added.

WEN WEI PO ON CHINA INVESTMENT CONFERENCE

Text of Chen Muhua Speech

HK080642 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 8 Jun 82 p 3

[Text of Chen Muhua's speech at the opening ceremony of China investment promotion meeting on 7 June 1982]

[Text] Respected Dr Khane, respected ladies and gentlemen and all comrades: The China investment promotion meeting officially opened today. The meeting is jointly sponsored by the Chinese Government and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization [UNIDO]. On behalf of the Chinese Government, I wish to extend my cordial welcome to Dr Abd-El Rahman Khane, gentlemen of UNIDO, industrialists and bankers of many countries, private investors, and Chinese compatriots from Hong Kong and Macao, as well as all guests and friends. In the course of preparing this meeting, UNIDO, Dr Khane and other officials have done a lot of work and given strong backing. For this we express our heartfelt thanks.

The socialist economic construction in China is being carried out by relying mainly on our own efforts while making external assistance subsidiary. The policy of opening to the world is China's long-term policy decision. We hold that with the present high level of technology in production, no country in the world possesses all the resources and funds needed for the development of its economy, or has all the advanced technology in the world. Every country must make trade-offs with other countries for its needs. Besides, there is also a question of reasonable economic returns. Every nation's economy has its pluses and minuses and each can achieve the best overall economic results only through exchanges. Therefore, most of the countries in the world pursue an open economic policy in developing their economies. According to China's concrete conditions and conventional international practices, the introduction of applicable advanced technology and equipment and the absorption of foreign funds on the basis of equality, mutual benefit and exchanges for each other's needs are manifestations of China's open economic policy. This is done to speed up China's socialist construction. The present meeting is just a useful attempt in seeking international cooperation.

Over the past 3 years since the promulgation of the "Law of the PRC Concerning Joint Ventures With Chinese and Foreign Investment" on 8 July 1979, China has made a good start in developing international economic cooperation, absorbing direct private investment from abroad and carrying out joint ventures with foreign investors and also has gained some experiences in this respect. This has provided a favorable condition for China's future development in internatinal economic cooperation.

The readjustment of China's national economy in recent years and the current crackdown on criminal economic activities do not mean any change in China's policy of opening to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. On the contrary, they will guarantee the smooth implementation of China's domestic and foreign policies. Through the readjustment, China's economic construction has entered a new period of steady development. From now on, we will carry out technical transformation in existing enterprises so as to give full play to their role. On the other hand, we will appropriately concentrate our efforts on the construction of key projects in the fields of energy, communications and transportation. In these two aspects, we need to import applicable advanced technology and equipment and continue to absorb and utilize foreign funds. The 130 economic projects which are to be put forward at the current meeting have been worked out under these conditions. In making use of foreign funds, not only will we benefit from the development of China's construction, but we will also enable foreign investors to obtain their proper interests.

The holding of this investment promotion meeting is entirely new to China. We still lack experience in many respects. However, if we can earnestly and sincerely work on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, and if we can hold discussions in a friendly way, I believe the meeting will surely conclude successfully and our cooperation will reap rich fruits.

Finally, I wish all of you good health and success in work. Thank you!

Significance of Meeting

[Special feature by WEN WEI PO correspondents' group: "The China Investment Promotion Conference Has Major Influence and Far-Reaching Significance"]

[Text] After long and serious preparations, the China investment promotion conference jointly convened by the Chinese Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Ministry and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization [UNIDO] will be opened in Guangzhou on 7 June. For the occasion, Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Minister Chen Muhua will go personally to Guangzhou to preside over the opening ceremony. Deputy Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Minister Wei Yumin and UNIDO Executive Director Abd-El Rahman Khane will jointly preside over the 5-day conference. The State Planning Commission, State Economic Commission and Guangdong Province will also send important officials to participate in leading the conference. The delegations sent by the 23 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions in the country that have proposed cooperative projects have arrived in Guangzhou and the departments concerned of the central authorities have also sent officials to attend the conference. China attaches considerable importance to the conference.

The reason China attaches special importance to this conference is that, first of all, this is the first large-scale international economic cooperation conference, aimed at absorbing overseas investment, which China has convened since the founding of the PRC, and is actually the first one over. This conference is also the largest of its kind in scale which UNIDO has convened over the years in various parts of the world. The scale of this conference finds expression in the fact that, first, China has set forth a large number of cooperative projects, including various industrial trades such as light industry, textiles, chemical industry, metallurgy, electronics, building materials, machine building and wood processing, totaling 130 projects; second, there are a great many participants in the conference, with more than 470 overseas investors from 320 companies receiving invitations after registration. Of these, many are foreign businessmen from Hong Kong and Japan, with a total of 48 and 43 participating companies respectively; American investors from the other shore of the Pacific Ocean are especially enthusiastic, with a total of 53 companies participating; West European countries, such as France, West Germany, Italy and Britain, are also on the list of those countries with many participants, each with 20 to 30 companies participating. In view of the growing numbers of participants, the scale of the conference has repeatedly exceeded the original plans. The number of participants, with the addition of domestic participants, now totals more than 1,300 persons. The conference will enable the sponsors of the Chinese cooperative projects to establish a much more extensive and long-term cooperative relationship with overseas investors than the general trade is able to do. It also shows that the conference is a major step in China's efforts to continue to resolutely implement the open-door policy. The conference is a new starting point for China to enter the world arena, open up broad areas of international economic cooperation and set up and develop international economic relationships.

The fact that the China investment promotion conference will be opened on schedule and is in a position to set forth more than 100 cooperative projects for discussion at the conference is remarkable in itself. It shows that China, in implementing the open-door policy, has constantly tried to sum up experiences in utilizing foreign funds, grasped the extremely important means of absorbing direct investment from foreign businessmen and taken it as the most important means for absorbing foreign funds in the near future. At the same time, by carrying out this work, it has also improved its initiative and planning and expanded its choice. This marks another step forward in the work of utilizing foreign funds on the basis of summing up experiences and lessons in the past few years.

All people in Hong Kong and Macao economic circles understand that when China started to implement an open-door foreign policy, a large number of foreign businessmen successively came to China to discuss various kinds of cooperation. The responsible persons of various localities and departments in China found it hard to attend to them all.

However, the talks failed to yield many results. Why? As far as China was concerned, the main problem was still its lack of necessary experience. It also lacked the necessary feasibility study of and preparations for the projects being discussed. When the clients called, they set to work in a hurry, coping with the situation passively. The various localities were very active in utilizing foreign funds. However, in view of the fact that they had not studied the feasibility of the projects and did not have a complete plan for negotiations, they usually did not know what to do and had to say "we shall study it further" as soon as their talks entered a substantive stage. Moreover, there was not enough coordination between the various departments and between the higher and the lower levels. This resulted in different opinions which delayed the reaching of a decision and bungled the chance of success. The situation is very different in be current China investment promotion conference. Before looking for a partner in cooperation, they have conducted advance study on the feasibility of each project. Every problem, such as the terms of the project, the qualifications of the partner, the ways to hold talks and the conditions under which a contract can be signed, has been repeatedly deliberated. This practice will undoubtedly set an example to all enterprises and factories which intend to conduct economic cooperation with foreign countries and will enable them to understand how to turn a passive position into an active one in their economic contacts with foreign countries and how to embark on the road of economizing on time and energy and improving efficiency.

Overseas participants in the conference will come to grips with 130 projects. In fact, this figure has been finally fixed after repeated eliminations and screenings from hundreds of projects proposed by the various localities. These projects have not only been examined and verified by the enterprises and the departments in charge of the work, but have also been repeatedly studied by the economic commissions, the planning commissions and the departments responsible for foreign economic relations at the provincial and state levels. This reflects the serious and conscientious attitude China has adopted toward absorbing foreign funds. However, it should be noted in particular that, under the management system of ensuring that the planned economy plays the primary role, China has taken an extremely important step in adopting this practice. It means that all projects set forth have been approved by state planning and, as soon as Chinese and foreign partners successfully conclude their talks on these projects, the supply of funds, manpower, raw materials and fuels needed for the projects and the sale of products inside the country as well as communications and transportation will be included in the state development plan and guaranteed by the state plan. This will remove a lot of difficulties and obstacles in the normal operation of the joint projects after preparations for the projects have been made and after they have been put into operation. Furthermore, after the two parties have reached an agreement on these projects through negotiations, they still have to submit these projects through negotiations, they still have to submit these projects to the government departments responsible for the work for examination and approval according to the stipulations of the Chinese Government. However, this is not a question of whether the projects are feasible and whether the state needs these projects, but a question of examining whether the agreement signed between the two parties accords with the principle of equality and mutual benefit and with the relevant Chinese laws and regulations and whether the expected results can be ensured. Thus, the procedure for approval will be much simpler and easier. This practice is of great positive significance in simplifying procedure, improving efficiency and speeding up the pace of China's foreign economic cooperation, and particularly in the smooth and solid execution of the specific projects.

A few years ago, China shifted from the policy, of many years' standing, of being closed to international intercourse to an open-door policy. It was unfamiliar with the situation in foreign countries. When the clients called on them for the first time, they held trade talks. It was only natural that both parties could not have much choice, particularly in the case of China. The current China investment promotion conference provides both parties with extensive choices. Every project has been applied for by five, six or even more foreign companies and every foreign company has selected many projects. Through the conference, both parties can conduct repeated and multilateral talks, "compare goods from three different shops" and choose the most suitable partners of cooperation through comparison.

This conference has provided China with a very good opportunity to directly state its policy concerning foreign economic cooperation to overseas personalities, answer a few questions of interest to overseas investors and listen to views from the external world. This is of far-reaching significance in China's efforts to absorb foreign funds and carry out foreign economic cooperation in the future.

HONG KONG-BEIJING MOTOR RALLY TO BE HELD

HK080205 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 8 Jun 82 p 11

[By Francis Lo]

[Excerpt] The first modern international motor rally ever to be held in China -- the Hong Kong-Beijing international motor rally -- will definitely go ahead next spring.

The secretary-general of the Association of Motor Sports of the People's Republic of China, Mr Qi Jincheng, and the executive director of the Hong Kong Automobile Association, Mr Phil Taylor, said yesterday that they had agreed to run the rally jointly.

The proposal for the rally, which came from Mr Taylor, has now received the approval and support it needs from the relevant departments of the Chinese Government and detailed planning for the event will now begin. Mr Taylor said yesterday that the exact starting date of the rally would be announced shortly, after consultations with the Federation Internationale du Sport Automobile, whose Executive Committee has approved the rally in principle and under whose international rules the rally would be run.

The precise route of the rally and some of the enormous logistical problems involved in staging it will be worked out during a trial run to be held late next month. Mr Taylor himself will make the trial run and will be accompanied by senior officials from both the HKAA and the AMSPRC, who will prepare a route book as they go along. The proposed route displayed yesterday at a press conference to announce the rally is a very direct one. It runs from Hong Kong to Shenzhen and then traverses about 3,000 km of road, much of it unseen by foreigners for decades, until it reaches Beijing.

Competitors will race through the provinces of Guangdong, Hunan, Anhui, Hubei, Henan, Shandong and Hebei before reaching the municipality of Beijing. They will drive either specially designed rally cars (type B) or normal models with very little modification (type A) and will probably take three days and three nights to cover the course.

Both Mr Taylor and Mr Qi indicated yesterday that the question of logistics -- providing back-up services and supplies for the competitors -- is the biggest problem facing the rally's organisers. Mr Qi admitted that China's lack of experience in motorsports and the length of the course might cause a lot of problems, but said he was confident of success. "We have not seen the ground yet, but we have a lot of information and we know it (the rally) is practical," Mr Taylor added.

At the conference, Mr Taylor said a "package of services" would be constructed to provide competitors with the special visas, driving licences, vehicle registration and route maps that they would need to drive through China. Fuel, breakdown and recovery services, accommodation in Hong Kong and Beijing and return sea freight from Tianjin would also be provided, he said. Rest and service points and communications network will be set up along the 3,000-km route to cope with the logistics problem.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF VERSAILLES SUMMIT REVIEWED

["Paris Dispatch: 'A Difficult Summit' by XINHUA Correspondent" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Paris, June 6 -- The seven-nation Western summit closed at Versailles today after reaching compromise on some issues but leaving behind serious differences on many questions of substance arising from deepening economic crisis.

West Europe and Canada regard the U.S. policy of high interest rates as an important cause for the disorder at the money market, for the dollar's rising exchange rates against other Western currencies and for the failure of economic recovery in West Europe and Canada. They want the United States to reduce its budget deficits and interests rates and intervene in the fluctuations of the money market so as to ensure a stable exchange parity. France hopes to see a world monetary system to link the U.S. dollar and the Japanese yen with the European currencies.

The United States, however, has since the 1981 summit refused to lower its interest rates. At the Versailles summit it only agreed its [as received] state in an appendix to the final communique that the participating countries would intervene, if necessary, in the disorder at the monetary market.

French President Francois Mitterrand has noted that this statement represents a progress, but he pointed out that the statement is so ambiguous that the United States has practically undertaken no concrete obligations at all.

U.S. Treasury Secretary Donald Regan explicitly stated during the summit session that the United States would undertake no commitment to change its policy towards intervention. The United States holds that West Europe's trade credits to the Soviet Union are so large and generous that they have virtually become subsidies to help strengthen Soviet military potential. Prior to the summit, high U.S. officials had visited West European countries in a vain attempt to advise them to curb their credits to the Soviet Union. This U.S. dispute with West Europe and Canada became the sharpest at the summit. The U.S. treasury secretary said the Western countries should cherish their common interests in face of Soviet threats. The French president argued that West European trade with the Soviet Union is very insignificant because it accounts for only one percent of the Soviet Union's gross national product. The West German chancellor pointed out that French and West German trade with the Soviet Union and East European bloc has respectively dropped 20 and 25 percent since 1978 while U.S. trade with the area has increased 50 percent.

After much wrangling, an agreement was finally reached that the participating nations would, for the sake of political and security interests, limit their credits and strategic materials exports to the Soviet Union. A compromise was believed to be made by the West European countries and Canada to raise their interest rates of loans to the Soviet Union from 10.5 to 11.5 percent.

For competitions at world markets, the Western industrial countries, in spite of their own protectionist measures, have been urging other countries to open their domestic markets to outside world. The Versailles summit reaffirmed its opposition to protectionism but adopted no specific measures against it. It was decided that this problem would be further discussed by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

On North-South relations, France and some other countries adopted a positive attitude toward North-South dialogue because they saw in this a way to ensure their raw materials supply and commodity markets and free themselves of economic crises. But the United States was not so enthusiastic. The summit only agreed to support global negotiations on North-South relations but did not go deep into this important question.

A concrete result of the summit was the approval of a report entitled "Technology, Employment and Economic Growth" submitted by the French president. The report calls for economic and social developments and the creation of more job opportunities through the advances of science and technology so as to find a way out of the economic crisis.

It is generally held here that the results of the summit reflect a trend of the Western countries to seek possible compromises through consultations in a joint effort to tackle their critical economic problems.

ADDITION TO SECOND ROUND OF ZHAO-SUZUKI TALKS

The following addition to the item headlined "Premier Zhao Ziyang Begins Visit" and subtitled "Second Zhao-Suzuki Talks," published in the 1 June China DAILY REPORT, page D 7, is supplied from Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1510 GMT on 1 June:

In the last paragraph on page D 7, the following passage is added at the end of the first sentence: "...China and Japan. The three-point principle is: 1. Vigorous efforts are to be made to develop the economic relations between the two countries in accordance with the joint statement by the Chinese and Japanese Governments and the Sino-Japanese treaty of peace and friendship and on the basis of existing peaceful and friendly relations between the two countries. 2. In accordance with the principle of equality and mutual benefit and proceeding from each other's needs and possibilities, Sino-Japanese economic relations should continuously develop in breadth and depth. China and Japan should help supply each other's needs and make up each other's deficiencies. 3. The development of such economic relations, which accords with the fundamental interests of the Chinese and Japanese people and their desire to remain friends from generation to generation, should be longstanding and stable and not be affected by international storms. He said that ..."

U.S. SPOKESMAN CITED ON ISRAELI RAIDS ON LEBANON

[Text] Washington, June 7 (XINHUA) -- "The United States strongly supports the independence. territorial integrity and sovereignty of Lebanon within its internationally recognized borders," declared U.S. State Department spokesman Alan Romberg at a press briefing today. He said that "a divided Lebanon must not be the outcome of this present violence" and "Israel will have to withdraw its forces from Lebanon." The spokesman also said that "the Palestinians will have to stop using Lebanon as a launching pad for attacks on Israel."

He evaded a reply to a question whether the United States supports or opposes the Israeli raids on Lebanon, but said instead that "we (the United States) deeply regret that the spiral of violence that began with the assassination attempt against the Israeli ambassador to Britain and that moved on to Israeli air strikes on Lebanon and Palestinian shelling of Israel has now reached new heights, threatening the lives and property of a great many innocent people in Lebanon." Asked whether U.S. arms in the pipeline are still going to Israel, he said: "I have no suggestion at this point that there is any delay or halt."

The White House last week reportedly notified Congress quietly of its plans to sell Israel an additional 75 F-16 jet fighters valued at 2.7 billion dollars to be paid by U.S. aid in the form of foreign military sales credits. Israel already has 75 F-16's from the arms package approved in 1978. The planes were delivered between 1980 and this year. In another deal, Congress approved the sale of 11 F-15 jet fighters to Israel, also to be paid by FMS credits.

TRADE PROMOTION GROUP RETURNS FROM MOSCOW

[Text] Moscow, June 7 (XINHUA) -- A delegation of China Committee for the Promotion of International Trade left here for home today after condluding a two-week visit to the Soviet Union. The delegation headed by Zheng Hongye, vice-chairman of the committee, arrived here on May 23 at the invitation of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

During its stay here, the delegation called on Yevgeniy Pirovranov, vice-chairman of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce and Industry; and Zhuravlov, first vice-minister of the Soviet Foreign Trade Ministry. They exchanged views on promoting the trade relations between the two countries. The delegation visited the third international light industry exhibition in Moscow, and the industrial and agricultural projects in Moscow, Leningrad and Erivan. The delegation also visited historic sites and beauty spots. [Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese on 9 June carries a XINHUA report on this subject in which the last paragraph is deleted and replaced with the following: "They also held business talks with related departments of the Soviet Federation of Industry and Commerce. This visit repaid the visit to China by a delegation of the Soviet Federation of Industry and Commerce in 1979."]

SOVIET ATHLETES TO PARTICIPATE IN BEIJING MEET

[Text] Beijing, June 7 (XINHUA) -- About 40 foreign athletes from nine countries, including some Olympic champions, and 48 Chinese athletes will compete in the 1982 Beijing track and field international tournament from June 18 to 20, according to the Chinese Track and Field Association.

Entered in the coming tournament are teams from Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, India, Japan, Romania, the Soviet Union, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago and China.

The Olympic champions and top athletes include the Soviet Union's Tatiana Kazankina, two-time Olympic champion in the women's 1,500 meter race, Ljudmila Kondratyeva, 1980 Olympic champion in the women's 100 meter and 200 meter sprints, Tatiana Kolpakova, Olympic champion in the women's long jump, Vera Komisova, Olympic champion in the women's 100-meter hurdle, Lasse Viren of Finland, two-time Olympic champions in the 5,000 and 10,000 meters races, Ilona Slupianek of the German Democratic Republic, who improved the women's shotput world record two times and captured the 22nd Olympic games champion in the event.

Japan will send a team of the nation's top athletes. Two sprinters from Thailand and two middle and long distance runners from India all achieved good results in Asian athletics meets.

Romania and Trinidad and Tobago have not yet sent in the namelists.

The Chinese team includes Zhou Zhenxian, champion in triple jump at the 11th world university games; Zhu Jianhua, Asian men's high jump record holder; Liu Yuhuang, runner-up in the long jump event at the 11th world university games.

The 1982 national track and field championships will be held at the same time as the Beijing international torunament, the association announced.

RAILWAYS OFFICIAL ON PRC-JAPAN COOPERATION

[Feature by correspondent Ling Hongjun [3249 1347 0139]: "Friendly and Mutually Beneficial Cooperation -- Ministry of Railways Capital Construction General Bureau Acting Director Liu Linxiang Talks on Use of Foreign Investment"]

[Text] Acting Director Liu Linxiang and this correspondent sat opposite each other. The atmosphere in the office of this acting director of the Capital Construction General Bureau of the Ministry of Railways was tense and orderly. It was like a nerve center linked to the powerful army arduously and courageously fighting on the Beijing-Qinghuangdao railroad.

Acting Director Liu talked on the Sino-Japanese cooperation in building the Beijing-Qinghuangdao railroad.

"I would like to use the following comments to summarize our bilateral relations: Our cooperation is based on friendly and mutually beneficial relations. The Japanese Overseas Economic Cooperative Foundation has provided us with low interest loans. This is a help to us for building a railroad which needs large investments and a long period for completion. This has demonstrated the friendship and good will of the Japanese side. After the completion of the railroad, a large quantity of coal produced in Shanxi will have a new export route. At the same time, coal can be loaded in the port of Qinghuangdao and shipped to Japan, our close neighbor separated only by a strip of water. This will be beneficial to our friendly neighbor on the eastern side which needs to import a large quantity of energy. Such cooperation based on a sound foundation will certainly be carried out from beginning to end."

The correspondent asked: "Could you tell us something specific concerning the cooperation of both sides in these few years?"

"We discussed the matter of loans as early as 1979. During the first 2 years, due to lack of experience and inadequate preparation, we could not absorb too many loans. The loans have amounted to a total of 13.7 billion Japanese yen. We obtained 920 million yen last year. There might be a greater increase this year because the Beijing-Qinghuangdao railroad project has been fully carried out."

"In accordance with an agreement concluded by the two sides, the loans should mainly be used to purchase steel products, wood, cement and machinery and electrical equipment as well as to carry out technical cooperation. The agreement also stipulates that tenders will be invited in order to select better equipment. With regard to the electrical equipment of the railroad, we plan to adopt some advanced techniques in power supply. We should also do our best to modernize the communications system. Japan's technology in these respects ranks first in the world and we can learn a lot from the Japanese."

"What is our Japanese friends' appraisal of the progress of the Beijing-Qinghuangdao Railroad project?"

"It takes time to answer this question precisely. Very soon the Japanese side will send representatives to specifically inspect the progress of the project and discuss with us the loan arrangements for the next fiscal year. I cannot guess the impression of our Japanese friends on the progress of the project. However, as long as they personally come to the construction site and inspect its progress, everything will be clear to them. We expect that the amount of loans for the next fiscal year will be increased."

Finally, we talked about the problem of cooperation in other projects other than the Beijing-Qinghuangdao Railroad. "Cooperation is not limited to the Beijing-Qinghuangdao Railroad. There is another important route for shipping coal, that is, the Gunzhou-Shijiu Railroad in Shandong. This project will also be carried out on the same basis of cooperation. I believe that our realms of cooperation will be continuously broadened."

"Cooperation should be based on mutual benefit. Otherwise, such cooperation cannot be carried out. As long as we can find the ways for mutually beneficial cooperation, we will have spacious prospects for cooperation. Don't you think that this is a principle?" Acting Director Kiu asked, and ended his interview with this correspondent in a meaningful way.

JOINT BOHAI OIL EXPLORATION PROJECT PROGRESSES

[Text] Tianjin, June 9 (XINHUA) -- Five test wells and one production well have been sunk in China's Bohai Sea by China nad Japan since a contract for joint exploration was signed two years ago today, according to a spokesman for the Bohai petroleum base in Tanggu, Tianjin. Drilling of the second production well began last weekend, the spokesman said. Four test wells showed large oil flows and the fifth will be put into trial operation soon, he said.

The area under joint exploration by China and Japan in the western and the southern parts of the Bohai Sea is 25,500 square kilometers, where exploitable oil reserves are estimated at 120 million tons.

The two production wells are in Chengbei offshore oilfield, which is part of the joint exploration area. The oilfield, 12 square kilometers large, was discovered by China a decade ago in the southern part of the Bohai Sea.

MRS MARCOS VISITS SHANGHAI, FETED BY MAYOR

[Text] Beijing, June 9 (XINHUA) -- Imelda Romualdez Marcos, wife of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, minister of human settlements and governor of Metro Manila, arrived in Shanghai from Beijing this morning. She was accompanied by Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry, and his wife, Wang Zhen. Yang Shangkun, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, bade farewell to Mrs. Marcos upon her departure from Beijing.

She was greeted in Shanghai by Mayor Wang Daohan. A girl presented a bouquet of flowers to her. Wang Daohan gave a banquet this evening for the guests.

He said, Mrs. Marcos had visited Shanghai twice and left a deep impression on the Shanghai people. "Mrs. Marcos' present visit will make new contributions to the friendship between China and the Philippines," he said.

Mrs. Marcos replied that the changes in China had left a deep impression on her and the nation's achievements demonstrated political stability and the strong will of the Chinese people and leaders. After the banquet, she attended a soiree. Mrs. Marcos visited the Shanghai conservatory of music this afternoon.

REAGAN ADDRESS TO WEST GERMAN BUNDESTAG CITED

[Text] Bonn, Jun 9 (XINHUA) -- Addressing the West German Bundestag this afternoon, U.S. President Ronald Reagan tried to convince the West German people and West European people as a whole in the most emphatical way that "the American commitment to Europe remains steady and strong." And he was warmly applauded when he stressed: "Europe's shores are our shores. Europe's borders are our borders".

The U.S. President arrived in Bonn this afternoon for an official visit prior to attending the NATO summit meeting tomorrow.

He made it clear that the reassurance was necessary because U.S.-West German relations have recently been so sore that "some Americans think that Europeans are too little concerned for their own security. Some would unilaterally reduce the number of American troops deployed in Europe. And in Europe itself, we hear the idea that the American presence, rather than contributing to peace, either has no deterrent value or actually increases the risk that our allies may be attacked."

He appealed to the members of the Bundestag: "If you will work toward explaining the U.S. role to people on this side of the Atlantic, I will explain it to those on the other side." However, Reagan assured his host that "we are resolved to maintain the presence of well-equipped and trained forces in Europe, and our strategic forces will be modernized and remain committed to the alliance."

With the growing peace movement in West Europe in mind, Reagan took pains to convince his audience as well as West German people that the U.S. was actually for real peace and real disarmament, but these goals could be achieved only when the West resolved to speed up its armament expansion. "The simple hope for peace is not enough," he asserted. "We must continue to improve our defenses if we are to preserve peace and freedom." The West, he went on to say, should organize its defensive capabilities, both nuclear and conventional, "so that an aggressor could have no hope of military victory." "Deterrence has kept that peace, and we must continue to take the steps necessary to make deterrence credible," he advocated.

Attaching great importance to conventional forces, he said: "Alliance security depends on a fully credible conventional defense", which can make the danger of conventional or nuclear conflict "more remote". "The more we close the conventional gap, the less the risks of aggression or nuclear conflict," he said.

After reaffirming his "zero option" proposal put forward last November and the proposal on a phased reduction of strategic nuclear weapons in his May 9 speech, he deliberated what is called a "double track" idea on armament-disarmament issues. He declared: "We as an alliance will press forward with plans to improve our own conventional forces in Europe. At the same time, we propose an arms control agreement to equalize conventional forces at a significantly lower level." In this regard, he disclosed that Western representatives in the Vienna talks soon will make a proposal by which the two sides would reduce their respective ground force personnel in verifiable stages to a total of 700,000 men and their combined ground and air force personnel to a level of 900,000.

In the nuclear field, Reagan said, "we will move ahead with our preparations to modernize our nuclear forces in Europe. But, again, we also will work unceasingly to gain acceptance in Geneva of our proposal to ban land-based intermediate-range nuclear missiles. In the United States, we will move forward with the plans I announced last year to modernize our strategic nuclear forces...yet we also have proposed that strategic arms reductions talks begin, and we will pursue them determinedly."

"Unless convinced that we will unite and stay united behind these arms control initiatives and modernization programs, our adversaries will seek to divide us from one another and our peoples from their leaders," he cautioned in conclusion.

ZHU MUZHI ATTENDS FRG ENVOY'S RECEPTION

[Text] Beijing, June 8 (XINHUA) -- Antonio Leal da Costa Lobo, new ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Republic of Portugal to China, today presented his credentials to Ulanhu, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. Qian Qichen, Chinese vice-minister of foreign affairs, was also present.

ISRAELI INCURSION IN LEBANON 'NOT ACCIDENTAL'

["Begin Regime Reveals True Colours As Aggressor" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beirut, June 8 (XINHUA) -- After three days of fighting, the Israeli aggressor troops are now attacking the entire southern Lebanon and approaching the outskirts of Beirut. They are continuing to advance towards the northern Lebanon. What are the Israeli authorities really up to?

An Israeli official source as quoted by radio Israel said that Israel could not accept the resolutions of the U.N. Security Council and its aggressor troops would continue "staying" in Lebanon till the kind of "political solution" it had demanded was found. It was reported that Israel's so-called "political solution" would include the withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon, the return of the southern Lebanon to a "really independent" Lebanese Government, the establishment of a "free zone" under the control of the U.N. forces within 40 kilometres north of the Israeli border, and the assurance that the Palestinian armed forces would not return to southern Lebanon.

The Israeli authorities have tried to stamp out the revolutionary cause of Palestine by wearing down the effective strength of the Palestinian armed forces and forcing the Palestinians to "reside" in northern Lebanon. They have also tried to strangle the Palestinian people's desire for establishing an independent state on their own territory, and promote the Palestinian autonomy negotiations so as to pave the way for Israel's annexation of the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. It is not accidental for Israel to launch a massive invasion of Lebanon. With Egypt's recovery of Sinai, the demand of the Arab countries and world opinion for a just solution to the Middle East problem and for the return of the legitimate rights to the Palestinian people is rising. Meanwhile, the Arab nations are divided in their stand towards the Iranian-Iraqi war and the resumption of relations with Egypt. Israel seems to believe the time has come for it to launch aggression against Lebanon.

But history advances in its own course. The Palestinian revolutionary forces can never be liquidated. Lebanese Prime Minister Shafiq al-Wazzan vowed to mobilize all Lebanese forces to resist the Israeli aggressors. The Begin regime's aggression against Lebanon will only lay bare its true colours as an aggressor and arouse stronger protests from the people of the world.

XI ZHONGXUN MEETS TANZANIAN PARTY DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, June 4 (XINHUA) -- Xi Zhongxun, member of the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, met here this evening with a delegation of the Revolutionary Party of Tanzania led by M.A. Makalo, member of the National Executive Committee of the Tanzanian Revolutionary Party.

Xi Zhongxun, on behalf of Chairman Hu Yaobang of the CCP Central Committee, extended a warm welcome to the delegation. They then had a friendly conversation. After the meeting, Xi Zhongxun gave a banquet in honour of the delegation.

Present on both occasions were Li Shuzheng, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee, and Job M. Lusinde, Tanzanian ambassador to China.

The delegation arrived here May 20. They visited Shanghai, Wuxi, Jinan, Weifang and Zibo and will leave here for home shortly.

CHEN MUHUA VIEWS ABSORBING FOREIGN INVESTMENT

OW081846 Beijing XINHUA in English 1836 GMT 8 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 8 (XINHUA) -- "China adopts a prudent and serious attitude towards the absorption of overseas investment," said Chen Muhua, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, while meeting the press here this afternoon. The minister is attending the China investment promotion meeting in Guangzhou.

She said, the absorption of overseas investment is based on the principle of equality and mutual benefit. To China, the funds must be used properly to make them bring good economic results, and so the projects must be selected properly. The way of paying back is generally taken into consideration even before the investment is to be absorbed.

According to Chen Muhua, the most favorable form of absorbing overseas investment is the form of direct investment, including joint ventures, and co-production and compensatory trade items. The 130 projects offered at the meeting to be discussed with overseas investors are all in such a form.

All the projects are small and medium-sized ones and most are existing enterprises to be revamped, she said. This conforms to the emphasis laid down in the current five-year plan which stresses technical transformation of existing enterprises simultaneoulsy with the building of key projects in the fields of energy development, communications and building materials.

The current meeting is an attempt for promoting international cooperation, he minister said.

She also reviewed the cooperation between China and the U.N. Industrial Development Organization as "quite good". She said that China has made monetary contributions to UNIDO from which it has also accepted some aids.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS STUDY OF SOCIAL SCIENCE

[Article by Liu Gangji [0491 4854 4764]: "Some Opinions on the Study of Social Science"]

[Text] I completely agree that on the social science front there is indeed an erroneous tendency to take the study of practical issues lightly. Some people regard the study of practical issues as of little or no value to academic research. But we should also give serious consideration to the question of how the study of practical issues can be strengthened and what practice can be really regarded as an aid to the solution of practical issues. In his article "Reforming Our Study," Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: There are three fields in our research work, that is, the practical situation, history and the application of Marxism-Leninism. These three aspects are mutually related and no one aspect can be excluded. Just in terms of the relationship between the study of theory and the study of the practical situation, I think that in order to actually solve practical problems, it is necessary to devote great efforts to deeply studying the basic theory of Marxism. Instead of contradicting the solution of practical issues, this is an imperative and essential condition for actually solving practical problems. Over many years, because we have not made a systematic and thorough study of the basic theory of Marxism, but have indiscriminately labeled this as a study divorced from reality, the studies we have done on practical issues have sometimes been rather superficial. In many cases, instead of actually solving problems, some erroneous theoretical slogans were even raised and exerted an adverse influence on practical work, sometimes even resulting in serious consequences.

For a long time, there have been few valuable works in the field of social science which have been recognized at home and abroad and which have undergone the test of time. This matter gives us much food for thought. In my opinion, the fundamental point is that the study of practical issues must be closely linked with the study of basic theories (which are often fairly abstract). Meanwhile, the saying "combining theory with reality" should not be interpreted in a narrow, shortsighted or pragmatic way.

For example, various problems occurring in our socialist economic construction urgently call for our study. But if we do not systematically and thoroughly study Marxist economic theory but only have some fragmentary and superficial knowledge, do not thoroughly grasp the essence of Marx' "Das Kapital," do not have any knowledge of the economic theory of the modern Western bourgeoisie, then it will be very difficult for us to give a practical scientific exposition on the regularity of our socialist economic construction or to give long-term and significant guidance to economic work. In this case, the study of practical issues in the economic field is always limited in seeking a theoretical base for a certain existing economic policy. Of course, it is absolutely necessary to base a policy on some theories. But if this is not carried out on the basis of systematically and thoroughly understanding Marxist economic theory, the following will result: 1) If the economic policy needing further explanation is incorrect or just an expedient, the explanation will not only have a poor result but will also have an adverse impact. 2) If the policy is correct and important but the explanation is incorrect and cannot refute opposing views, people will not truly realize the necessity and correctness of pursuing this policy.

For another example, the issue of class struggle which still exists in our country is an important subject worth studying. While conducting this study, it is necessary to have an overall, historical and comprehensive knowledge of the theory on classes and class struggle expounded by Marx, Engels, Lenin and Mao Zedong, to make a realistic and thorough investigation and study the situations and development of classes and class struggle since the founding of new China. Only by so doing can a scientific exposition be made on this issue. For example, the illegal and criminal activities in the economic field at present have developed to an unusual degree seldom seen since the founding of new China. It is very dangerous if its seriousness is underestimated. But at the same time, it should be seen that the practical situation of classes and class struggle in our country differs greatly from that in the period of the "three antis" and "five antis" movements carried out in the early days of new China. There are various social reasons for the rampant criminal activities in the economic field and they need to be analyzed concertely. It is hard to say in general terms that the class struggle in the economic field at present is more actue than that in the period of the "three antis" and "five antis" movements or that our country is facing a larger danger than in that period. Such a simple conclusion will lead to an incorrect appraisal of the practical political situation in our country.

Let us take one more example from the question of human nature which the people in academic circles and literary and art circles are very concerned about. Quite a few comrades are also interested in this matter. Can we say that this is a manifestation of separating oneself from reality? It is not certain. In my opinion, the reason why so many comrades want to find a thorough answer to this question is that it is closely related to all sorts of practical issues in the fields of philosophy, ethics, aesthetics, literary and art theory and operation. It is precisely these practical issues that encourage people to seek a reasonable and correct answer to the question of human nature. There are many practical issues now in the fields of literary and art creation and criticism. For example, how should an artistic work describe people? How can a description be judged as complying with Marxism or as a demonstration of bourgeois theory of human nature? What is the relationship between human nature and class nature? How should we treat this matter in portraying a typical character, and so on. I think it should be recognized that the question of human nature is of wide significance and is closely related to the solution of a large number of practical issues, including discovering talent, carrying out political and ideological work, building spiritual civilization, conducting education on communist morality, opposing individualism and so on.

Can we put this matter aside and ignore it? I think that we should not; otherwise it would be difficult for us to find really persuasive and scientific solutions for all these issues we are concerned with. Even if they seem to be solved for a time, they will still reemerge after a period of time. If any one of our comrades can write a scientific work on the question of human nature which is based on facts and Marxist theory, that will be a great contribution and can greatly help solve all sorts of practical problems.

In sum I believe that on one hand we should make great efforts to encourage the study of practical issues. On the other hand we cannot neglect the study of basic theoretical issues which are often fairly abstract. Instead we should unify these two aspects organically. Just think,the first chapter of Marx's "Das Kapital" on commodity value is rather abstract, but would there be Marxist economics without this theory of commodity value? Could the great truth that capitalism will inevitably perish be proved?

RENMIN RIBAO ON PRODUCTIVE FORCE ECONOMICS

[Article by Xue Yongying [5641 3057 2019]: "Strive To Create the Productive Force Economics of Our Era"]

[Text] Productive force economics is Marxist theoretical economics that parallels political economics. The target of productive force economics is the productive forces. It is related to the production relationships and superstructure and its aim is to study the laws governing the movement and development of the internal contradictions between productive forces. Concretely speaking, the purpose of productive force economics is to study how to rationally organize social productive forces and particularly to provide a scientific theoretical foundation and decisionmaking foundation for rationally organizing the socialist modernization program.

The founding of productive force economics was necessary realistically and historically. First, following the development of socialized and mass production, there existed countless close ties between various types of social production and various economic regions. Overall social production objectively became, or demanded to become, a big machine and an organic system. This demanded people implement scientific, unified and socialized management of it. At the same time, as scientific technology made tremendous progress and productive forces developed rapidly, overall social production and social needs became many times more complicated than they were a century ago. Under such conditions, a science was urgently needed for guiding people in organizing the process of social reproduction, which is characterized by unprecedented complexity and precision. Since the Industrial Revolution and particularly since the beginning of the 20th century, many economists in Western countries have spared no efforts in studying the economy of productive forces. Such study includes the regional distribution of productive forces, site selection for factories and rational scaling of enterprises. But because of the limitations of the capitalist system, their study cannot but be limited to an enterprise or to a small region. Consequently it is impossible for them to study the laws of the movement of the productive forces of the whole society, nor can they study the question of how to rationally organize productive forces. Second, the founding of the socialist system has opened up a road for us to unifiedly manage the productive forces of the whole society while the emergence of the socialist planned economy has provided a necessary and advantegous condition for rational organization and macroscopic control of the system of productive forces. On the other hand, the laboring people, who have become the masters of social production, also need economic science for the study of the productive forces of the whole society and to provide them with a scientific basis for rationally organizing the process of social reproduction. Thus, they will be able to avoid making wrong decisions with regard to the development of productive forces and can improve, as much as possible, the efficiency of the national economy. Third, historically, our country has experienced a tortuous path over the past there decades and more with regard to productive forces, and therefore we have painful feelings with regard to the great significance of productive force economics.

In the early 1960's, our country suffered setback because of the "Great Leap Forward" and other campaigns that seriously violated the laws of the development of productive forces, and consequently some economic theorists suggested establishing productive force economics. But due to all sorts of historical reasons, this science came to a premature end. During the 10 turbulent years, many things occurred which ran counter to the laws of the development of productive forces. As a result, people were aware of the necessity of establishing the science of productive force economics.

But as a new science, productive force economics is facing hard tasks and it has a long way to go.

The study tasks for productive force economics are not only to expose the laws governing the development and movement of the system of productive forces, but also to explain the influence of the socialist system on these laws and to explain the general and specific regulations for using these laws under the specific conditions of our country. Concretely speaking, at the present stage, productive force economics is used for defining and perfecting the new strategy for the development of our national economy and for serving the technical reform of the existing enterprises in our country. In short, in realizing the basic tasks of our people at the present stage, that is, in realizing the historical tasks of developing social productive forces in a big way, productive force economics must become the scientific basis for the party and the state in working out related policies.

Productive force economics can accomplish this task. We know that social productive forces have the four pillars of population, resources, environment and scientific technology and they move and develop on the base provided by these pillars. It is true that population is nothing but a direct consumption force and is not a direct productive force, but the physical power and wisdom (these are called the labor force) of the laborers of this population are a factor of productive forces. Resources and environment are a natural foundation for providing the objects and conditions for labor. When scientific technology is materialized, it becomes a factor of productive forces. In the brains of laborers, materialization is a factor of productive forces in the form of ideology while the materialization in production tools and the object of labor are factors of productive forces in material form. How these three actual factors (laborers, means of labor and object of labor) of productive forces combine in motion will determine the various concrete forms of the motion of social productive forces. Consequently, they become different sectors of study or different subsciences of productive force economics. For example, the coordination in attributes of the factors of productive forces, that is quality combination, represents a structural economy; the regulation in quantity of the factors of productive forces, namely, the quantiative combination, represents a scaled economy; the combination in space of the factors of productive forces represents a geographical economy. The results of the study in these sectors constitutes a very important scientific foundation for the state in deciding industrial policy (including energy policy and communication policy), scope policy, distribution policy, sequential policy and technical policy. The combination of these factors constitutes a very important part of the strategy in the development of our economy and therefore it becomes a guiding principle for readjusting the structure of the national economy and for carrying out technical reform in enterprises.

Working out and perfecting these policies is very important for developing our economy. This is because, in many fields, our country still does not have enough definite policies or does not have enough completely clear policies. Scale, sequential and technological policies belong to the former while industrial policy and distribution policy belong to the latter. Our country once implemented the principle of "simultaneous development (or combination) of big, medium and small" and this principle can also be termed as a scaled policy. But it is far from definite. What is big? What is medium? What is small? Which departments (or trades or production) are suited to undertaking big enterprises as the dominant form? Which departments are suited to undertaking medium and small enterprises as the dominant form? What scale and structure should we select for the whole national economy?

We did not completely analyze these problems for a long time in the past, nor did we work out definite regulations. The study and regulation of the "time sequence" is even weaker in our country. In the rational organization of social productive forces, the "time sequence" (to supply materials and technology on time is one aspect) is a factor that can in no way be neglected. Time is wealth. Our country once stressed that "communication must be ahead of the rest" and to a certain degree represents a time sequence policy. But it often occurred that in actual work we neglected the time sequence and instead of being ahead of the rest it lagged behind. The main items of a number of construction projects have been completed while no consideration was given to infrastructure (such as roads, energy, telecommunications and life service facilities). Basic structure is very important in the time sequence economy and in general it must be ahead of the rest or at least it must develop simultaneously. Otherwise, stagnation of work will damage economic effect. The importance of the time sequence in the supply of materials and technology is even easier to understand. In addition, we have also made mistakes in energy policy, communication policy and other industrial policies. Similar situations have also occurred in the distribution policy, such as when the national defence principles departed from economic principles and unified consideration was not given to national factors and economic factors. In short, with regard to developing social productive force, we urgently need a definite and correct economic policy. All these factors have to be studied by productive force economics.

RURAL COLLECTIVE ECONOMY IN GUIZHOU EXAMINED

[Feature by reporters Yao Liwen [1202 0500 2429] and Xu Xiji [6079 6007 6068]: "The Rural Collective Economy Gains New Vitality -- Report on a Visit to Rural Guizhou"]

[Text] During March and April this year, we paid a visit to dozens of peasant families in eight or nine counties in five prefectures in Guizhou Province. We deeply felt that the commune members were overjoyed that they had more decisionmaking power in production and that democratic life had been strengthened. More than once they held our hands and kept on telling us about their different life now as compared with the past. The "past" refers to the period of "eating out of the same big pot" under the influence of "leftist" ideology and the "now" refers to the period since implementating the new policies mapped out since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. The commune members said: "In the past, we worked all through the year without a day's rest, but got nothing at the end. Now we are doing well and have enough to eat. We are able to go to the fairs and visit our relatives too. That is why everyone is in high spirits."

During the first 10 days of April, we visited Sinan County, one of the most severely disaster-stricken counties. We found that the grain price here was stable and the market brisk. The people were living in peace and contentment. We were lucky to see two country fairs there, in which there were lots of commodities and crowds of people. It was a bustling scene. The market streets, though several miles long, were always crowded with people. On their way back from the fairs, the commune members talked joyfully about their newly purchased plows, hoes and small pigs. When talking about the "disaster year without famine" at a forum, the participants said unanimously: "In the past, when disaster befell us, there was only one person who made suggestions to solve problems (referring to the county or commune CCP committee secretary or brigade leader), but now when disaster befalls us, everyone makes suggestions. In the past, when we did not have enough food, we just waited for state relief, but now when there is a drop in grain production, we make greater efforts to develop the mountainous areas, to improve the soil and to develop a diversified economy. More good sgggestions can certainly be made by more people." A responsible cadre of the county CCP committee said with emotion: "If the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion had not been practiced, we could not have withstood the serious disaster last year. How could the county CCP committee be at ease when the masses of people were suffering? The county CCP committee could not even have maintained its routine work, not to mention holding a forum like this."

Severe Test

Last year Guizhou Province, in which the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion was carried out in most production brigades, withstood a severe test.

Successively from spring to autumn, the province suffered from serious drought. Of the 87 counties (including administrative regions under the jurisdiction of the municipal government) in this province, 72 were successively hit by drought for 120 days. The population in the disaster-stricken areas constituted 75.5 percent of the total provincial population. Over 600,000 mu of rice fields dried up and 1.47 million mu of the 11.24 million mu of rice could not be harvested. Of the 1.05 million mu of corn, which was 260,000 mu less than the previous year, 1.1 million mu died of drought.

Under the leadership of the CCP committees at various levels and with energetic support by the state, the broad masses of commune and brigade cadres and commune members finally conquered the serious drought, the most serious in the past 60 years, and maintained the good situation of continuous development of the rural economy. They achieved gratifying success in the following three aspects: 1) They changed the previous situation that the more serious the disaster was, the more seriously the production would drop. Although grain production also dropped in 1981, it was still 2.8 billion jin more than the output in 1972, which had a successive drought for 100 days. At the same time, industrial crops and other products of the diversified economy were greatly increased. The total agricultural output value increased by 5.9 percent over 1980, which was a normal year, and the total purchase of agricultural and sideline products increased by 48 percent. 2) In spite of the serious disaster, the grain prices at country fairs were stable or even dropped a little. The number of poultry and livestock available also increased. Of these, the number of cattle and other major domestic animals increased by 5 percent over the previous year. 3) The sown area of industrial crops was not reduced and the distribution of crops and the structure of agricultural production have continuously changed for the better.

The fact that the serious drought was conquered, vividly shows that the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion is full of vitality. It was in that year that the number of production teams carrying out this system increased from 60.8 to 96.7 percent of the total.

There were three stages in carrying out the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion in Guizhou Province: embryonic, selection and development on a large scale. Take Anshun Prefecture, for example. In the embryonic stage before the spring of 1980, the responsibility system of fixing output quotas for each group was practiced in about one-third of the production teams. At the same time, 5 percent of the production teams spontaneously carried out the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion on some parts of the fields or on dry land. At that time, some county and commune cadres supported the commune members in carrying out the system of fixing output quotas for each group. The comrades in the Dingyun commune, Guanling County, clearly pointed out that this system was "socialist in nature and not capitalist." But some leading cadres had shown signs of worry. Some of them even sent out work groups to "correct the deviation." In the spring of 1980, the provincial CCP committee issued a circular to put an end to "correcting the deviation." After that, various responsibility systems, such as the responsibility system of dividing up production tasks among the commune members and linking workpoints to output, the responsibility system of professional contracting and assigning responsibilities to each group or each laborer for task completion, the responsibility system of fixing output quotas for each group and assigning households full responsibility for task completion and so forth, coexisted and competed with each other, and the masses were able to choose between them through practice. At the same time, the county, prefecture and commune leaders also acquired new understanding and experience in practice.

After the provincial CCP Committee gave an instruction in July 1980 on carrying out a lenient agricultural policy, which said that the responsibility system of fixing output quotas for each household and assigning households full responsibility for task completion can be adopted, the leadership of the CCP committees at various levels was strengthened and the passive situation in their work was gradually changed. Since then, the practice of the responsibility system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion has entered the stage of development on a large scale. During these three stages, the percentage of the production teams in Anshun Prefecture in which the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion was practiced increased from 5 percent to 48 percent, and then to 95 percent. This is a microcosm of the whole province.

The Choice of Guizhou Peasants

Why did the peasants in Guizhou choose the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion?

The long-standing "leftist" erroneous ideology, especially the sabotage of Lin Biao and the "gang of four," seriously harmed agricultural production in Guizhou. This can be seen obviously in the following two main aspects. First, economically, the material benefits of the peasants were neglected. Starting from the second half of 1955, especially after 1958, production relations were continuously changed despite the low productive level of this province, which was lower than the average productive level of the whole country, and in disregard of the principle of voluntariness and mutual benefit. As a result of the excessive extension, by arbitrary decision, of the public ownership of the means of production, the smooth development of agricultural production after the land reform and the initial stage of the cooperative movement was obstructed, and a situation of continued stagnation in production appeared. In addition, as the policy of high targets and high purchases was practiced for many years and wrong orders were often given, a large number of peasants were unable to solve their problems of food and clothing, and quite a number of production teams had to lead a poor life of "three reliances." Second, politically, the democratic rights of the peasants were frequently infringed upon. In many political movements, such as the movement to combat the right deviation, the movement to "pull out white banners," the movement to "cut the tail of capitalism" and so forth, peasants also became targets of criticism. For example, in order to solve their problems of food and clothing, some peasants spontaneously made some readjustment in production relations and secretly carried out the responsibility system of fixing output quotas for each household and assigning households full responsibility for task completion. But their practice was regarded as a tendency "to return to individual farming" and to "follow the capitalist road." The method of "criticism and struggle" was then used in many localities to "correct" this "deviation." In some other places, some pesants became better off through labor and were regarded as "upstarts." As a result of the violation of the peasants' democratic rights and setting the socialist construction in the countryside and the peasants' material benefits against each other, agricultural construction was never regarded as their own business by the peasants. Although the peasants suffered a great deal from this, they still pinned their hopes on the CCP leading organs to sum up historical experiences and correct the "leftist" error. Therefore, it is reasonable for the poor peasants to earnestly require that order be brought out of chaos and that the system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion be carried out. It is reasonable for them to require decisionmaking power in production and distribution, so as to develop production at a high speed and become better off.

The system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion is in conformity with the actual conditions in Guizhou Province. There are many mountains and hills on the Guizhou Plateau, but very little cultivated land. The people live in scattered areas and the transportation and communications facilities are poor. The present economic and management levels in this province are still very low. Similar to other provinces, the per capita grain output in this province was 603 jin in 1957. But by 1979 it had fallen by 32.2 percent, while the average output of the whole country had increased by 13.4 percent in the same period.

The per capita income of the whole country was 84.2 yuan in 1979, but it was only 46.4 yuan in Guizhou Province. This was the lowest in the country. Moreover, 60 percent of the adult peasants in this province were illiterate. For many production teams, it was even difficult to find a qualified accountant. There were few production teams which had the ability to carry out the responsibility system of professional contracting and linking remuneration to output or carry out the responsibility system of dividing up production tasks among the commune members and linking workpoints to output. In most production teams, the commune members "swarmed" to the fields to do farm work and "shared alike" in distribution. To make matters worse, some cadres took more than their share and misappropriated public funds. As a result, those who worked and those who worked harder than others could not have what they deserved. For a long time in the past, the leading organs failed to have a sufficient understanding of this backward situation in economic management. After the "gang of four" was smashed, the provincial CCP committee tried to maintain the system of concentrated labor and unified management through training grassroots cadres, raising management levels and reducing the scope of production teams. But the peasants had already lost their confidence in the system of unified management and "eating out of the same big pot," and were showing greater interest in the responsibility system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion. In view of this, since July 1980 the provincial CCP committee has adopted a series of realistic measures to strengthen leadership step-by-step and in a planned way and has made continuous efforts to improve and perfect this responsibility system through practice. This conforms with the interests of the peasants.

New Vitality of Collective Economy

It is only 2 years or so since the responsibility system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion was introduced in various localities in Guizhou Province. Although it was implemented unevenly in time and in quality, it is being improved and perfected in present practice. However, this system has enlivened the rural collective economy, which was seriously damaged by the "leftist" error.

Since this responsibility system has been carried out and the enthusiasm of the producers has been stimulated, labor efficiency and returns on investments have been raised and the peasants' income has increased. As the capability for expanded reproduction has been raised, the previous situation of maintaining simple reproduction has been greatly changed and the people's livelihood has been improved. Although 1981 was a year of serious disasters, the provincial per capita income still increased by 29.1 percent over the previous year. In 1978 the families which had a per capita income of over 300 yuan made up only 1 percent of the total number of families in this province, yet in 1981 they made up 15.2 percent. At the same time, the number of families with per capita income of less than 100 yuan fell from 72.7 to 19.7 percent of the total number of families.

The practice of the responsibility system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion has stimulated the peasants' enthusiasm for learning and applying scientific knowledge and stepped up the popularization of agricultural technology. As a result of popularizing and applying new techniques in rice cultivation, expecially the popularization of improved varieties of rice, economic returns have been greatly raised. The peasants told us cheerfully: "Our per mu yield has doubled!" For example, there are six production brigades, 33 production teams and 3,522 mu of rice fields in Muzanbazi commune, Anlong County. In 1979, the total rice output in this commune was 2.822 million jin. It increased by 460,000 jin, or 16.3 percent, in 1980. With the increase of 600,000 jin in 1981, the total rice output increased in these 2 years by 1.06 million jin, or nearly 40 percent, over 1979. During these 2 years, the per mu yield also increased from 801 to 1,101 jin. This has broadened the vision of the people and made more and more peasants and commune and brigade leaders understand that science can help raise productivity. Now a mass activity of learning and applying science is on the upsurge, and technicians have become good friends of the peasants.

The practice of the responsibility system of assigning households full responsibility for task completion has also freed many peasants from being bound to the fields and enabled them to develop diversified economies, such as industrial and sideline production, forestry, animal husbandry, industrial production related to iron, wood, bamboo and clay (porcelain), beekeeping and rabbit-raising, the cultivation of fruit trees and medical herbs, and so on and so forth. It has opened up new production avenues and changed the structure of the labor force. Handicraft industry and art, which was on the decline, has quickly been restored and developed, and the quality of the labor force has been improved. There have appeared many "agricultural science households" (households which set a good example in learning and applying science), "households involved in several occupations" (households which are involved in one or more industrial and sideline productive activities with the prerequisite of doing a good job in contracted farm work) and "rich households" (households in all walks of life, which are technologically skillful, good at management and have made more contributions and gotten rich through labor), and the diversified economy has become unprecedentedly brisk. The commune members have a strong desire to develop commodity production. Now the slogan "develop the range and quality of production," which was put forth many years ago, has really become the actual practice of the masses, and a situation of good harvests and prosperity has appeared in many parts of the province.

NECESSITY TO RUN RURAL SCHOOLS WELL STRESSED

[Article by XINHUA commentator: "Running Rural Primary Schools Well Is a Major Task of Strategic Significance"]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jun (XINHUA) -- The XINHUA NEWS AGENCY today reported that the failure to pay attention to primary school education in some rural areas of Sichuan has adversely affected the quality of education there. We must attach great importance to this situation.

It is a very pressing and important task to run rural primary schools well. Primary school education is a beginners' education as well as a basic education. The universality of primary school education is an important indicator for the level of development of education as a whole. "The Decision on Some Questions Concerning the Universalization of Primary School Education" promulgated by the party Central Committee and the State Council in 1980 set forth: "In the 1980's, the whole country should basically accomplish the historical task of universalizing primary school education. Areas with necessary conditions may even go further to make junior middle school education universal." The draft revised constitution approved and promulgated by the NPC Standing Committee not long ago explicitly stipulates the task to "wipe out illiteracy, universalize primary education." At present, primary education has been basically universalized in China's urban areas. Therefore, we may say that the key to whether we can accomplish the historical task of universalizing primary education in the 1980's lies in the vast rural areas.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, rapid progress has been made in China's rural areas and the situation there is excellent, thus creating favorable conditions for universalizing rural primary school education. Now it will depend on whether the party committees and education departments at all levels fully understand the far-reaching significance of universalizing primary school education in the rural areas, take effective measures and make rapid achievements. Lenin once said that it is impossible to establish a socialist and communist society in a country in which there are many illiterates. More and more people now understand that the level of educational development has a very important bearing on the four modernizations. Agricultural development relies on correct policies and on science. The modernization of science and technology is the key to the accomplishment of the four modernizations. The development of science depends on the development of education because education is the foundation of science. Of China's 1 billion people, 800 million are in the rural areas. The 200 or 300 million children in the countryside are a large reservoir of future talent.

Today's children will become the main force for undertaking the four modernizations 10 or 20 years hence. To cultivate them into persons with ideals, morality, culture and sense of discipline is where we pin our hopes of accomplishing the four modernizations. The party committees and the departments concerned at all levels should show great foresight, truly put the universalization of primary school education, a major task of strategic significance, on the daily agenda, take effective measures and make achievements.

In some rural areas in China at present, primary school education is overlooked and poorly carried out. Many students even quit before they finish the whole course of schooling. Primary school teachers enjoy no respect. People even encroach on school property and school buildings. This should arouse sufficient attention of leading cadres and education departments in various localities concerned. All localities should proceed from the actual situation of rural areas to create necessary conditions for rural primary schools to conduct classes, give them suitable school buildings, desks and chairs, textbooks and teachers of good ideological and vocational qualifications. All localities should rationally solve the practical problems of the teachers of collectively run schools, such as pay and food rations, in order to enable them to concentrate their energies on teaching. It is necessary to make the parents correctly understand the relationship between their children's schooling and the long-term interest of the country. It is necessary to run schools of various forms to accomodate peasants' children who have various practical difficulties. All sectors of the society should be concerned about the development of rural education and do what they can to support and help rural primary schools.

INCOME FOR WORKERS, STAFF RISES IN 1ST QUARTER

[Text] Beijing, June 8 (XINHUA) — A sample survey of 8,765 families across China done by the State Statistical Bureau indicates continuous increase in the income for Chinese workers and staff in the first three months of this year from last. The survey, available to XINHUA today, was done in 46 cities including Beijing, Shanghai and Tianjin, the country's largest. It says the monthly income for these families averaged 45.01 yuan per capita. After deductions were made of such expenses as remittances and gifts to relatives and friends, the money actually at their disposal was 41.28 yuan, 3.76 yuan more than the same January-March period of 1981. This represented a 7.9 percent increase after taking into account price rises, says the survey.

The families surveyed were representative of all income levels, according to the State Statistical Bureau. Among them, families with per capita income exceeding 50 yuan per month accounted for 18.48 percent as against 12.96 percent in the same January-March period of 1981. Families with per capita montjly income between 35 and 50 yuan rose from 35.29 percent to 42.38 percent.

Families with financial difficulties -- those drawing a monthly income of less than 25 yuan per capita -- dropped from 16.18 percent to 7.6 percent, the survey reports.

Increased employment is the main factor in the increase, according to the survey.

In 1981 the government assigned jobs to more than eight million people. In the first quarter of this year, the number of people employed averaged 2.39 per family, as against 2.35 a year ago, the survey says. The number of people each wage earner supported dropped from 1.83 to 1.74.

In the first quarter of 1982, primary and middle school teachers, medical workers and physical culture workers received the lumpsome of their wage increases which they were supposed to have beginning from October, 1981. Bonuses also increased, reports the survey, averaging 5.42 yuan per capita in the surveyed families.

The survey also shows Chinese families consumed more venetables, cooking oil, meat, poultry, eggs, fruit, fish and shrimp in the first quarter of 1982.

Consumption of cigarettes, however, dropped 11.2 percent due to increases in cigarette proces from November 1981.

COMPUTERS TO BE USED AT TIANJIN CONTAINER WHARF

OW091536 Beijing XINHUA in English 1526 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] Tianjin, June 9 (XINHUA) -- Computers will be used to facilitate container service at the Tianjin container wharf, China's first, according to Wang Haiping, manager of the Tianjin Container Service Company. He was speaking at the first technical container service exchange meeting, which closed here today. The meeting was attended by more than 70 persons from seven ports, research institutes, universities and technical schools in China.

Container service is now offered in the Shanghai, Tianjin, Dalian, Qingdao, Huangpu, Xiamen and Wuhan harbours.

Seven new container berths are now under construction in China. Three of them are in the Tianjin new harbour, two in Shanghai and two in Huangpu. When completed, they will raise handling capacity to between 700,000 and 1,000,000 standard international containers.

BUILDING MATERIALS INDUSTRY EXPANSION REPORTED

[Text] Beijing, June 9 (XINHUA) -- China's building materials industry has made new developments in the last three years and provided more house-building materials for Chinese peasants, according to a national meeting on building materials here.

As a result of the sustained increase in income, each year more than 5 percent of the peasant households are expected to be in need of building new houses in the next few years, the meeting predicted.

The total output value of the building materials industry in 1981 was 18 percent over 1978. The cement output reached 84 million tons, increasing an average of more than 5 million tons a year. Plate glass increased by 52.9 percent, registering an average annual increase of more than 3 million standard cases.

Two million cubic meters of prefabricated parts were manufactured in 1981, which was 67 percent over the previous year and would meet the needs of building 1.54 million new peasant houses, the meeting reported.

However, current production still falls far short of the needs of the peasants. In an effort to solve this problem, the state increased investment in the industry between 1979 and 1981, which was equivalent to the total investment between 1974 and 1978, and production capacity has thus been expanded. The meeting predicted that in the next three years, with the completion and going into operation of nine major cement plants including three key projects with imported equipment, and the expansion of eight other major plants, China's cement production capacity will increase by nine million tons.

In the first four months of the year, the output of cement accounted for 34.75 percent of the state annual plan and was 12.89 percent over the same 1981 period; the output of plate glass accounted for 38.13 percent of the annual target and was 15.08 percent over the same period last year. Other materials including sanitary wares, glazed bricks, asbestos, asbestos products, gypsum, marble planks and aerated concrete all increase over the same period of last year, according to reports at the meeting.

Quality has also improved in the last three years.

China's building materials industry now has 10 trades, including cement, glass, sanitary wares, walling materials and nonmetallic ores, turning out more than 500 kinds of products.

In the recent structural streamlining, the former Ministry of Building Materials Industry was renamed the present National Administration of Building Materials Industry. It is still the leading body in charge of the country's building materials industries.

PLA FULFILLS YEAR'S AFFORESTATION PLANS IN MAY

[Excerpts] Beijing, 9 Jun (XINHUA) -- As of the end of May, the PLA had overfulfilled this year's tree-planting and afforestation plans. The central afforestation commission highly praised the PLA troops for achieving good results in carrying out obligatory afforestation activities. It pointed out: The PLA has set a good example for the people in actively participating in various obligatory afforestation activities.

As of the end of May, the PLA had planted more than 36 million trees around its barracks, overfulfilling its annual tasks by 56 percent. It had grown 105,000 mu of forests and helped various localities plant over 35 million trees.

Tonight the all-army afforestation committee held a second telephone conference for the whole army to sum up the experience in tree planting and afforestation. In their speeches, Chairman Hong Xuezhi and Vice Chairman Chi Haotian of the all-army afforestation committee called on all the comrades throughout the army to firmly protect trees and forests, raise the survival rate, and consolidate and develop the past achievements in tree planting. At the same time, he called on them to make good preparation work in planting trees in the rainy season and after the fall, and to persistently do a good job in planting trees and carrying out afforestation activities.

DENG YINGCHAO MEETS FORMER KMT COMMANDER

[Text] Beijing, June 1 (XINHUA) -- Deng Yingchao, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, met and had a cordial conversation this morning in the Great Hall of the People with Li Hanhun and his wife, Wu Jufang, as well as their children. Li Hanhun, former governor of the Kuomintang Guangdong provincial government and deputy commander-in-chief of the third war zone, and his family, are here on a visit from the United States.

Deng Yingchao and Wu Jufang were acquainted with each other in Hong Kong in 1938. They were very happy to meet again after 44 years.

Deng Yingchao said to Li Hanhun: "You have come to visit the motherland at an advanced age of 88. This shows your heart is towards the motherland. I admire your patriotism." She stated: "We also welcome the old friends in Taiwan will come to the mainland for a visit."

Deng Yingchao said, although we have experienced some setbacks during the past 32 years, we have firm confidence and ability to build our country into a rich, strong and prosperous socialist one.

Wu Jufang said: "We believe in this."

Seeing the guests off, Deng Yingchao said she hoped that they would tell their relatives and friends in the United States what they see in China, and asked them to convey her regards to her friends there.

HONGQI ON PRESERVING PURITY OF COMMUNISM

HK071344 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 10, 16 May 82 pp 28-30

[Article by Xu Saohe [1776 6670 3109]: "A New Question for Study"]

[Text] At present we have started to combat serious economic crime. The struggle has given rise to a new question for study. We should be armed with Marxism-Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought to preserve the purity of communism.

Notable results have been scored in carrying out the open-door policy and the policy on strengthening our domestic economy in accordance with our socialist modernization and with the international and domestic situations since the smashing of the "gang of four," particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. That the policy will be carried out in the future is beyond doubt. We should, however, note that in the past 2 or 3 years, there has been a notable increase in serious crime such as smuggling, selling of smuggled goods, corruption, bribery, speculation, swindling and stealing property from the state and collectives. Such activities have been rampant in a small number of localities and among a small number of people. Such activities, which do great damage to the socialist economy, are often done by a small number of people in the national departments and enterprises who have colluded with undesirable elements in society. Some of these activities are done under the pretense of the state or enterprises; some are even backed up by some leading cadres. Some of our cadres, however, do not have a sufficient understanding of the seriousness and destructiveness of the questions reflected by the class struggle under the present historical conditions. It is, therefore, necessary to raise the ideological level of the members of the Communist Party and the staff of the state, to keep a clear mind and to preserve the purity of communism, so as to achieve a state of not being corrupt while the correct open-door policy and the policy on strengthening our domestic economy are being consistently carried out. This gives rise to a new question for study.

"The Decisions Made by the PRC State Council on Combating Serious Economic Crime" states that "our cadres, particularly our middle-ranking and leading cadres, should again study the works of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong, solemnly and persistently preserve the quality of the vanguard of the working class of our party, and preserve the purity of our members' communism. Our members' ideological level should not be lowered and their political awareness should never be weakened. Our members should never become corrupt and deteriorated." The successful study of the new question, the preservation of the purity of communism and the opposition to corruption and deterioration, all play an important part in the interest of our people and our state, in the stability of our socialist system and in the prosperity or decline of our state.

During the course of our revolution and construction, whenever a new historical era starts, we often pay close attention to the purity of communism. We always raise new questions in time so as to prevent corruption and deterioration among a small number of members and cadres. For instance, the emphasis of our work shifted from the rural area to the urban area during the early postliberation period. At that time, we had to come into closer contact with the capitalists. Confronted with this situation, some of our members became despondent. "They had not been conquered by the armed enemies." "They could not sustain the people's attack with sugar-coated bullets," so stated by Comrade Mao Zedong at the 2d Plenary Session of the 7th CCP Central Committee.

They indulged in material enjoyment; they were blinded by lust for gain; they took part in bribery and corruption and in illegal practices. Nevertheless, our party led all of its members and cadres to study its principles and policies so as to strengthen their political awareness and raise their ideological level. Our party started the movement of "anticorruption, antiextravagance, and antibureaucracy." It severely punished a small number of serious criminals. Our anticorruption and antideterioration force in our party has been greatly strengthened. Necessary conditions for socialist reform and socialist economic construction have been created.

Our present situation is different from that in the past. It is different from the situation in Russia's implementation period of the new economic plan declared by Lenin. However, the basic principles and spirit of preserving the purity of communism and the struggle against corruption and deterioration as advocated by Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong are still applicable to our present situation. The article "Excerpts of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong on Opposing Communist Members' Corruption and Deterioration," which has been in the press recently, is good material for study. We should thoroughly execute "The Decisions Made by the PRC State Council on Combating Serious Economic Crimes" and should study them seriously.

First, we should study communist ideology, build up a sound communist world outlook and fight persistently against harmful trends.

In many of their works Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong have stated an insistence on communist ideology. During the war of resistance against Japan, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out that "it is beyond doubt that our highest guiding principle is to push China toward a socialist and communist society. The name of our party and our Marxist world outlook have obviously demonstrated our brightest, highest and most wonderful ideal." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 1008) Every member has to vow to dedicate himself to this struggle when he joins the Communist Party. He is required to form a communist world outlook and to uphold the party's principles. As we march along the road to communism, it is inevitable that the development of our revolution will be impeded by all kinds of nonproletariat and harmful trends. How should we tackle these harmful trends? Lenin has pointed out that we "should keep a close eye to such trends and should resist them by means of communism." ("Complete Works of Lenin," vol 31, p 416) Comrade Mao Zedong also has pointed out that a member of the Communist Party should "uphold the correct principles and wage tireless struggle against erroneous ideas and behavior at any time and place." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 2, p 332) At present, a small number of our party's members have become corrupt and deteriorated and they have leaned toward the liberal bourgeoisie. We should follow the teaching of Lenin and Mao Zedong to uphold the party's principles and to carry out the struggle. Various harmful trends will run wild and greatly endanger the cause of our revolution if we do not firmly wage a struggle against them.

Second, we should learn to preserve the purity of communism under any conditions. We should not lower the members' ideological level or weaken their political awareness.

Lenin has pointed out that "to preserve the ideological and political individuality of the proletariat is the constant and doubtless obligation of the socialists. Those who fail to fulfill this obligation are no longer socialists in practice." ("Complete Works of Lenin," vol 10, p 60) In the preface and afterword to "The Survey on Agriculture," in 1941, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out that "to solemnly and firmly preserve the purity of communism among the members of the party, to protect those capitalistic qualities which benefit the economy and to let them develop appropriately are indispensable in our resistance against Japan and at the age of building up a people's republic." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 751) At present, our socialist economy has become absolutely dominant. Various forms of economy and management will continue to exist. Our social policy can never be communist social policy. However, members of the Communist Party should preserve the purity of communism under all circumstances. They should also maintain a good relationship between the preservation of the purity of communism and various social policies adopted under different circumstances.

We should not use the comments on noncommunism to criticize the social policies and oppose noncommunist policies which are adopted in accordance with the practical situation. Nor should we give up preserving the purity of communism, lower the ideological level or weaken the members' political awareness just because some social policies are not communist.

Third, we should learn to serve the people wholeheartedly and vow to wage a life-long struggle for communism.

It is our party's aim to serve the people wholeheartedly. It is our members' sacred responsibility to wage a life-long struggle for communism. Comrade Mao Zedong said "the Communist Party is to struggle, to serve the people wholeheartedly, not half-heartedly." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 5, p 420) He also said that "Communist Party members should never put their own interests first. Their personal interests should give way to the interests of the state and people. Therefore, selfishness, sluggishness, corruption, deterioration, 'showing-off' and so forth are most detestable. Selflessness, diligence, wholehearted devotion to public duty, the spirit of quietly immersing oneself in hard work, and so forth are reputable." (ibid., vol 2, p 488) Through studying Comrade Mao Zedong's teaching and practicing it in daily work, we can realize the public demand, become one with the masses and straighten up our party's spirit. If we possess such ideas and spirit, we will be able to put the interests of the state and people first, handle the relationship among the state, the collectives and the individuals, and abstain from jobbery; we will not give ourselves the airs of a hero and become proud and complacent, slacken to make any further progress and will not seek ease and enjoyment and be afraid of leading a hard life when we score good results; we can make criticism and self-criticism, be courageous enough to admit our shortcomings and to overcome them and rectify any ideas and behavior which are adverse to our party's cause when we make some errors in our work. In sum, if we possess such ideas and spirit, we can resist the capitalist attack with sugar-coated bullets; we will not lose in the battle against such sugar-coated bullets; and we can make continuous progress and vow to dedicate ourselves to the life-long struggle for communism.

In studying the article "Excerpts of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong on Opposing the Corruption and Deterioration of Communist Members," under the new historical conditions, we should closely link it with the present economic crimes and the harmful trends in the society. We should take a lesson from the corruption and deterioration of that small number of cadres. We should summarize and study the experience of our good and uncontaminiated cadres, members and collectives amidst the corrosion of capitalist ideas. We should analyze the practical situation to get a better understanding of the related teachings of Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong, to raise our ideology level and strengthen our political awareness, and to strengthen resistance to capitalist corrosion.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON STRESSING MARXIST THEORY

HK090455 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 30 May 82 p 3

[Article by Uye Ping [1471 1627]: "Carry Forward Marxist Theory -- In Preparation for the Centenary of the Death of Karl Marx"]

[Text] On 14 March 1883 Karl Marx passed away peacefully in his armchair. Next year will be the centenary of the death of this great proletarian revolutionary teacher.

The best commemoration for great men is to loyally carry on the cause pioneered by them, and the most important thing in commemorating the centenary of the death of Marx is to carry forward Marxist theory.

Engels said that Marx was "the first person who provided a scientific basis for socialism as well as for the whole modern workers' movement." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol 3, p 34) Together with his closest friend Engels, Marx founded Marxism.

With their own profound ideology and scientific theory, they educated the working class to understand its own historical position and mission and to substitute science for illusion, and the working class finally found the road to liberation. Under the guidance of Marxism, the international working class has achieved great victories in its liberation cause. Since the death of Marx and Engels, Marxism has been constantly enriching itself and developing on the basis of the practice of the workers movements and socialist movements of various countries. Lenin made the most important contribution to the development of Marxism. In the era of imperialism and the proletarian revolution, he carried Marxism forward in an all-round way and founded Leninism, which was commonly accepted by the international proletariat. In their practice, Marxists of various countries have also made contributions to the development of Marxism. In the course of their application of Marxism to the large oriental country of China, the Chinese Communists, whose main representative was Comrade Mao Zedong, have made a theoretical contribution and founded Mao Zedong Thought.

Viewed from the present angle of the world socialist movement, or from the development of China's socialist cause, and particularly from China's modernization, it is imperative to carry forward Marxism.

In the times of Marx and Engels, socialism was only a prediction that had a scientific basis. When Lenin was alive, there was only one newly built socialist country in the world. At present, socialism is not the practice of one country only, and socialist countries have over 60 years of history behind them. In many respects, the practice of socialism has exceeded the predictions and conceptions of Marx and Engels in many aspects (for instance, socialist revolution did not achieve victory in a developed capitalist country first, but in an economically backward country instead), accumulated very rich experience and lessons and put forward a series of new questions. In particular, it has put forward the questions of how the proletariat should build its own party when it is in power and of how it should lead socialist revolution and construction under economically backward conditions. With regard to these questions, we must make a new theoretical summary and provide scientific answers.

On the other hand, the situation in the capitalist old world has greatly developed and changed. Between the end of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th century, free capitalism developed into monopoly capitalism. Lenin made a theoretical summary of this phenomenon. Since World War II, many new changes have emerged in the development of capitalism. Former colonies and dependencies have basically realized political independence and formed today's Third World. This new situation shows that there have been important changes in the conditions for proletarian liberation. Marxists should make a scientific explanation of these changes so that they can guide today's revolutionary movements.

Let us take another view, from the angle of the development of natural science and technology. In the past 100 years, particularly in the past few decades, there have been many new discoveries, new achievements and new conclusions in natural science. Moreover, unprecedented miracles have emerged in the practical application of modern scientific knowledge in industrial and other fields. Engels said that following the discoveries in the field of natural science in each era, materialism would inevitably change its forms. Marxist philosophy should enrich and develop itself on the basis of summarizing new achievements in natural science and of summing up new experiences of the revolutionary struggles in the past 100 years.

Besides philosophy, political economics and scientific socialism, questions in other fields have also emerged in practice. This means that, on the basis of summing up experience and studying new situations, we should supplement the ideas and bring forth new ideas on these questions.

Viewed from the socialist practice in our country, an outstanding contradiction is that theory cannot conform to the requirements of practical work. Through our hard work in the past few years we have completed the historical task of bringing order out of chaos in respect to our party's guiding thinking. This also includes our important contributions to theoretical work. But viewed from the situation as a whole, our theoretical work is not suited to our practice.

One reason is that we have not been able to sum up profoundly and specifically our past rich and practical experience so that it can be raised to a systematic and scientific theory; the other reason is that we have not been able to theoretically explain and solve a series of actual problems we have come across in our modernization. Of these problems, some are old problems that have remained unsolved for many years, but others are new problems. Take for example the problem of the law governing socialist economic construction, the problem of construction in our socialist country, the problem of the building of a ruling Communist Party, the problem of the building of socialist civilization and the problem of classes and class struggle. We must energetically solve the problem of combining the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with our current practice.

Although many new changes have taken place following historical development, and although many mistakes and setbacks have emerged in our socialist practice, we can say with certainty that the fundamental principles of Marxism are not "outdated." What merits attention is that our enemies are making use of these problems to wantonly attack and vilify Marxism. Among our comrades, some people are beginning to take, to varying degrees, a skeptical attitude and waver with regard to Marxism. Internationally and domestically, we must uphold Marxism. To uphold Marxism it is necessary not only to conscientiously study, propagate and apply Marxism, but also to constantly carry forward Marxism under new historical conditions.

Marxism must be combined with the actual tasks of the corresponding era and with the changed tasks that follow a new historical change. Otherwise, Marxism will become one-sided and ossified. Lenin said that Marx' theory "has only laid a foundation for a science. If socialists are not willing to lag behind actual life, they should carry forward this science in various aspects." ("Selected Works of Lenin," vol 1, p 203) At present, we are confronted with such a situation.

We should carry forward our theoretical work and make a contribution to the development of Marxism. Viewed from our present theoretical work, it is necessary to solve the following problems ideologically and in work.

First, we must place theoretical work in an appropriate position.

The main thing is to understand ideologically the importance of theory. Particularly when our party commits theoretical mistakes, we should pay attention to solving this problem well. The victory of the Chinese revolution relied on the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. Just as Comrade Mao Zedong summarized: "Once the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism is combined with the concrete practice of the Chinese revolution, the Chinese revolution will take on a new look." ("Selected Works of Mao Zedong," vol 3, p 745) Everyone has a profound understanding of this point. In the 30-odd years since the founding of the People's Republic of China, many faults and mistakes in our actual work, including such a serious mistake as the "Cultural Revolution," have been closely related to theoretical mistakes. It can also be said that theoretical mistakes are often the precedence of mistakes in actual work. The magnifying of class struggle beyond limits and the eagerness for quick results in economic construction were all based on one-sided and erroneous theory. This is one of the important historical lessons we must never forget.

We must change the situation in which theoretical work is not suited to practice. We must make theory take the lead and guide practice. Engels said: "Underestimating theory is obviously the most definite road for thinking naturalistically and thus incorrectly." ("Selected Works of Marx and Engels," vol 3, p 482) Underestimating theory will inevitably lead to a road of erroneous thinking, and once erroneous thinking is carried through to the end, it will inevitably lead to a place opposite to its starting point, or even make us fall into ridiculous blind faith. Many of our comrades have bitter lessons in this respect. In the course of leading our modernization, we must conscientiously use theory to guide our actual work. When deciding on working principles and in solving major actual problems, we must first carry out theoretical thinking, and organize the theoretical workers concerned to study and investigate in a "seek truth from facts" manner to get a clear idea of the nature and law of things and of the principles concerned.

We must conscientiously solve the muddled idea that maintains that theory cannot solve actual work and that theoretical work is a soft task. We must conscientiously place theoretical work in an appropriate position. This is one of the important guarantees for achieving good results in our actual work and for avoiding committing serious mistakes.

Second, we must know well the characteristics and law of theoretical work.

This is the key link for strengthening and improving the party's leadership over theoretical work. Theoretical study is arduous scientific work. Like the study of social and natural sciences, it is creative and truth-finding work. In our theoretical work, controversies over differing opinions, faults and mistakes of various kinds are inevitable. The party Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong once proposed that we should take a serious attitude with regard to right and wrong in the scientific field, propagate free discussions and avoid drawing rash conclusions. In particular, they proposed that we should not raise at will the problem of holding differing views to the level of politics for criticism. They further proposed that we should "let a hundred schools of thought contend," and that theoretical workers should be good at thinking and not echo the views of others indiscriminately. These ideas are based on theoretical and scientific work. But theoretical work (including social sciences as a whole) is different from natural science. The former has strong party spirit. Therefore, theoretical workers are required to have a clear political orientation, to uphold the principles of Marxism and to observe the party's resolutions and discipline. Both our leaders and theoretical workers must be good at unifying the above two aspects in an appropriate manner. We have many experiences and lessons in this respect.

In the past few years, the party Central Committee has been emphasizing that we must emancipate the four basic principles and clearly demanded that theoretical workers should look forward and "dare to think, dare to speak and dare to write." By conscientiously implementing these principles and requirements of the party Central Committee in an all-round way, by improving and strengthening the party's leadership in theoretical work and by bringing into full play the initiatives of theoretical workers, we can open up new prospects for Marxist theoretical work.

Another important matter is that we must organize our theoretical contingent well.

Our theoretical contingent is not well organized. This is not beneficial to the development of theoretical work, nor is it beneficial to the unification of our thinking. This problem must be solved well. On the basis of adhering to the four basic principles, we must further organize our theoretical contingent. This includes overall planning in our work and mutual coordination and cooperation among various departments. A major task such as studying and summarizing new theoretical achievements in the 100 years since the death of Marx and carrying forward Marxist science naturally demands more cooperation among various departments. It also demands the mobilization of theoretical workers. Systematic summing up of research work cannot be carried out in a piecemeal manner or bit by bit.

The "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China" adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee has clearly proposed the application and development of our party's theoretical achievements in our practice in the new period and the using of new practical principles and conclusions to enrich and develop the theoretical requirements of our party. The "resolution" itself is a vivid manifestation of creative Marxist theoretical work. It has also pointed out a correct orientation and tasks for our party's theoretical work. Under the impetus of this resolution, the whole party and all theoretical workers must adhere to the principle of combining theory with practice and work hard together for several years. We are sure that on the basis of our present theoretical work we will make big strides and achieve great successes.

ANHUI PLA LEADERS ON EMULATING MARTYR'S DEEDS

OW051956 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] Leading comrades of the Anhui Provincial Military District held a meeting on the morning of 3 June to study and discuss an order issued by the CCP Central Committee's Military Commission conferring the glorious title of "good cadre who gave his life to rescue others" on Comrade Guo Jun. Commander Yu Guangmao and Political Commissar (Xiong Yukun) presided over the meeting.

The participants held that Comrade Guo Jun was a typical example of the young generation of people nurtured by the party and Mao Zedong Thought, an advanced model in building socialist spiritual civilization and a good cadre who served the people wholeheartedly. The conferment of the glorious title on Comrade Guo Jun by the CCP Central Committee, which called on all commanders and fighters to learn from Comrade Guo Jun, is of great significance for encouraging all commanders and fighters to more diligently study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and foster communist ideas, upholding the four fundamental principles, struggling against the corrosion by capitalist ideology, building socialist spiritual civilization, doing a solid job in all fields of work and promoting army and militia building. The participants held that since the whole army should learn from Guo Jun, who was from Anhui, all army units and militiamen should be organized to more extensively and penetratingly study Comrade Guo Jun's deeds and train more advanced individuals like Comrade Guo Jun. Leading cadres should also take the initiative to study his advanced deeds and educate children about them so that the spirit of Comrade Guo Jun can blossom and bear fruit throughout the army.

FUJIAN ISSUES CIRCULAR ON COMMENDING LABOR MODELS

[Excerpts] The provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government recently issued a circular on holding a meeting of labor models from among workers and staff members in the province in September this year.

The circulular says: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, workers, technicians, management personnel, scientific research workers, teachers and medical personnel on various fronts in our province have carried forward the fine tradition of the working class, kept the cardinal principles in mind, taken the overall situation into account, worked faithfully in discharging their duties and worked hard and perseveringly. In carrying out the special policies and flexible measures of our province, they have emancipated their minds, proceeded from the conditions in Fujian Province, brought superior factors into play, assiduously studied ways of transforming mountains and harnessing rivers, completed projects for eight major bases and made enormous contributions to readjusting the economy, developing the political situation of unity and stability and expediting economic construction in our province. A number of model workers and outstanding personages have emerged who have a high level of socialist consciousness, lofty patriotism and a strong sense of responsibility as masters of the country and who have made outstanding achievements in developing productive forces.

In order to commend their advanced deeds, to further mobilize workers and staff members throughout the province to implement the principles and policies adopted since the third plenary session of the CCP Central Committee, and to launch in a more extensive way the socialist emulation drive of "three competitions, six seekings, learnings from the advanced and creating six goods" [san bi liu zhao xue xian jin chuang liu hao 0005 3024 0362 2109 1331 0341 6651 0482 0362 1170], as well as activities to make contributions to the four modernizations, to start an upsurge in the campaign to emulate the advanced, learn from, catch up with and overtake them and help the less advanced and to promote the building of the two civilizations in our province, the provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government have decided to hold a meeting of labor models from among workers and staff members in Fujian Province in September this year.

The circular points out: Labor models must be outstanding representatives of advanced productive forces who are capable of manifesting the orientation of social development. The major criteria for selecting labor models from among the workers and staff members lie in whether they have played a prominent role in promoting the development of productive forces and whether they have made important contributions to socialist construction. In this connection, labor models must have a high level of political consciousness, have an ardent love for the motherland, the party and socialism, adhere to the four fundamental principles and play a leading role as well as the role of mainstay and a bridge in building socialist material and spiritual civilization.

In order to strengthen unified leadership over the work of selecting labor models, the provincial CCP committee and the provincial people's government have decided to set up a provincial commission for selecting labor models from among the workers and staff members of our province, with Cheng Xu as chairman and Wang Yan as vice chairman of the commission.

XU JIATUN AT JIANGSU CONGRESS COMMITTEE SESSION

OW311116 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 May 82

[Text] The 14th session of the Standing Committee of the Fifth Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress concluded in Nanjing on the afternoon of 30 May after a 4-day session. All members of the Standing Committee of the Jiangsu Provincial CPPCC Committee attended the meeting as observers.

The participants listened to a report by Comrade He Binghao on the 23d Session of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, studied and discussed the draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China and reviewed the situation of organizing the masses to study and discuss the draft of the revised constitution in various municipalities and counties during the past month. The participants discussed their gains in studying the draft of the revised constitution, made suggestions on revising the draft and decided on a resolution concerning this matter. The participants heard a report by Vice Governor Hong Peilin on the current struggle against serious economic crimes in this province and unanimously expressed their approval. They also adopted a resolution calling for further launching the struggle against economic crimes.

The meeting approved in principle three local laws submitted to the meeting for review and approval by the provincial people's government, namely, "The Provisional Regulations Governing the Protection of Scenic Places and Historical Relics," "The Provisional Regulations Governing the Protection of Trees in Various Cities in Jiangsu Province" and "The Regulations Governing the Protection of the Water Resources of Taihu Lake." The meeting decided that the provincial people's government should promulgate and implement these regulations. The meeting approved Vice Governor Wang Bingshi's report on commending 515 advanced individuals and 227 advanced collectives of the province for 1981. The meeting decided that the provincial people's government should confer the honorable titles of provincial model workers and provincial advanced collectives on those individuals and collectives at the provincial meeting to award model workers and advanced collectives to be held in June of this year. The meeting also approved appointments and removals of cadres of the procurators' offices.

Xu Jiatun, chairman of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, spoke at the conclusion of the meeting. He said: This meeting has discussed two very important things at the moment. They are the study and discussion of the draft of the revised constitution and the struggle against serious criminal activities in the economic field. He emphatically pointed out: It is imperative to seriously study and discuss the draft of the revised constitution and to ensure the healthy development of the struggle against serious economic crimes by drawing distinctions in accordance with the party's policies.

Xin Shaobo, Dai Weiran, Xie Kedong, Ye Xuchao and Liu Shuxun, vice chairmen of the Standing Committee of the Jiangsu Provincial People's Congress, attended the meeting.

The responsible persons of the provincial people's government, the provincial higher people's court, the provincial people's procuratorate, the provincial urban construction bureau and the provincial environmental protection bureau attended the meeting as observers. The responsible persons of various prefectures' administrative offices, the responsible persons of standing committees of the people's congresses of municipalities directly under the province and the responsible persons of standing committees of the people's congresses of a number of municipalities and counties also attended the meeting as observers.

JIANGXI ISSUES CIRCULAR ON GRAIN PURCHASES, SALES

OW031315 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Jun 82

[Text] In accordance with a decision of the State Council, the Jiangxi provincial party committee and the provincial people's government recently issued a circular on a system the province is to adopt this year under which full responsibility will be assigned to the localities for fulfillment of grain purchases, sales and transfer tasks which will be set and remain unchanged for 3 years. The circular calls on the localities to effectively strengthen leadership, regard their grain responsibility as a matter of major importance, make conscientious efforts to achieve an overall grain balance while striving to increase grain production and actively developing diversified undertakings, correctly handle the relationship between the state, the collective and the individual, ensure the fulfillment of each year's grain purchase tasks, properly control grain sales according to plans and make greater contributions to the state.

The circular says: The targets for the various grain tasks under the responsibility system will be set on the basis of the realities in the past few years and in light of such factors as grain production growth and changes in grain purchases and marketing in the years to come. Grain purchase tasks will include the base figure for grain purchases and the base figure for above-quota grain purchases; grain sales tasks will include nonagricultral and agricultural sales; and grain transfer tasks will be determined according to the balance between purchase and sales after fulfillment of purchase and sales tasks. The various tasks will remain unchanged for 3 years after being set. In normal harvest years, the localities must guarantee fulfillment of the purchase tasks assigned to them. In the event the purchase tasks for a given year cannot be fulfilled due to serious natural disasters, suitable readjustments may be made between years with the approval of the people's government at a higher level. However, one year's shortfall must be made up in the next year and the overall purchase tasks for the 3 years as a whole must still be fulfilled. One year's grain sales surplus may be used in the next year, but at the end of the 3 years the overall grain sales must not be in excess of the target.

The circular also says: The grain purchase and above-quota purchase tasks assigned to the localities by the province should be distributed to the production teams and state farms level by level. In localities where the production responsibility system under which production contracts are signed with working groups and households is practiced, the production team is responsible for setting output targets for the contracted working groups and households. Within the limits permitted by policy after fulfilling purchase and above-quota purchase tasks, production teams, working groups, households and state farms have the right to dispose of their surplus grain as they wish.

The circular points out: After adoption of the responsibility system for grain purchases, sales and transfer tasks, all localities must make proper arrangements for and guarantee the supply of grain as stipulated by policy and not refuse to supply or supply less under any pretext.

The amount of grain to be used as expenditures in the course of purchasing agricultural and sideline products should be used by the localities according to the limits and standards stipulated by policy and must not adversely affect the fulfillment of grain purchase tasks.

CHINA DAILY ON SHANGHAI INDUSTRIAL EFFICIENCY

HK290201 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 29 May 82 p 1

[Text] SHANGHAI'S INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION HAS BECOME INCREASINGLY EFFICIENT, AND THE CITY HAS BEGUN EXPORTING ITS TECHNICAL AND MANAGERIAL EXPERTISE TO OTHER PROVINCES AND AUTONOMOUS REGIONS. [passage published in bodlface]

According to a report in the Shanghai-based WORLD ECONOMIC HERALD [SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO], production costs per 100 yuan of output by the city's 10 major industrial bureaus have dropped from 21.37 yuan in 1976 to 14.38 yuan in 1981. This represents a savings of 4,500 million yuan, the magazine said.

The turnover of goods and capital have reached record pace in Shanghai, but many obstacles to greater profitability remain, the magazine said. For instance, at the end of last year, some 580 billion yuan worth of materials and products remained in stock, representing eight percent of the total amount of operating capital. Most of Shanghai's more than 7,000 enterprises are weak in economic management, the magazine said. Production costs at a small electric metre factory, for example, are 38 percent higher than in the other similar factories. However, the factory is still increasing its output, disregarding the cost. In addition, the magazine said, some commercial departments continue to purchase slow-selling goods and factories go on turning out them despite the indifference of consumers.

However, Shanghai's progress has allowed the city to participate in more than 110 economic and technical cooperation projects with other parts of China, the GUANGMING RIBAO reports. The projects are with Jiangsu, Anhui, Zhejiang, Shandong, Hubei, and 12 other provinces or autonomous regions across the country and cover compensation trade, joint management, technical cooperation, joint sales, and cooperative management of enterprises. Such cooperation has allowed these areas to benefit from Shanghai's advanced technology and managerial experience, the paper said. Through joint management with a Shanghai lamp factory, the Suqian County No 2 glassworks in Anhui Province increased the number of its products from 19 to 44 last year, and the proportion of quality products increased from 70 to 87 percent. Through compensation trade, Shanghai now receives more than 7,000 tons of paper, 80,000 tons of cement, some 6,000 cubic metres of timber, 30,000 tons of coal and large quantities of furniture, leather products, silks, sand, and rock, the paper said.

ZHEJIANG RELEASES FORMER KUOMINTANG PERSONNEL

OW040644 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 31 May 82

[Text] Hangzhou -- Judicial departments in Zhejiang held meetings in Jinhua and other places in Zhejiang on 28 May announcing the release of all 45 former Kuomintang party, government and military personnel below the county and squad level. Letters and certificates of release were issued by the judicial departments to the released personnel at the meetings together with new clothing, bedding, travel expenses and pocket money. It was announced at the meetings that the released personnel would be provided means of livelihood and that those who had no known relatives would be taken care of through proper arrangements. Looling back on the lenient treatment they received from the people's government in the past decades, which helped them turn a new leaf, the released personnel were in tears when they received their certificates of release. They pledged to become new citizens useful to the people.

GUANGDONG PROPOSES PROJECTS FOR JOINT VENTURES

[Text] At the China investment promotion meeting, Guangdong Province put forward six projects for joint ventures with foreign investors. At present more than 100 foreign firms have signed up for negotiations on this matter. For one of the projects, over 27 enterprises from 15 foreign countries and regions have signed up for negotiations.

The six projects are: the Shantou sensitization chemical plant, the Zhanjiang chemical plant, the Huaxian County cement plant, the Chaozhou Overseas Chinese porcelain factory, the Guangdong nonferrous-metal-processing factory and the Guangdong provincial semiconductor equipment factory. Besides, there are two other enterprises established by the central ministries in Guangdong: the Guangzhou heavy-duty machinery plant and the Shenzhen Hua Qiang electronic equipment corporation.

NANFANG RIBAO ON IMPLEMENTING OPEN-DOOR POLICY

["Weekly Chat" by Yi Yan [2496 6056]: "Cherish Such Wealth"]

[Text] Since the start of the crackdown on criminal activities in the economic area, everyone has talked more and more about experiences and lessons concerning the speical policies and flexible measures that we have followed in the past several years by opening the door to the world and relaxing control at home. Views have varied from person to person. There has not been a consensus on certain problems. But attaching importance to experiences and striving to make investigations and studies do much to help our cuase. Marked results have been achieved in the special policies and flexible measures adopted by Guangdong in the past several years. A great wealth of experience has been accumulated. These experiences are a source of wealth -- a source of spiritual wealth. We must appreciate it, use it and give full play to its role.

By duly summing up and introducing experiences that help to enliven the economy, we can not only more easily understand socialist economic laws and make proper reforms in the economic system, but also arouse the enthusiasm of enterprises and workers, stimulate the development of productivity and improve economic yields. This is clearly seen from the experiences of Qingyuan. In the past several years, starting with the award of a percentage of enterprise profits realized over and above a given target, Qingyuan made reforms in the county's industrial management system and then adopted the method of putting profits on a contract basis for a 3-year period in every contract. This has resulted in greater enthusiasm on the part of enterprises and workers and a continuous increase in production. The year before the reform, 17 local and state-run industrial enterprises in the county suffered a total net loss of 310,000 yuan. After the reform, they made profits instead of showing losses. Their profits have risen each year. In 1980, profits reached 4.36 million yuan. Since the whole province introduced Qingyuan's experiences, relatively satisfactory economic results have been realized. We still have many valuable experiences to implement. For example, in building the special economic zones, we can draw on the experiences of the Shekou industrial area and the enterprise management experiences of the tourist center of Shijingshan, Zhuhai municipality. If we seriously sum up and introduce the valuable experiences in carrying out special policies and flexible measures in the past few years, this can become a great driving force in arousing the enthusiasm of enterprises and workers and in developing productivity.

In actual life, there are many thought-provoking cases that show sharp contrasts. For example, of the units similarly involved in economic activities with foreign countries, some strictly enforce discipline in their approach to foreign things, consciously resisting corruption by bourgeois ideas and honestly serving the public. Others demand gifts and receive bribes and even act in collusion with individual foreign businessmen in carrying out smuggling activities. In the same coastal region, some areas are seriously affected by smuggling and illegal trading, while other areas successfully resist the evil trend of smuggling. Only when a comparison is made can there be an assessment. If we make a scientific comparison and analysis of these positive and negative experiences, we can discover a legal means to eliminate illiteracy and strengthen consciousness.

At present, some people have blamed the open-door policy for smuggling, corruption, bribery and other criminal activities in the economic area as witnessed in the past several years. They hold that all these activities are a result of opening the door to foreign countries. This hints at blindness. Through summing up experiences, we can make these people understand that there are no necessary links between an open-door approach and criminal activities in the economic area. We can also thus straighten out their thinking and strengthen their confidence in carrying out the open-door policy.

We often say that the modernization effort is a new task of the new era. In that respect, carrying out special policies and flexible measures and building special economic zones mean adding new things to what is already new. More new conditions and new problems are likely to be encountered. In solving new problems that confront us, the appearance of some mistakes is really unavoidable. But we cannot use this as an excuse and refrain from realistically learning from mistakes. We must also pay attention to summing up negative experiences and strive to correct what is wrong. We must more effectively carry out special policies and flexible measures.

ENRICHMENT OF PEASANTS THROUGH LABOR URGED

[Commentator's article: "Let the Peasants Get Rich Through Labor With Minds Always at Ease"]

[Text] The Jieyang County People's Government has vigorously commended 13 commune members and representatives of production brigades and teams who have gotten rich through labor. This is really a well-done effort which is of practical significance. Now quite a few peasants are concerned that the party's policy might change and their good days are numbered. On the other hand, some comrades in a few places even mention in the same breath the peasants who have gotten rich through labor and exposed economic criminals. Under such circumstances, commending the peasants who have got rich through labor is actually a strong reiteration of the continuity of the economic policy toward rural areas adopted since the third plenary session, or more precisely, support for those peasants trying to get rich.

To let peasants get rich as soon as possible on the socialist road is the strategic guideline which was laid down at the third plenary session and must be upheld for a long period to come. Under the guidance of this strategic guideline, the party's various policies have been carried out step by step, the rural economy has been gradually enlivened, and the peasants' standard of living has been greatly improved. Now, the vast number of peasants unanimously agree that our current policy toward rural areas is the best policy since liberation. As the peasants' life is improving daily, they are becoming more and more confident in the party's policy. This is not only an important indication that the economic and political situation in our country is improving, but also an important guarantee for the smooth implementation of the four modernizations construction. Every comrade should cherish the excellent situation in rural areas and cherish the peasants' initiative in getting rich through labor, and should not promote the "leftist" practices or harm the peasants' initiative any more.

Now, seeing that a number of peasants are getting rich sooner and their livelihood is getting better than others, some people are jealous and think that they are deviating from the road of getting rich. Such a view is wrong. These comrades must understand that among a series of our party's economic policies toward rural areas, we have a most fundamental one, namely, the policy of implementing various forms of the production responsibility system and the principle of distribution according to work, more remuneration for more work and less remuneration for less work. This policy determines that a number of people who are eager to work, and are more skillfull and more efficient in working, will naturally receive more income than others, and thus will get rich sooner than others. This is really a good thing. These people who have got rich sooner should be encouraged, commended and supported. Wrongly discriminating against them and dealing blows to them will give rise to confusion and harm the initiative of the vast number of peasants.

Of course, while encouraging some people to get rich sooner, we must also take effective measures, on the premise that egalitarianism is avoided, to assist a small number of commune member households experiencing difficulties in better developing production, increasing income and getting rich step by step.

There is no doubt that the struggle of dealing blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field must be vigorously and quickly carried out to the end. Nevertheless, getting rich through labor and committing economic crimes are totally different. We must draw a clear demarcation line between these two matters. For all those peasants who get rich sooner in rural areas, their getting rich is a glorious thing which is worth commending and is approved by the state law, only if they are not getting rich through corruption, theft, smuggling, selling smuggled goods, bribery, speculation, profiteering, deception and so on, but rather through labor, hard work and a higher degree of skill. Of course, in guiding peasants to get rich through labor, we must also study new circumstances and solve new problems. All our measures to be taken must aim at mobilizing more effectively the peasants' initiative, and not the contrary.

Let the peasants get rich through labor with minds always at ease!

RELYING ON PARTY POLICIES IN RURAL AREAS URGED

HK310137 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 29 May 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Rely on the Policies To Lead the Masses in Self-Salvation Through Production"]

[Excerpts] On the basis of continuing to make proper arrangements for the livelihood of the disaster-afflicted masses, Qingyuan, Yingde, Sihui, Huaiji and other places in Guangdong that were recently hit by serious floods are now shifting their work focus to leading the masses to restore production and rebuild their homes. In order to fulfill this arduous task, it is necessary to implement the party policies in connection with the reality of the disaster areas and use the policies to mobilize the masses' enthusiasm for self-salvation through production.

Resisting and relieving disaster depend mainly on the masses, and the masses should rely on party leadership. At the crucial moment in crash-rescuing people in the previous stage, the party organizations at all levels in the disaster areas displayed their role as powerful fighting forces, and the party members and cadres displayed the lofty spirit of serving the people wholeheartedly. Many of the disaster-afflicted masses are now saying with feeling: "We would never have survived but for the party and the PLA." It is evident that the powerful leading role of the party was displayed in the face of this disaster. The masses have understood from their personal experience that they must do as the party says in order to restore production, rebuild their homes, and eliminate the scars of the disaster.

We should mainly rely on party policies in leading the masses to restore production and rebuild their homes. Since the third plenary session, agriculture, sideline production and industry have developed together in the rural areas, the outlook there has been rapidly transformed, and the situation has become better and better. The fundamental reason for this is that we have implemented the series of correct policies. Hence, a current urgent task in the disaster areas is to act according to the third plenary session's policy principles and, in connection with local reality, formulate and implement specific policies for mobilizing the masses' enthusiasm for self-salvation through production. Of course, effective state support is needed to overcome such a serious disaster. However, the most fundamental thing is to rely on the masses to carry out self-salvation through production.

A fundamental party policy in the rural areas since the third plenary session is to stop eating out of a common pot, practice various types of production responsibility systems and implement the principle of distribution according to work and more pay for more work. This policy has played a decisive role in developing the excellent rural situation. Yingde and some other disaster counties have decided to proceed from the reality of the disaster areas and formulate corresponding regulations to unswervingly implement this policy. This is completely necessary.

For instance, the disaster areas have to distribute relief grain and funds and allocate grain procured by state monopoly or at negotiated prices. Apart from distributing appropriate amounts of grain to five-guarantee households that have lost their labor force, old people and young children, they should not practice egalitarian distribution of grain to all laborers. When organizing manpower to crash-repair water conservation facilities, farmland, roads, schools and hospitals and to rebuild the homes of dependents of martyrs and servicemen and of five-guarantee households, they should adopt the method of "providing work as a form of relief," link the distribution of relief grain with self-salvation through production and practice the system of more pay for more work and less pay for less work. This is an effective way to overcome ideas among the masses of sitting and waiting for relief and to mobilize their enthusiasm for self-salvation through production.

Again, the disaster areas cannot practice egalitarianism in waiving or reducing state grain and oil procurement quotas. They can practice the methods of assessing the extent of the disaster for each household, promptly deciding on reducing or waiving grain and oil procurement tasks for each production team, work group and household, splitting the year's procurement quota between the early and late crops, completely waiving or reducing the quota for the first half of the year and reducing it in proportion for some units where only a portion of the crop has been lost. After formulating the plans for reducing or waiving the quotas, they should ensure that those who increase production to a greater extent get more to eat, those who increase production to a smaller extent do not get as much, and there is no waiving of quotas or supply of monopoly-procured grain for places where production was reduced due to artificial causes. In this way, under the conditions of a serious disaster, we can achieve rational reduction or waiving of quotas and also implement the principle of distribution according to work and more pay for more work.

Again, with regard to some farmland where it is difficult to resume cultivation for the time being due to flood damage, we can adopt the method of closely integrating resumption of cultivation with the peasants' vital interests, to mobilize their enthusiasm. Of course, it must first be emphasized that cultivation should be resumed wherever possible. However, there is indeed some land where it is difficult to resume cultivation for some time. In order to encourage the peasants to resume cultivation of this land, we can make the following stipulation: The state procurement quotas and the commune and brigade retention quotas can be reduced or waived for 1 to 3 years, according to the circumstances, on all such land farmed by specialized responsibility groups and households that resume cultivation of it. In this way the policy is relaxed and the result will be that the masses clear aside all difficulties and resume cultivation in a big way.

As for areas that have not suffered or have suffered only light disaster, we should reiterate that there is no change in the series of party policies. At present, the cadres and masses in these areas are worried that their state procurement quotas will be increased due to the heavy disaster in fraternal counties, communes and brigades. We should clearly explain to the cadres and masses in these areas that we will resolutely act according to the third plenary session policies and will not go in for egalitarianism and indiscriminate transfer of resources. Even if the areas of no or light disaster increase production, their grain procurement quotas will not be increased. We will encourage these areas to sell more grain in excess of the quota or at negotiated prices, to support the people in the disaster areas. This is also beneficial for the people in the areas of no or light disaster.

QIAO XIAOGUANG AT GUANGXI DIVING PERFORMANCES

HENAN HOLDS POSTS, TELECOMMUNICATIONS CONFERENCE

HK091230 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Summary] "The recent Henan provincial conference on posts and telecommunications work put forth that posts and telecommunications enterprises must fully tap potentials, strengthen their capacity for communications, improve the quality of communications and the quality of service and better serve economic construction and the people's livelihood in our province." In posts and telecommunications work, it is essential to grasp the following: First, it is necessary to increase posts and telecommunications facilities and improve communications work. All prefectural and municipal posts and telecommunications bureaus throughout the province must conduct investigation and increase the number of mailboxes on major roads in urban areas. Second, it is imperative to strengthen capacity for communications. In some urban areas, the province must increase the number of posts and telecommunications service networks and points. Third, the province must strengthen the straightening out of enterprises, fully tap the potential of enterprises and increase communications efficiency and economic returns. The 140 posts and telecommunications enterprises throughout the province must be straightened out by stages and in groups.

HUNAN MEETING DISCUSSES ACTION ON ECONOMIC CRIME

HK070557 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 6 Jun 82

[Text] The Hunan Provincial CCP Committee recently held a meeting in Changsha on hitting at serious economic crimes, to review the situation in the struggle in the previous stage and sum up and exchange experiences. The meeting focused on studying measures for carrying out in greater depth the struggle to hit at serious economic crime. The meeting held: The development of the province's struggle against serious economic crime is healthy, and initial results have already been scored. The meeting stressed: In order to carry out the struggle in greater depth, the party committees at all levels must organize the party members and cadres to repeatedly study the relevant central documents and instructions in connection with reality, further enhance understanding and summon up resolve to carry through to the end this struggle, which is related to the prosperity or decline and life or death of the party and state. It is necessary to relentlessly grasp tackling major and important cases, especially those involving leading cadres at and above county level. It is necessary to correctly grasp policies, to ensure the healthy development of the struggle. It is necessary to grasp the work of hitting at serious economic crime with one hand and the policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy with the other. The meeting demanded that the province do well in integrating the drive against serious economic crime with rectifying party organization and cadre work style, straightening out the enterprises and inspecting finances. Party organizations of units at the above county level must seriously conduct an organizational life session around 1 July to check on their stand, attitude and other relevant issues in this struggle. They must strengthen leadership over this struggle. Leading cadres responsible for grasping this struggle must act as true commanders, not just as nominal ones. It is necessary to organize the departments concerned to coordinate their efforts in the struggle. The forces of the administrative organs concerned must be agumented.

STRENGTHENING SICHUAN ANTICRIME DRIVE URGED

HK100357 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0330 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "Heighten understanding, Strengthen Leadership, Carry Through to the End the Struggle Against Economic Crime"]

[Excerpts] At present, a struggle to hit at serious economic crime is unfolding in depth in Sichuan. Seriously implementing the instructions of the Central Committee and State Council and following the arrangements of the provincial CCP committee, the party committees throughout the province have exposed and cracked a number of cases of serious economic crime. A number of criminal elements have been punished in the proper way. Some success has been scored. The masses welcome the launching of this struggle.

However, the situation is not completely the same throughout the province. Action is slow and progress small in a few areas and units. The main reason for this is that certain leading departments and cadres still have all kinds of erroneous and muddled ideas on this struggle. They thus fail to lead it effectively. Big and major cases have not yet been completely exposed, nor have the small number of cases exposed been completely investigated and handled. Hence, further solving the problems of understanding among these leading cadres is a key to whether this struggle can be carried through to the end.

In order to strengthen leadership and unfold more resolutely and effectively the struggle to hit at serious illegal and criminal activities in the economic field, every party member, and especially the party's leading cadres, must take a firm and clear-cut stand, actively plunge into this s uggle and lead it well, and resolutely carry the struggle through to the end.

SICHUAN RIBAO ON EDUCATION IN ECONOMIC SITUATION

HK070357 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Report on 7 Jan SICHUAN RIBAO commentator's article: "Make Still Greater Efforts To Further Promote Education in the Economic Situation]

[Excerpt] The article says: The propaganda and education in the economic situation now being launched in cities and towns throughout the province is vivid and profound education in the superiority of the socialist system. The current problem is how to sum up experience on the basis of the education conducted in the previous stage, and make still greater efforts to further promote this education.

Judging by areas and units that have already launched this education, those that have done relatively well have succeeded in the following respects: 1) Propaganda and education in the economic situation must have definite aims and genuinely give clear replies to questions that the masses hope to have answered. 2) The responsible comrades of the party and government departments must go down to the basic levels to personally give reports to the masses and answer their questions; this is the cardinal link in promoting this education. 3) Pay attention to scientific and ideological aspects in making calculations and contrasts.

The article says in conclusion: The aim in launching this education is to help the masses to further understand correctly the current economic situation, enhance their spontaneity to carry out party principles and policies, strengthen their socialist sense of responsibility as masters of the house, promote their enthusiasm in building the two civilizations, accomplish the province's economic targets for the year and bring about a still greater turn for the better in party work style, social mood and social order.

XINHUA NOTES XIZANG GAINS GREATER AUTONOMY

[Text] Lhasa, June 4 (XINHUA) -- The Tibet Autonomous Region has been given power over an increasing spectrum of internal affairs in the last two years, according to local authorities.

The region now assumes authority in matters of appointment of leaders, passage and amendment of laws, economic and development policies, taxation, cultural affairs, languange instruction and dispensation of college graduates, the authorities said.

The freedoms are enacted within the framework of central government policies, they said, but broad latitude is permitted within those limits.

The regional people's congress standing committee has in the past two years enacted or approved nine decrees, including modifications to China's marriage law and criminal procedural law.

They said 54.5 percent of the officials in the region are drawn from the region's own minority nationalities, while most government leaders and all people's congress standing committee heads are Tibetans.

The new draft or revised constitution makes speical administrative allowances for all autonomous regions, prefectures and counties, permitting self-generated laws, policies and decrees, and the amendment of any promulgated by the central government not in accord with autonomous area conditions.

Beginning in 1980, the authorities said, Tibet suspended taxation on agriculture and animal husbandry for five years in an effort to stimulate those industries. The Tibetan language is again being taught after a decade of suspension during the "Cultural Revolution", which ended in 1976, and all government documents are written in both Tibetan and Han, China's majority languange. The number of Tibetan publications in 1981 doubled that two years before.

YUNNAN RIBAO ON WESTERN PHILOSOPHICAL WORKS

HK190911 Kunming YUNNAN RIBAO in Chinese 7 May 82 p 4

[Article by Zhang Shangren [1728 1424 0088]: "Apply Marxism To Guide the Reading of Western Philosophical Works"]

[Text] Recently, some comrades, in particular educated youths, have become very interested in Western philosophical works, including classical and modern works. Doubtless such an interest is advantageous to deepening our understanding of Marxism and enhancing our observation and comprehension of various social problems and outlooks on life. However, some comrades have not attached importance to the study of Marxist theories; some youths even mistakenly hold that solutions for social problems and the "true meaning" of life can only be found in Western philosophy. They believe in maxims such as "life is but a tragedy," "hell is other people," and "politics are unclean." Sartre's existentialism and Freud's analysis of the mind have become popular topics of these youths.

Reading through the history of Western philosophy and modern philosophy, we can recognize that there are many different schools, each holding a different point of view and having a large volume of literature. Some schools publicly oppose Marxism, while others claim to be Marxists; however, their views are entirely different from Marxism. Quite a number of young comrades do not have a thorough understanding of Marxism and their understanding of Marxist theories is not good enough. They lack the analytical power to analyze and differentiate the various schools and trends of thought. If they blindly read Western philosophical works, not only will they be unable to find the correct answers to social problems and problems regarding the philosophy of life, but they will also be subject to the influence of negative viewpoints and ideas of despair which advocate personal struggles. As a result, they will have chaotic minds. If such ideas are used to guide their acts, there is a possibility that they will fall into the abyss of violating the law and discipline. Therefore, it is of special significance that we use Marxism to guide the reading of Western philosophical works.

Philosophy, as a kind of social ideology, is determined by the existence of society. As a matter of fact, the existence of society itself is very complex. Thus, we must not hold an oversimiplified attitude toward philosophical thinking. The birth of Western philosophy is related to its economic base and its class origin.

However, from the standpoint of theory of knowledge, it is in some areas related to the modernization of science and technology. Research in these areas can serve as a reference for the building of material and spiritual civilizations. However, Western social economy is embroiled in internal strife and there are many social problems. The people's state of mind is uncertain and empty. This is clearly manifested in Western philosophy. For example, the influential existentialism is also called "the philosophy of nihilism," and it holds that life is a process of "being nullified." It declares that "life is nihility" and that it is "a process from nihility to nihility." Obviously, we do not agree with these viewpoints. However, we must not simply discard these viewpoints. Instead, we should use Marxist theories to analyze and criticize them and point out their errors. By so doing, we can learn how to correctly handle social problems and problems regarding the philosophy of life.

All philosophical schools have their own theoretical systems and viewpoints; the system is formed of viewpoints and viewpoints are embedded in the system. Thus, we must use scientific methods to study a philosophical school of thought, that is, we must understand the specific viewpoints of a philosophical school under the premise of doing a basic appraisal of the system itself. We must use dialictical methods to carry out a specific analysis of some specific Western philosophical viewpoints. In the past, there was the tendency of criticizing and negating all Western philosophical ideas in some of our books on Western philosophy. Undoubtedly, this is incorrect. However, at present some comrades randomly quote some individual viewpoints of Western philosophers. They interpret the meaning of the words without understanding their essence and praise them indiscriminately. This is also incorrect. For example, Sartre, the representative figure of existentialism, put forth the viewpoint of "free choice." Some comrades appreciate this viewpoint without analysis. As a matter of fact, they do not know that the so-called "choice" in existentialist theories means "molding the individual"after he awakens from spiritual fears and worries. If we can use Marxism to analyze this viewpoint, we will be able to recognize that such "free choice" is impossible in all societies. It is because men must live in certain social, economic and political conditions and it is impossible for men to be "suprasocial beings." Only when we understand actual social relations can we talk about free choice. Therefore, we must use Marxism to make specific analyses of the various Western philosophical viewpoints and only by so doing can we obtain a correct understanding of these viewpoints. Obviously, it is incorrect if we randomly accept the abstract meaning of a slogan or randomly extract passages from a certain book to satisfy our own needs and interests.

Marxism is a scientific theory founded on the bases of the outstanding achievements in summing up mankind's knowledge. If we seriously study Marxism together with some Western philosophy and sociology, we will find that Marxism is beyond comparison with regard to its scientific nature, completeness and knowledge. Furthermore, experience in the past century has proven that it is a great science. If we really want to pursue the so-called "true meaning of life," the true meaning cannot be found in Western philosophy, but it can be found in Marxism. Therefore, youths who want to study philosophy must first of all devote their efforts to studying and mastering the basic theories of Marxism. Only by so doing will we be able to make a correct judgement of the various Western philosophical schools and viewpoints and to assimilate their useful intellectual nourishment.

GUIZHOU PARTY ORGANIZATION FORUM -- The Organization Department of the Guizhou Provincial CCP Committee recently held a forum on the work of grassroots party organizations in enterprises. The forum demanded that straightening out and building of grassroots party organizations in enterprises be strengthened. Grassroots party organizations should be straightened out ideologically and organizationally. In straightening out and building grassroots party organizations, it is now necessary to do well in grasping the building of leadership groups and holding party congresses, strengthen and improve party leadership over enterprises, wholeheartedly serve the people and conduct education in carrying out the line, principles and policies of the party and in opposing the corruption of capitalist ideology. It is also necessary to establish and perfect the system of party democratic life, the system of education in party lessons, the system of the collective leadership of CCP committees and the system of party congresses. BEIJING DOUBLES MUNICIPAL CONSTRUCTION OUTLAY

[Text] Beijing, June 5 (XINHUA) -- In the past two years Beijing has spend 3,100 million yuan on municipal construction, twice as much as during the entire decade of turmoil (1966-76), according to municipal sources. Efforts have been intensified to make people's life easier in line with the May 1980 proposal by the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee on the city's development. Now the guideline for all work of Beijing, the proposal urges the city government and people to build Beijing into a first-rate, modern metropolis with a thriving economy, where people can enjoy a stable, convenient life.

Construction of 150,000 new apartments has been completed, municipal sources said. The total floor space is 8.08 million square meters. Half of the new housing are in new residential areas, which are conplete with public utilities and services facilities. Two beltways have been built to ease traffic in the city proper.

More than 3,000 hutong, or small lanes, and back streets have been asphalted or paved with cement blocks. People have planted 2.47 million trees since early 1980 and laid 1.35 million square meters of lawns. The number of shops, restaurants, tailors, barber shops and other service centers has increased from 9,400 to 16,900 in the past two years.

BEIJING INVESTIGATES WORK CONCERNING INTELLECTUALS

HK091458 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 30 May 82

[Text] According to the spirit of the instruction of the central authorities, Beijing Municipality is now gradually conducting an investigation of the work concerning intellectuals from selected points to a whole area. Not long ago, the municipal CCP committee held a symposium to popularize the experiences of selected points. The preliminary results in the experiences of the selected points and a whole area clearly show that it is very necessary to investigate the work concerning intellectuals.

Over the past few years, particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of 11th CCP Central Committee, party organizations at all levels have strengthened work concerning intellectuals and achieved very great results. However, the leftist influence has long existed in work concerning intellectuals and has not been completely eliminated. In resolving difficulties in the livelihood of intellectuals and creating conditions necessary for work, many problems still exist and there is much work to be done. The experiences of the selected points have also proved that, apart from a small number of problems which should be reported to the upper levels for their guidance, the majority of problems which exist in work concerning intellectuals can be solved in the units where they have been discovered.

Beijing Normal College discovered some 20 specific problems in this investigation. After study, its CCP committee found it was able to solve 15 problems by itself. Eleven could be solved immediately. For example, the college has established a system of mobile household medical treatment for old and weak professors and associate professors; it regularly conducts physical examinations for middle-aged backbone teachers, staff members and workers; it provides transportation for professors at the third-grade level or above when they go out on business; and it is expanding kindergartens, and so on.

The experiences of units, such as the normal college, have allowed many units to eliminate the fear of being unable to solve problems which are discovered during investigation and the fear of getting into trouble. These experiences have strengthened their confidence in solving problems in their own units.

HEILONGJIANG CIRCULAR URGES ANTIFLOOD DILIGENCE

SK040938 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] The provincial government recently issued a circular to urge all localities to make a success of this year's antiflood work.

The circular states: According to a forecast by central and provincial weather and hydrological departments, precipitation from June to August this year in most areas of our province will be 10 to 30 percent above normal. In the southeast part of our province, precipitaiton will be 20 to 30 percent above normal. In the eastern part of the province, floods of varying degrees will occur. During this year's flood season, the water level of the major rivers of the province will be about average, but some rivers may cause comparatively great floods due to climatic factors. Medium and small rivers in the eastern and southeast parts of the province are more likely to cause great floods. What is even more noteworthy, serious waterlogging occurred in the Sanjiang plain in the eastern part of the province last year, and rainfall was quite abundant this spring. Any comparatively heavy rain will make waterlogging worse. In order to overcome possible floods and ensure the safety of the people's lives and property, the circular calls for efforts to fulfill the following tasks: 1) enhance vigilance and be mentally prepared against floods and waterlogging; 2) check the safety of antiflood works and accelerate repair of antiflood projects; 3) clear rivers of obstacles to ensure the flow of water; and 4) do a good job in flood forecast, communication and material storage.

The circular notes: Antiflood work is a job concerning every department and unit. During flood season, especially when floods occur, all departments and units should take the situation as a whole into consideration, work in coordination, obey unified arrangements and conscientiously fulfill antiflood and emergency rescue tasks to ensure industrial and agricultural production and the safety of the people's lives and property.

JILIN'S QIANG XIAOCHU INSPECTS LIAOYUAN

[Text] According to our sources, Comrade Ziang Xiaochu and (Zhao Xiu) recently inspected work in Liaoyuan municipality. During the inspection, they heard a report on implementation of the spirit of the provincial industrial work conference and delivered speeches.

Comrade Qiang Xiaochu said: Efforts to consolidate the party can be linked with efforts to consolidate enterprises. It is necessary to do a good job in the party's ideology, organization and work style along with enterprise consolidation.

He pointed out: Enterprise consolidation could be conducted along with other work. When comrades of Liaoyuan municipality said that they needed to increase some profit quotas in accordance with the spirit of the provincial industrial work conference and that they will strive to fulfill them although there are some difficulties, Comrade Qiang Xiaochu pointed out: We should proceed from reality in increasing quotas. We should not make them too high or too low. We should use the average fixed quotas for advanced units as a criterion to leave some margin for enterprises and enable them to overfulfill the quotas. By so doing, cadres and the masses will feel that by their efforts they can attain their goals and gain definite profits. Neither failing to leave leeway nor failing to tap potential is favored.

In their speeches, Comrade Ziang Xiaochu and (Zhao Xiu) put great emphasis on adherence to economic responsibility systems.

Comrade (Zhao Xiu) said: In implementing economic responsibility systems, it is necessary to correctly handle the relations among the interests of the state, enterprises and individuals. Responsibility, rights and profits should be assigned and distributed to every work group and person and integrated with the immediate interests of every staff member and worker. When we confront problems in implementing the responsibility systems, we should still insist on commending those who should be commended and punishing those who should be punished and resolutely fulfill the systems in accordance with stipulations and policies.

Comrade (Zhao Xiu) said: Adopting a system is easy, but adhering to it is difficult. The reason to make it difficult is that we are unable to conscientiously implement the systems we have adopted and afraid to seriously handle problems whenever they arise. The key to adhering to the systems is that leaders must take the lead in implementing the systems. If the leadership is not strong and ideological and political work fails to keep abreast, adhering to the systems will not be easy. If there is no means of examination and no guarantee of basic work such as clerical work, adhering to economic responsibility systems will not be easy.

He said: All these problems must be solved as soon as possible. When leaders can strictly implement economic responsibiity systems, workers will gain profits in the course of implementation and will heighten their consciousness of adhering to and implementing the economic responsibility systems.

Comrade (Zhao Xiu) also pointed out: To implement the spirit of the provincial industrial work conference, it is necessary to respond to the proposals made by the conference and enact them as soon as possible. Through consolidation, it is imperative to correct the guiding thought in running industry and improve economic results in a down-to-earth manner.

JILIN URGES EDUCATION OF YOUTHS, JUVENILES

[Station commentary: "Grasp Youth, Juvenile Education in Down-to-Earth Manner"]

[Text] The issue of education of youths and juveniles is arousing ever-increasing concern and attention. The importance of this work aside, the increased attention is partly due to the ongoing fierce struggle between capitalist corrosive influence and socialist anticorrosive influence. Hostile elements both at home and abroad are trying to win over our youths and juveniles one way or another and through different channels. They are trying to shake the political orientation of youths and juveniles with the ideology of bourgeois liberalization and to pollute their minds with the bourgeois lifestyle. Many weak-minded youths and juveniles have had their convictions slurred and shaken. They go in quest of things exciting and lack a moral sense. A few of them have taken the road of crime.

However, this important work which has a bearing on the future of the party and the state and the prosperity of our people as a race has failed to arouse adequate attention among some units and departments. They either excuse themselves for their inattention, blaming heavy production assignments or, when pressed hard by higher levels, go through the motions of attending to this work and drop it soon after. They do not include it high on their agenda or earnestly implment it.

To be sure, giving proper attention to production is beyond reproach. However, promoting production requires skilled persons with political consciousness. Production cannot be achieved by relying on machines and equipment alone -- without men to operate them.

The number of young workers at mining and industrial enterprises is increasing with each passing year. If we fail to promote the education of young staff members and workers, not only will we be unable to arouse their enthusiasm, but the more widespread evil trends and unhealthy practices will undoubtedly hamper production. Therefore, we must earnestly attend to the education of youths and juveniles if we are to promote production. The idea of pitting the education of youths and juveniles against production is very wrong. Aside from reducing the crime rate and eliminating crime committee by youths and juveniles, the fundamental goal of education is to make them a generation of cultured and disciplined new men who have ideals and a moral sense. This calls for all sectors of society including mining and industrial enterprises, schools, organizations, neighborhoods and families to proceed from this strategic goal and to adopt specific measures for persistently conducting education in communist ideals, in loving the motherland, the party and socialism, in the five stresses and four beauties and in abiding by laws and regulations. By conducting this education we should strengthen youths' and juveniles' abilities to resist capitalist corrosive influence and make them useful persons for promoting the four modernizations. Lenin once said: In a sense, the real task of building a communist society will be assumed by the youths.

Youths and juveniles are our hope and our future. Let all of us be concerned with the growth of youths and juveniles and fulfill our responsibilities in educating the next generation.

LIAONING SECRETARY URGES LEARNING FROM ADVANCED

SK100516 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] Yesterday at the provincial rally of outstanding workers, Comrade Shen Yue, secretary of the Liaoning provincial CCP committee, urged the people in the province to thoroughly and persistently launch the campaign to learn from and catch up with the advanced and strive to make a breakthrough in Liaoning's work.

Comrade Shen Yue pointed out: Under the correct leadership of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council and through the concerted efforts of the people across the province, our province's political and economic situations have been good. The rural areas in the province and strengthened and improved the production responsibility systems, arousing the enthusiasm of the masses of cadres and commune members. Drought was serious this spring. However, thanks to commune members' tenacious efforts, sowing tasks in most areas were fulfilled in good time and seedlings are growing very well. The province's industrial and communications front increased its January-May output value 8.3 percent over that of the corresponding 1981 period. Profits turned in by the industrial enterprises operating under the provincial budget were 6.75 percent higher than in the same period of 1981.

Financial and commercial departments have vigorously supported production and made arrangements for purchases to increase supply. Therefore, purchases and marketing are brisk, market supplies are abundant and prices are basically stable. Scientific and technological, cultural educational, public health, sports, public security, judicial and civil administrative departments have also scored new achievements. In particular, in observing decorum and courtesy month, all localities, departments and units have done much work to promote the five-stresses and four-beauties activities in a vivid and down-to-earth manner. Dirtiness, disorder and impoliteness have been gradually corrected, and the people's mental outlook has changed for the better. Waging an extensive struggle against law violations in the economic field, the province has handled a number of serious crimes, enabling the masses of cadres and people to have anticorruption education and the common social practices and public order to improve.

Comrade Shen Yue continued: The achievements in our work are a manifestation of the efforts of the people of various nationalities throughout the province in resolutely implementing the CCP Central Committee's line, principles and policies and uniting to work diligently. Model workers and advanced producers and workers on all fronts have played a great role in the four modernizations drive and have made new contributions.

On future work, Comrade Shen Yue said: Our basic task is to concentrate on socialist modernization. We should grasp both the socialist material civilzation and the socialist spiritual civilization. You representatives of model workers and advanced producers, workers and collectives should unite as one and lead the people across the province to enhance spirit and win new victories in the four modernizations with all-out efforts. Nearly half a year has passed. Our tasks for the second half of the year are arduous. We should continue implementing the guidelines of the provincial CCP committee's February enlarged plenary session and the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress, strive to advance the work in all fields and make a breakthrough in Liaoning's work. The CCP Central Committee recently noted that advanced and model workers on all fronts are glorious fighters marching in the vanguard. Their advanced ideology and exemplary deeds inspire continuous development of our socialist cause. To lead and urge more and more people to respect and learn from advanced, model workers and to extensively penetratingly and persistently launch the mass campaign to learn from and catch up with the advanced are an important aspect of the task to establish the socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

Comrades of party committees, governments and mass organizations at all levels and all departments and enterprises should conscientiously study and understand the guidelines of central directives and successfully organize the activities for learning from and catching up with the advanced. We should see that at every stage of social development there are always a number of advanced persons who are marching at the head of the times and through whom the spirit of the times is reflected. It is necessary for us to have a great number of advanced persons to act as exemplars and lead the masses if we are to accomplish the grand cause of the socialist four modernizations. Following the strengthening of the two civilizations, a great number of advanced persons will certainly emerge in all trades and professions and activities to learn from and catch up with the advanced at to contribute to the four modernizations. Leading comrades at all levels should enhance their understanding and make the best of the situation to broaden and deepen the activities and make them more fruitful. In thoroughly and persistently carrying out the campaign to learn from and catch up with the advanced and contribute to the four modernizations, cadres, staff members and workers should correctly treat the advanced persons and enthusiastically cherish and support them. We should intensify publicity of the examples of the advanced and influence and train the people, especially young people, with the advanced ideology and the communist spirit of the advanced collectives and individuals so that they will become disciplined people with ideals, knowledge and morality. This is a long-term task and important link for ideological and political work. We should fully mobilize the masses to compare themselves with the advanced to find out where they lag behind, to respect the advanced as their teachers and launch a campaign to emulate, learn from, catch up with, help and surpass each others to achieve better economic results. We should successfully train and educate the advanced persons. Party committees, governments and mass organizations at all levels should strengthen their leadership over the campaign and include it in their agenda.

Comrade Shen Yue concluded: Comrade Hu Yaobang recently called on the working class of the country to work diligently and train themselves into advanced forces who have ideals, respect the organization and discipline, are as responsible as masters and are willing to study modern science and technology and turn into dauntless forces who work for the prosperity of the state and are capable of surmounting any difficulties to promote the four modernizations.

Staff members, workers and people on all fronts, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the provincial CCP committee and government, should enhance spirit, go all out, work in unison, write with their deeds new chapters in the establishment of the two civilizations and strive to fulfill our 1982 tasks.

LIAONING RALLY URGES CRACKDOWN ON ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK080758 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Party committees of organizations subordinate to the provincial CCP committee and government convened a mobilization rally this afternoon urging the provincial level organizations to crack down on serious economic crimes. Luo Dingfeng, standing committee member and secretary general of the provincial CCP committee, presided at the rally.

The rally pronounced five economic crime cases perpetrated by provincial level organizations and suggested that these cases be dealt with. Zhang Tiejun, standing committee member of the provincial CCP committee and deputy governor, spoke. He pointed out: The grim fact is that not all of the provincial level organizations are free from corruption. It is generally believed that the provincial level organizations are "law-abiding" units where there is no profit to make and the climate is not suited to crime. However, this is not true. In the past we lacked experience and were slack in discipline and rules. This invariably left an opportunity for criminals to do evil. We must adequately assess this and not treat it lightly.

On behalf of the provincial CCP committee and government, Deputy Governor Zhang Tiejun urged party organizations of the provincial departments to regard as their central task a crackdown on economic crimes and make it high on their agenda. They should make careful arrangements for enacting this struggle in their units. Vigorous attention should be paid to ferreting out and investigating major offenses by cadres. It is necessary to investigate party members and cadres who committed illegal activities and severely punish them. We should never tolerate or protect them. As for crimes committed by groups, we should not only investigate the major criminals but also the accomplices and have them punished immediately once their crimes are established.

Zhang Tiejun stressed: Party organizations at all levels must combine this struggle with party rectification, rectification of party work style, consolidation of leading bodies and ideological education of party members and cadres. Typical cases should be used in conducting education among party members on party spirit, capabilities to resist the bourgeois ideology and enhance their consciousness to abide by discipline and laws.

NINGXIA'S LI XUEZHI AT CHILDREN'S DAY RALLY

HK100445 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 1 Jun 82 p 1

[Report: "Yinchuan Area Holds Solemn Ceremony To Induct Youngsters Into Young Pioneers and To Review Young Pioneers"]

[Excerpts] On the morning of 31 May, more than 30,000 youngsters of various nationalities took part in a ceremony to induct youngsters into the Young Pioneers and to review the young pioneers at Nanmen Square to warmly celebrate the "1 June" International Children's Day.

Li Xuezhi, Hei Baili, Li Yunhe, Ma Qingnian, Wang Jinzhang, Chen Jingbo, Xu Qian, Feng Mao and other leading comrades of the regional and municipal party committees and governments attended the celebration meeting.

Secretary of the secretariat of the CYL Central Committee, He Guangwei, was invited to attended this celebration meeting.

Regional CCP Committee First Secretary Li Xuezhi gave a speech in which he first extended his festival gretings to the youngsters and to the workers who are responsible for the work related to youngsters. He said that the youngsters are whom the future and hope of our party and state relies on and that the party committees and governments at all levels and all the sections of the society should pay attention to training and educating our youngsters. The broad ranks of workers who are responsible for the work related to youngsters should love the work of educating youngsters even more intensely and they should contribute their talents and wisdom to training the next generation of our motherland into morally, intellectually and physically well-developed competent people.

Secretary of the Secretariat of the CYL Central Committee He Guangwei extended, on behalf of the CYL Central Committee, its festival salute and greetings to the youngsters and the comrades who are engaged in the work related to youngsters in our region. He hoped that the youngsters in our region would become the young masters of our socialist motherland who cherish lofty ideals, have good morals, are well-educated and observe discipline.

Yinchuan Municipal CCP Committee Deputy Secretary Xing Shangui gave a speech, calling on the broad ranks of youngsters to learn from the five youngsters who have recently been awarded the title of "Excellent Young Pioneers" and to make up their minds to become the new generations who cherish lofty ideals, have good morals, are well-educated and observe discipline.

The party's and people's concern and expectations have further heightened the youngsters' resolution to love and build up the motherland. They have solemnly sworn to "Be prepared to strive for communism!" and "Be always prepared!"

NINGXIA RIBAO ON NECESSITY OF TRUTHFUL NEWS

[Article by De Kun [1795 0981]: "The News Must Be Completely Truthful"]

[Text] News reports must be true. This is determined by the nature of proletarian news work and is where the party spirit of a party newspaper lies. It is through the true reporting of news that the party's line, policies and principles are publicized. The masses of people believe in facts and in truth. So, only when the news is true can it play the role of educating and inspiring the people. Untruthful news is not only powerless but also makes the party newspaper divorced from the masses and brings about losses to the revolutionary cause.

The truthfulness of the news reports refers to accuracy without any falsity or mistakes in what is reported, including names of people, place names, times, figures, details of events and quotations. At the same time, the analysis and explanation of the facts should be scientific and in conformity with the true features of objective things. Statistics for various autonomous regions, counties and units in a news release should be checked by the statistical departments and various departments responsible for the work in these autonomous regions and counties before they are reported.

In order to truthfully report the news, it is first necessary to adhere to the ideological line of seeking truth from facts. That is, we must be faithful to facts and, on this basis, truthfully report the news without adding or even fabricating anything. However, this principle has been disregarded by a small number of correspondents. When they report news, untruthfulness often occurs. For example, in a report concerning the production in a hardware factory in Pingluo County, although there was a 20,000 yuan decrease in January's output value this year, the correspondent said that it increased by more than 6,000 yuan over the corresponding period of the previous year. Soon after the news was reported, the false report was exposed, and the consequences were bad.

In order to truthfully report the news, it is also necessary to do a good job in investigation and study and endeavor to correctly recognize and properly reflect the objective world. Many untruthful reports were actually results of a lack of investigation or inaccurate investigation. This usually has something to do with the way some people observe things. They often make crude and careless investigations and write on hearsay evidence. Thus, in order to prevent mistakes, we hope that after the reports are written, the correspondents will discuss them with the people involved, the leaders in the units concerned and the masses, so that the facts will be checked and the collective wisdom of the masses will be pooled.

We must realize that the source of news is facts and that news is a report of facts. The news comes only after facts. Estimation cannot be regarded as fact and plans which are still being carried out cannot be reported as having been completed. The order of facts and news must not be reversed. Otherwise it will lead to untruthfulness.

Moreover, referring to the style of writing, it is necessary to draw a clear distinction between news reports and literary and artistic works. In literary and artistic works, the realities of life can be summarized, condensed and polished. But in news reports, facts should be reported truthfully. No rational inference is allowed. However, some correspondents have confused the two methods of writing in news reports. For example, influenced by a novel carried in RENMIN WENXUE [PEOPLE'S LITERATURE], which tells a story of a factory correspondent in Yinchuan fabricated a news release about how the director in his factory tried a thousand and one ways to promote product sales and sent it to the newspaper office. After the editors read this news release, they found it very interesting and prepared to publish it. Luckily this accident of untruthfulness was prevented because the facts were checked.

We hope that all our party paper correspondents will conscientiously adhere to the principle of truthfulness in news reports and run our papers well.

NINGXIA RIBAO REPORTS IMPROVED LIVING STANDARD

[Report: "People's Standard of Living in Ningxia Has Notably Improved Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th Central Committee"]

[Text] The information provided by the Ningxia Regional Statistics Bureau shows that the living standard of the people in the region has been considerably improved as a result of a series of economic measures taken by the party and state since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee.

First, the income of peasants has been increased. In the last 3 years, various forms of the production responsibility system have been adopted in rural areas, the peasants' initiative in production mobilized and the diversified economy further developed; therefore, production and thus income have been increased. On the other hand, as the state has raised the procurement price of agricultural and sideline products, and partly exempted the taxes for rural areas, the income of peasants has been increased accordingly. According to a sample investigation conducted into the income and expenses of commune member families by the regional statistics bureau, the average real income per capita in rural areas was 139.1 yuan in 1979, 178.1 yuan in 1980, and up to 208.7 yuan in 1981, an increase of 79.9 percent over 1978. The average annual growth in these 3 years was 21.7 percent.

The income of staff and workers also increased. In the last 3 years, the state raised three times the salaries of part of staff and workers. The average salary of the staff and workers under the system of ownership by the whole people increased from 767 yuan in 1978 to 910 yuan in 1981, an increase of 18.6 percent; and the real growth was 5.9 percent with the price increase taken into account. As more opportunities for employment were opened up, 95,000 people in the whole region, who accounted for 75.4 percent of the population waiting for jobs, obtained their jobs in the last 3 years. As a result, the average number of heads every staff and worker member must support (including himself) was decreased from 2.48 in 1978 to 2.05 in 1981. Also, as a result of the increase of the staff and workers' salaries and the lightening of the family economic burden, the standard of living was prominently improved. As revealed by the sample investigation into the income and expenses of staff and workers families, every person's portion of income used for living expenses per month was 37.42 yuan in 1981, 10.7 yuan more than in 1978, or an increase of 40.1 percent over 1978. This means a real growth of 25.1 percent with the commodities price increase taken into account, and an average annual growth of 7.8 percent. As the staff and workers' income has been increased constantly, more and more families have enjoyed a higher income level. In 85 percent of the households of 120 staff and workers sampled in the investigation, the average monthly living expense per person exceeded 25 yuan; and in 44.2 percent of these households the average monthly expense per person has even exceeded 35 yuan.

Thirdly, the level of consumption of residents in urban and rural areas has also been raised. From the information obtained in the sample investigation, it can be seen that in the last 3 years, not only was the quantity of food, clothing and other commodities which the people of various nationalities in the region consumed increased, but their quality was also improved. People are now more demanding when it comes to the taste and the nutrition of food. With regard to clothing, people now prefer pure wool fabric to chemical fiber. As for daily necessities, people have a greater demand for famous brand products and are more interested in those commodities with new designs and multiple uses. In 1981, the total retail value of social commodities in the whole region (including the retail value of goods which peasants sold to urban residents) increased by 33.5 percent over 1978; and the real increase was 22.2 percent with the commodities price increase taken into account.

Moreover, housing conditions also have been improved. In the last 3 years, the funds which the region invested in housing construction amounted to 168.19 yuan (the housing portion of the technical measure expenses not included), and the newly completed residential area amounted to 1.222 million square meters. Apart from this, the residential area of privately built houses in Yinchuan, Shizuishan and 11 other municipalities amounted to 60,000 square meters. The average living space per person for staff and worker families in urban areas was increased from 4.5 square meters in 1978 to 5.6 square meters in 1981. On the other hand, housing conditions for rural commune members were also greatly improved. In the last 3 years, the residential area of houses privately built by commune members amounted to 1.9 million square meters. According to statistics obtained in the sample investigation conducted among commune member households, the average living space per person in rural areas now has been increased to 9.7 square meters.

Finally, the savings deposits of urban and rural residents has been increased. By the end of 1981, the savings balance of urban and rural residents amounted to 228.15 million yuan, a 154 percent growth over 1978; the cash in hand amounted to 98.3 million yuan, an increase of 97.5 percent over 1978.

The information provided by the regional statistics bureau also pointed out that the state had made great efforts to increase the people's economic income, to raise their material living standards and to improve their cultural life in the last 3 years, although it faced tremendous financial difficulties. However, it should also be noted that there remain a lot of issues which have existed for many years and it is not possible to solve them within a short period. At present, we are still facing many difficulties in many fields concerning the people's livelihood. Some peasants, especially those who are living in the mountainous areas in the southern part of the region, and some staff and worker members who are living on low salaries and receive no bonus are still living at a relatively poor level. As the prices of some commodities have gone up, some people's standard of living has comparatively declined. Some city dwellers and staff and workers are still living in relatively poor housing conditions. And the development of public utilities, scientific research, education and public health still cannot keep race with the improvement of the people's standard of living. However, we are certain that our life will be better off day by day if our broad masses of the people give full play to their sense of being the masters of their own affairs and work with a will to make the country strong.

QINGHAI CONGRESS STANDING COMMITTEE MEETS

SK030959 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Excerpts] The 5th provincial people's congress standing committee held its 18th meeting in Xining on 25-31 May. The meeting examined and approved in principle the province's tentative regulations on birth control to be submitted to the provincial people's government for promulgation and implementation and, according to legal provisions, adopted a decision on extending the time limit for handing some criminal cases. In line with Governor Zhang Guosheng's suggestion, the meeting appointed (Zuo-nan-chai-lang) to be director of the provincial personnel affairs bureau. It also adopted reports on the appointment and removal of other personnel.

The meeting further studied and discussed the draft of the revised constitution and ways to organize all the people to discuss it.

Zha-xi-wang-xu, chairman of the provincial people's congress standing committee, delivered a speech at the conclusion of the meeting. Also attending the meeting were vice chairmen of the provincial people's congress standing committee, provincial deputy governors, the president of the provincial higher people's court, the chief procurator of the provincial people's procuratorate and responsible comrades of the Xining municipal and various autonomous prefectural and county people's congress standing committees.

XINJIANG LEADER ON PRODUCTION CORPS REVIVAL

[Article by Ismail Amat, secretary of Xinjiang Regional CCP Committee and chairman of regional people's government: "A Major Affair in the Region's Political Life"]

[Excerpts] The decision of the CCP Central Committee, State Council and Central Military Commission to revive the Xinjiang production and construction corps is a major strategic measure of the Central Committee for strengthening economic construction in the border region and consolidating the motherland's border defense.

It is a major affair in the region's political life.

Reviving the production and construction corps is not only beneficial for promoting the prosperous development of the various construction undertakings of the corps, but is also extremely significant for developing the economic and cultural construction of the people of all nationalities in Xinjiang, guarding against hegemonist aggression and defending the motherland's border. We must do still better in promoting Xinjiang's economic construction, in running the work of production and construction corps, in carrying out border defense construction, and in promoting the unity of nationalities, as practical deeds to repay the profound concern of the CCP Central Committee, State Council and Central Military Commission for the people of all nationalities in the region.

The Xinjiang production and construction corps is a heroic corps with glorious traditions. Following its official establishment in 1954, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee and the Central Military Commission, and with the vigorous support of the people of all nationalities in the region, the corps has carried forward the glorious tradition of being a production, combat and work unit, inherited the revolutionary spirit of Nanniwan, opened up wasteland and guarded the border, struggled hard amid difficulties, and created a large number of modern farms and factories. It has developed the economy, strengthened the border defenses, done many good things for the people of all nationalities in Xinjiang, and made tremendous contributions in the great struggle to build and defend the border region.

The construction work of the Xinjiang production and construction corps comprises an important part of work in the autonomous region. The development of the corps is directly related to the development of the four modernizations drive in Xinjiang and the consolidation of the motherland's border defense. The experiences of the past 30 years and more prove that there are extremely close ties between the corps and the various local departments. The factories and mines of the corps and the local communes, factories and mines have always supported and learned from each other, closely cooperated, and developed together. We should always carry on this fine tradition. Following the revival of the corps, the party committees and government departments at all levels in Xinjiang must further care for and support the building of the corps and support it in its work.

The Central Committee and leading central comrades have repeatedly stressed that we must do a good job in promoting unity in Xinjiang, especially in strengthening the unity of nationalities. This is the premise and the key for making a success of all our work. It is the basic guarantee for uniting against hegemonism, consolidating the unity of the motherland, promoting the common prosperity of all nationalities and victoriously carrying out the four modernizations drive. At present an excellent situation of stability and unity has appeared throughout Xinjiang. The cadres and masses of all nationalities enjoy ease of mind. Unit has been strengthened, social order has turned for the better, and the political and economic situation is getting better and better. The people of all nationalities are filled with confidence and hope in doing a good job in work in Xinjiang. This situation has been seldom seen for many years.

Under the care of the CCP Central Committee and the leadership of the regional CCP committee, we must further strengthen the unity of cadres and masses of all nationalities, strengthen army-government and army-people unity, strengthen the unity of the production and construction corps with the local authorities and people and fight shoulder-to-shoulder in common efforts to make great progress in the region's economic construction and all work and to make new and still greater contributions to truly building Xinjiang into a powerful force of antihegemonist unity and border defense.

SHAANXI TAKES MEASURES TO IMPROVE POOR BRIGADES

HK070803 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 6 Jun 82

[Summary] In accordance with the spirit of the report made by Ma Wenrui and transmitted by the provincial CCP committee on the change of Shengli brigade in Changan County from a poor brigade to a healthy one, all places in Shaanxi Province are taking various measures to change long-term poor and backward brigades.

"The problem in Shengli brigade occurred in Changan County. The Xian Municipal CCP Committee and the CCP committees of all counties and districts have paid great attention to this. The Xian Municipal CCP Committee has made specific arrangements for implementing the spirit of the document of the provincial CCP committee. Apart from strengthening specific guidance to Shengli brigade, Changan County investigated the real situation of the 254 production teams throughout the county whose per capita income, which was distributed by the collective, was under 40 yuan in 1981. The county demanded that the districts and communes select the key points and send cadres to stay in these points to help them. Meanwhile, the county asked model workers and advanced figures who had attended the national, provincial, municipal and county conferences to the county seat to take part in meetings to listen to the criticisms and suggestions of these comrades.

"Weinan Prefecture conducted a preliminary investigation of the real situation of the 1,123 production teams whose per capita cash income was 20 yuan and whose grain ration was under 200 jin in 1981. The prefecture is urging all counties to strengthen specific leadership over and offer help to these production teams. After CCP committees at all levels in Hanzhong Prefecture studied and discussed the document transmitted by the provincial CCP committee, they especially looked into the method to change the poor outlook. In conjuction with the implementation of the spirit of the relevant documents of the central authorities and the provincial CCP committee, Yulin Prefecture first organized the study and discussion of the investigation report made by Comrade Ma Wenrui and transmitted by the provincial CCP committee on the change of Shengli brigade in Changan County from a poor into a wealthy brigade. The prefecture then sent responsible comrades to stay in the key brigades to conduct investigation and to help the old advanced brigades which lagged behind to strengthen the building of their leadership groups and to implement all policies of the party. Remarkable results have now been achieved.

GANSU POWER PRODUCTION -- In the first 5 months of 1982, power departments throughout Gansu Province strived to improve economic results and set a record for electricity production. The province generated 5.15 billion kWh of electricity, up 12.4 percent over the corresponding 1981 period. [Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1125 GMT 6 Jun 82 SK]

SHAANXI WORKERS' CONGRESSES -- At present, some 1,800 industry, communications and capital construction enterprises in Shaanxi Province have set up workers' congresses. This number accounts for 51 percent of all industry, communications and capital construction enterprises throughout the province. In these enterprises which have set up workers' congresses, staff and workers have exercised their democratic rights as the masters of their own affairs and have managed the enterprises. Since the CCP Central Committee and the State Council promulgated the provisional regulations on workers' congresses of state-run industrial enterprises in July last year, the province has popularized and perfected the system of workers' congresses. AFP: PREMIER SUN REJECTS PRC REUNIFICATION BID

BK101151 Hong Kong AFP in English 1131 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] Taipei, 10 June (AFP) -- Nationalist Chinese Premier Sun Yun-hsun launched another fierce attack on Beijing's recent proposal for a peaceful reunification of Taiwan with mainland China.

Addressing some 120 Chinese and American scholars attending a conference on China here, Premier Sun described Beijing's nine-point reunification proposal as "a gimmick to deceive the people of the world," and to create a "phony image of peace."

Noting tha eijing had laid down two preconditions: Acceptance of Chinese Communist sovereignty over Taiwan, and an invasion by force if peace talks fail, he said the Chinese communists were really calling for the surrender of Taiwan. He stressed that there was no "Taiwan issue". The only issue, he added, is whether there is to be "a strong and hostile Communist China or a peace-loving non-communist China."

He called on the world to "recognize the Chinese Communist regime's conspiracy of attempting to disarm free China (Taiwan) and communize its people thorugh the employment of diplomatic pressure." Taiwan, the premier said, is proposing to unify China on the basis of Dr Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people: democracy, nationalism and the people's livelihood.

He said these principles were intended to establish "a country of the people, by the people and for the people". The three principles have already succeeded in Taiwan, Premier Sun said, and forced the Chinese Communists to admit that mainland China cannot catch up with Taiwan economically.

Mr. Sun said the "Chinese Communists regime has been compelled to bow to reality and make an about-face after a series of setbacks".

He called on Beijing to give up its "four principles" -- socialist road, leadership of the Communist Party, dictatorship of the proletariat and ideological fealty to Marxism-Leniniam-Mao Tse-tung.

A reunification, he said, "should be based on the free will of the Chinese people as a whole," he added that if this will was respected, the communists would scrap their four principles and take further steps to change their way of life. "If the political, economic, social and cultural gaps between the Chinese mainland and free China continue to narrow," Premier Sun said, "the conditions for peaceful reunification can gradually mature." "The obstacles to reunification will be reduced naturally with the passage of time," he added.

Among the U.S. scholars attending the conference were Kenneth Rush of the Atlantic Council; Leonard Unger of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, who was the last U.S. ambassador to Taiwan; and Robert Scalapino of the University of California at Berkeley.

TEXT OF WEI YUMING SPEECH TO INVESTMENT MEETING

["Text" of speech by Wei Yuming, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade, delivered on 7 June 1982 at the opening ceremony of the China investment promotion meeting: "On China's Policy for Absorbing Direct Investment From Foreign Countries"]

[Text] Honorable Dr Abd-El Rahman Khane, executive director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization [UNIDO]; Honorable Comrade Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade; gentlemen, friends and comrades:

Just now, Comrade Chen Muhua, state councillor, Dr Khane, executive director of UNIDO, and Mr Nessium Shallon, resident coordinator for UN operational activities in China, have made inspiring speeches. Now, please allow me to take this opportunity to make an introduction and some explanations on our government's policy for absorbing direct foreign investment. At present, there are roughly three forms of utilizing foreign investment in China: first, the absorption of direct investment from foreign countries, including joint ventures and cooperation enterprises and conducting joint exploration and development and compensation trade; second, endeavoring to obtain medium- and long-term loans at low or medium interest rates from various exploration and development foundations and from foreign governments and international financial organizations; and third, ordinary commercial loans. For the present and in the near future, absorbing direct investment should be the most important form.

Since our government began pursuing an open-door policy in 1979, China has made gratifying progress in absorbing direct investment from foreign countries and from Hong Kong and Macao in joint ventures, cooperation enterprises (or projects), and in conducting joint exploration and development and compensation trade. By the end of 1981, 40 joint ventures had been approved, with a total investment of over $189 million, of which investment of foreign partners accounted for about $87.5 million. Over 390 contracts of cooperation projects had been approved, of which investment of foreign cooperators accounted for $1.8 billion. In the exploration and development of petroleum, in addition to signing 9 agreements with 48 petroleum companies of 13 countries, including the United States, Japan, Britain, France and Italy, on carrying out geophysical prospecting in the Bohai and the south Huang Hai and completing a general geological survey there, 4 contracts for prospecting, exploration and development of petroleum in the Bohai and some areas in the Beibu had been signed respectively with the Japanese petroleum consortium and two French petroleum companies. The total investment of these contracts amounted to $839 million, of which foreign investment accounted for $498 million. A total of 590 contracts of small and medium compensation trade had been approved, of which $460 million worth of machinery was to be provided by foreign investors.

In the past 3 years, we have also made much progress in legislative work for absorbing direct investment from foreign countries. Following the promulgation and implementation of the "The Law of the PRC on Joint Ventures Using Chinese and Foreign Investment," our government and departments and areas concerned have promulgated in succession other relevant regulations. They have enhanced the absorption of direct investment from froeign countries and the development of economic and technological cooperation with foreign countries. To us, the absorption of direct investment from foreign countries is still something new. In order to carry out the work well, besides establishing and perfecting various relevant regulations, a series of corresponding policies are also needed. Here, I would like to discuss several questions:

1. The absorption of direct investment from foreign countries must be coordinated with the readjustment of China's national economy, its modernization program and the improvement of the people's life.

To do a good job in readjusting the national economy, to speed up the modernization program and to improve the people's life are the goal and departure point of all economic activities in our country at present. The absorption of direct investment from foreign countries must also serve this goal. Therefore, in establishing joint ventures and cooperation enterprises and conducting joint exploration and development and compensation trade, China puts emphasis on: 1) energy; 2) textile and light industries, and food, pharmaceutical, telecommunications and electronic industires; 3) building materials, machine building, iron and steel and chemical industries; 4) agriculture, animal husbandry and breeding; and 5) tourism. The absorption of direct investment from foreign countries in the past 3 years has been in conformity with the above-mentioned emphasis. For instance, among the 40 joint ventures approved, there are 13 light industrial projects, 2 woolen textile industrial projects, 9 machinery and electronic industrial projects, 3 foodstuff industrial projects, 1 pharamaceutical industrial project, 1 agricultural project, 2 breeding projects, 8 tourist projects and 1 rental project.

In absorbing direct investment from foreign countries, besides meeting the needs emphasized above, close attention must be paid to economic returns. To be specific, the following requirements should be met:

1) The investments must be conducive to the adoption ofadvanced technology and scientific management and to increasing the varieties of products, improving quality and increasing quantity and saving energy and raw materials. 2) They should be able to bring about rapid and profitable returns and help to carry out as much technological transformation of existing enterprises as possible. 3) They should be able to help expand export of products and increase foreign exchange earnings. 4) They should be able to help train technical and management personnel. In the past 3 years, we have basically met the above requirements in absorbing direct investment from foreign countries. Take the joint ventures, for example. Most of the 27 enterprises which have been established are being operated very well and have achieved considerably great economic returns. For example, the Beijing Aircraft Food Supply Company Ltd is a joint venture operated by the Beijing bureau of our country's Civil Aviation General Administration in conjunction with the China Aircraft Food Company of Hong Kong, with a total investment of 5.88 million yuan, of which the Chinese side holds 51 shares and the Hong Kong side 49 shares. The term of this joint venture is 8 years. Since being set up, this company has adopted new catering techniques and improved its business management. It provides several dozen varieties of food of fine quality. It now caters food for 13 foreign airlines, as compared with only 2 before it was established as a joint venture. Every day, it provides food for 2,100 persons as against 600 before it was established as a joint venture. It earned a net profit of 550,000 yuan in 8 months in its first fiscal year of 1980. In the second fiscal year, that is, 1981, its profits increased by 145 percent over 1980, far exceeding the estimate by its broad of directors. Another exmaple is the Xihu Rattanware Company Ltd, which is jointly operated by the Furniture and Sundry Goods Company under the Zhejiang Provincial Second Bureau of Light Industry in conjuction with Xin Yu Hang [2450 5669 5887] of Hong Kong. Total investment of the first phase is HK $2 million (or $450,000), of which the Chinese side holds 55 shares and the Hong Kong side 45 shares. The term of joint venture is 10 years. The company achieved excellent economic returns in the first year, exporting 177,000 pieces of furniture and other goods made of rattan, bamboo, steel and wood, worth 1.4 million yuan. It has signed 67 contracts with foreign countries and the volume of business of done amounted to HK $3.2 milion (the contracts have been fulfilled by 100 percent). The goods were marketed in Hong Kong, Japan, the United States, Australia and other regions. The total sales in that year amounted to HK $2.14 million. The profit rate of its investment in the first year was 16.26 percent after deducting the costs, expenses and the funds for production, welfare and bonuses. After this company was established, more varieties of goods were produced in greater quantities and with better quality, thereby promoting the development of local trade dealing with rattan and bamboo furniture and goods, increasing exports, earning more foreign exchange and creating more jobs. Here, I want to mention the question of technical innovation of old enterprises. Our country now has about 400,000 enterprises of varying sizes. A considerably large number of them need technical innovation by stages where necessary and possible, so as to economize on energy and raw and semi-finished materials, lower production costs and increase efficiency. This is an arduous task. Foreign investment should be absorbed directly in light of this arduous task. The old enterprises should undergo technical innovation to the greatest extent possible.

This is needed in our country's economic readjustments and four moderanizations and will produce fast results and yield great profits with a sam'l investment. This also is greatly advantageous to foreign investors. Of the 40 joint ventures which have been approved and established in our country, 23, accounting for 57 percent, have been formed on the basis of some former enterprises. The Beijing Aircraft Food Supply Company Ltd and the Xihu Rattanware Company Ltd mentioned above have been built or expanded on the basis of former enterprises. It is hoped that we will take another big step forward in absorbing foriegn capital to innovate our old enterprises.

2. In absorbing direct foreign investment, it is imperative to implement the principle of equality and mutual benefits and to ensure the just rights and legal profits of both the Chinese side and the foreign investors.

In handling and developing its economic and trade relationships with foreign countries, our country has always upheld the principle of equality and mutual benefits. In absorbing direct foreign investment, it also has constantly adhered to this principle. It has acted in this manner in the past 3 years. This is shown chiefly in the following aspects: 1) The agreements, contracts and regulations signed with some foreign investors have been reached after full consultation on the basis of equality. No article has been laid down which harms the rights and interests of our side or that of the foreign investors. The rights and interests of both sides have been taken into consideration so that the foreign investors have good prospects of gain. 2) After the contracts and regulations have been signed, we ask the other side to fulfill the contracts and we also undertake to fulfill the contracts. 3) A joint venture or cooperation enterprise is to be managed jointly by the parties concerned and is put under the leadership of its board of directors. Its business management is wholly supervised by the board of directors and a managerial organ under the board of directors. All major problems are to be discussed and developed by the board of directors formed jointly bt both sides. 4) The just rights and legal profits of the joint venture are protected by the relevant laws of the Chinese Government. All parties joining in the venture are equal before Chinese law, and on one is discriminated against. In the past 3 years, we have seriously implemented the principle of equality and mutual benefits and the foreign partners have showed their sincerity of cooperation. Therefore, both sides of the joint ventures and cooperation enterprises have cooperated very well. Particularly praiseworthy are the China Oriental Rental Company Ltd, which we run jointly with Japan's Oriental Rental Company Inc; the Shijingshan tourist center, which we run jointly with the Macao Tourist Development Company Ltd; the Beijing Aircraft Food Supply Company Ltd, as mentioned above; and several other joint ventures and cooperation enterprises. The parties joining in these joint ventures and cooperation enterprises exchange information, show mutual understanding, discuss problems together and work concertedly. This is a reason why these joint ventures and cooperation enterprises have been run with considerably good results.

In organizing joint ventures and cooperation enterprises, some foreign friends wonder if our government will confiscate or requisition the investment or properties of the foreign partners. Such concern is unnecessary. It is clearly provided in "The Law of the PRC on Joint Ventures Using Chinese and Foreign Investment" that "according to the law, the Chinese Government protects foreign investors' assets, due profits and other legitimate rights and interests which are stipulated in agreements, contracts and regulations approved by the Chinese Government concerning joint ventures." This article will also be put into our country's fundamental law -- the constitution. As stipulated in Article 12 of "the draft of the revised constitution of the People's Republic of China" published on 28 April this year, "the People's Republic of China permits foreign enterprises, other foreign economic organizations or foreign individuals to invest in China or to undertake various forms of economic cooperation with Chinese enterprises or other Chinese economic organizations' all such investments or joint undertakings in China must accord with provisions of the laws of the People's Republic of China. All foreign enterprises and other foreign economic organizations in China, as well as joint ventures with Chinese and foreign investment located in China, must abide by the laws of the People's Republic of China. Their legal rights and interests are protected by the laws of the People's Republic of China."

In the last 30-odd years, China has always kept its promise in handling foreign relations, being true in word and resolute in deed. Therefore, I can assure all of you that we will never confiscate foreign investors' capital provided that these investors do not violate the laws of the Chinese Government, and that the ventures they undertake do not harm the public interests and public order of China. Even if the Chinese Government is forced to requisition foreign invested assets in light of a large-scale war, natural disasters or events beyond its control, it would compensate foreign investors for the requisition according to the legal procedure and the principle of fairness and reasonableness.

Some foreign friends are afraid that some of their rights and interests such as the industrial property right (patent, trade mark) will not be protected, as our country's relevant regulations are not yet complete. In our opinion, this would not be an obstacle to the development of the economic technological cooperation between us. Although relevant regulations such as the patent law and so on have not yet been promulgated in our country, undoubtedly we can make corresponding stipulations to govern the above-mentioned problems in the form of contract through fair negotiation. Any contract signed by both Chinese and foreign parties and approved by the Ministry of Foreign Trade or organs concerned authorized by the ministry will have legal status and will be binding on both parties. Some foreign friends also ask us: If the approved contracts contradict the regulations newly promulgated by the Chinese Government, how will this be resolved? We can tell them that according to conventional international practice, newly promulgated regulations will override previously approved contracts; however, for those disputable parts, the stipulations concerned provided in the original contracts will still be in effect only if they are reconfirmed through consultation between both parties. For example, the contract of the China Xunda [6598 6671] Escalator Company Ltd provides that the income tax rate is 31.5 percent, while "The Income Tax Law Concerning the Joint Ventures With Chinese and Foreign Investment" promulgated later provides that the tax rate, including local additional tax, is 33 percent. However, the 31.5 percent tax rate remains unchanged for this company. At present, our departments concerned are stepping up the legislation concerning the foreign direct investment in the country. "The implementation regulations of the law on joint ventures using Chinese and foreign investment" will be promulgated. At the same time, those relevant laws such as the patent law, the company law and so on are being worked out. Therefore, in the near future, those relevant laws of our country will surely be more complete. Besides, in order to encourage and protect foreign investment, we have already signed investment protection agreements with the U.S. and Swedish Governments, and are negotiating with the Japanese, West German, Canadian, French and other governments over the agreement concerning promoting and protecting investment. Our foreign friends can rest assured on this aspect.

3. It must be ensured that joint venture and cooperation enterprises using Chinese and foreign investment enjoy full decisionmaking power.

The joint venture and cooperation enterprises using Chinese and foreign investment are a special form of economic organization in our country. As a form different from the state-run and collective enterprises, it should be allowed to adopt more flexible measures in management according to its own characteristics and needs. Therefore, it must be ensured that the joint venture enterprise enjoys full decisionmaking power in handling affairs concerning personnel, finance, material allocation, supply, production and marketing. To put it more concretely, the joint venture and cooperation enterprise using Chinese and foreign investment enjoys decisionmaking power in the following aspects, under the condition that the enterprise subjects itself to the guidance of the state plan and abides by the law, regulations and stipulations concerned laid down by the Chinese Government:

1) To make decisions on its development program, and plans concerning production, management and labor wages. (All these programs and plans should be reported to administrative departments and local labor departments for the record.)

2) To buy the necessary raw materials, fuel and equipment including components, spare parts and accessories on domestic and international markets, and sell products on these markets according to the provisions of the contracts signed.

3) To sign economic contracts with domestic and foreign companies and enterprises, and realize its own plans by implementing economic contracts.

4) To raise renminbi and foreign exchange from domestic and overseas financial institutions for production and management. They can open renminbi or foreign exchange accounts with the Bank of China or with other banks, with the approval of the Bank of China, for free deposit and withdrawal of funds raised and used by themselves.

5) To establish financial and other management systems for the enterprises and decide on the distribution of profits and the budget and final account of the revenue and expenditure of the enterprises.

6) To hire or dismiss employees of the enterprises, adopt wage, reward and allowance systems which the enterprises deem suitable and give awards or punishment to the employees.

7) To adopt, in accordance with the stipulations in contracts and regulations, necessary measures to improve and reform production technology, increase the variety of colors and designs, raise output and improve quality of the products. Funds accumulated by the enterprises can be used to purchase more fixed assets and expand the scope of production and management.

In this connection, I would like to say something about the relations between the decisionmaking power of the joint venture enterprises and the state plan. As everyone knows, our country is a socialist country in which planned economy plays the major role while market regulation plays the supplementary role. All important economic activities are carried out under plan. Therefore, being a part of the unified economic body in our country, the major plans for capital construction, supply, production and marketing must also be brought into line with the state plan through relevant competent departments after they are discussed by the board of directors, and be carried out under the guidance of the state plan. Otherwise, the delivery of the goods and materials they are in need of and the sales of their products in the domestic market may be delayed and their normal production and management disturbed. So, bringing into line with the state plan does not contradict the guarantee of the decision-making power of the joint ventures. On the contrary, it can help the latter better exercise this power.

4. It is necessary to try our best to create good conditions and provide facilities for foreign investors. There are many problems in this respect. Since time is limited, I would like to say only a few words here about some problems which interest foreign investors most.

1) The problem of market. No need for reticence; we hope that most products of the joint ventures will be sold abroad so that we can earn more foreign exchange. But we also allow some of the products to be sold in the domestic market. The ratio between products for the domestic market and those for export can be decided by various sides in a joint venture enterprise through discussion in light of their concrete conditions. The export rate of the products which are in short supply in the domestic market may be lower, but that of products which are not urgently needed or are in excessive supply in the domestic market should be higher. All or most of the products specially produced for the needs of the foreign market should be exported. At present, the highest export rate for the products produced by the joint venture enterprises, which have been established with the approval of our country, is 80 to 100 percent and the lowest is about 20 percent. It is important that in deciding on the export rate of products, attention be paid to ensuring that the enterprises have enough foreign exchange to pay the foreign investors their share of profits, to pay wages to foreign employees and to purchase necessary materials on the international market. In other words, the balance of foreign exchange in the enterprises must be maintained.

2) The problem of purchase and sale prices. Generally speaking, joint ventures can purchase goods and materials in the domestic market at the current domestic prices and pay with renminbi. However, as there is a great discrepancy between the domestic allocation prices and the prices in the international market for some precious metals (gold, silver and platinum), which can be used as raw materials in production, and some nonferrous metals, such as aluminum, lead, zinc and tin, as well as petroleum, coal and timber, the prices in the international market must be referenced in fixing the prices by both the purchaser and seller.

Both renminbi and foreign exchange can be paid through negotiation. The joint ventures which need large quantities of such materials in production and the products of which are mostly for the domestic market may be given special consideration. With the approval of relevant departments, such materials for the production of goods sold inside the country can also be purchased at domestic prices. Water, electricity and heat for these enterprises and oil for their transport vehicles are supplied at the domestic prices. The prices of the export or import goods managed by the foreign trade departments can be decided by the purchaser and seller with reference to the prices in the international market. Generally speaking, the products of these enterprises for the domestic market must be sold at the current domestic prices and be paid in renminbi. At the same time, the principle of fixing the price according to quality must be implemented. However, in accordance with supply and demand, upon approval by the two sides through discussion or following relevant domestic regulations, the prices of some products can also be fixed with reference to the international prices. But this must also be examined and approved by the responsible departments of the enterprises and the price control departments.

3) The problem of taxation. Generally speaking, only two taxes are levied on joint venture enterprises: the unified industrial and commercial tax and income tax of the enterprise. The former is calculated according to the sales volume of products and is included in production costs. The latter is levied according to profits. The tax rate in our country is not only lower than in the developed countries, but also lower than in some developing countries. It is also a preferential rate compared with that for the domestic state and collective enterprises. In addition to the unified industrial and commercial tax, the state enterprises must turn over most of their profits to the state, with only a small portion for themselves. For collective enterprises and some state enterprises which are being reformed, in addition to the unified industrial and commercial tax, they must turn over 50 percent of their profits as payment of the income tax of the enterprises. Besides, the joint venture enterprises are also granted the following preferential treatment in the levying of taxes:

First, equipment and other materials which foreign participants in joint ventures need to import for investment purposes according to provisions of contracts or buy from abroad with cash of their registered capital for the running of enterprises can be, according to our relevant regulations, applied for exemption from import duties and unified taxation for industrial and commercial undertakings. However, if this equipment or material is later sold in the domestic market, it is necessary to make up for the amount exempted from customs duties and the unified taxation for industrial and commercial undertakings.

Second, all raw materials, subsidiaries, spare parts or packing materials imported for the manufacturing of exported goods are exempted from import duties and the unified taxation for industrial and commercial undertakings. However, tax shall be levied on the byproducts turned out in production and some exported goods which are produced to be sold in the domestic market for certain reasons. Some exported merchandise produced by joint ventures which earns relatively less foreign exchange can be applied, from the Ministry of Finance, for exemption from the unified taxation for industrial and commercial undertakings according to the relevant regulations of the Chinese Government. In addition, in order to avoid dual taxation, we are willing, through consultations, to conclude an agreement to avoid dual taxation with some countries which have recurring economic exchanges with China. At present, such consultations are underway with some countries.

4) Regarding laborers' wages. Some foreign participants in joint ventures have asked why China pays lower wages to its staff and workers than what is actually paid by the joint ventures, and want to know where the balance is. Now, I would like to make some comments on this. The wages (or labor fee) of the Chinese staff and workers employed by joint ventures include two aspects.

One is the actual pay to the staff and workers. The other consists of their labor insurance, public health services and various state subsidies, including rent for housing, traffic expenses, allowances for heating facilities, and family reunion, and state subsidies for balancing market prices of grain, edible oils and nonstaple foods, as well as expenses for social welfare and culture. This is equivalent to one-third of their actual pay. According to statistics, in the latter portion of the expenses, labor insurance accounts for 11 percent; public health services 6 percent; and various state subsidies for the staff and workers, 83 percent. In these subsidies, rent for housing makes up 65 percent of the whole, state subsidies for balancing market prices of grain, edible oils and non-staple food constitute 16 percent, and the remaining 19 percent for other allowances. These expenses are paid by the state to the staff and workers in various forms. So it is quite reasonable for the Chinese participants in joint ventures to hand over the portion of expenses to the state. The total sum of wages of the Chinese staff and workers in joint ventures, which includes the aforementioned aspects, is still lower than that in foreign countries. I am sure that our foreign friends will fully understand this.

5. Regarding charges for renting land for joint ventures sites. There is no unified national standard for charges for land used by joint ventures. This will be decided by the provincial, municipal and autonomous regional people's governments where the joint ventures are located. The charges can be fixed according to uses, geographical surroundings and conditions, expenses for acquisition of land, and according to the actual needs of joint ventures. In the remote areas where industry is lagging behind, or in those trades in which investment profits are low, the charges for land to be used by the investors can be accordingly reduced. In uncultivated wasteland, if the land is used for agriculture and husbandry, these charges can be considerably reduced. If some old factory sites are used for running joint ventures, the charges can be fixed according to the location of the sites, the scope of development and the conditions of public facilities. Some old factories are in fact too large, with parts not being used. If so, a discount can be given on land rental charges for the joint ventures. However, we must do everything possible to make things fair and reasonable. The land to be used for joint ventures can be used as an investment by the Chinese participants, or it can be rented.

Gentlemen, friends and comrades, the present investment promotion meeting is the largest meeting ever held in China for absorbing foreign funds since the introduction of the open-door policy. I am certain that this meeting will not only help to deepen understanding between the participants and reach agreements on some concrete items, but also will accelerate further development of China's economic and technical cooperation with relevant countries and regions in the world. The items intended for cooperation which are to be put forward at this meeting can be carried out in various flexible ways, such as through joint ventures, cooperation enterprises, compensation trade, or the introduction of technology. If preliminary agreements can be reached on some items during the meeting, we can sign some documents, such as agreements of intent and minutes of talks for further discussion. If we cannot reach preliminary agreement on a certain item for the time being, we can continue our discussions after the meeting. In conclusion, the scope for our future cooperation is wide and the prospect is bright. I hope all participants at the meeting, foreign and Chinese, will, with the good will of sincere cooperation, exchange views, deepen understanding, fully consult with each other, and closely cooperate and exert common efforts for the success of this meeting and a further step forward in our economic and technical cooperation.

I wish success to the meeting! Thank you all!

BONN NATO SUMMIT ENDS; DECLARATION ISSUED

OW110742 Beijing XINHUA in English 0723 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Text] Bonn, June 10 (XINHUA) -- Leaders of the 16 NATO countries concluded their one-day meeting here this afternoon, declaring that they will continue to build a "strong defense" while seeking "constructive dialogue" with the Soviet Union. This was later described by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig as a "framework for the whole decade of 1980's" in dealing with East-West relations.

The summit meeting, the first since 1978, was characterized by a compromise between the U.S. and its West European allies on a common strategy toward the Soviet Union.

A declaration and two associate documents were issued at the end of the meeting, containing the "principles and purposes" of the participating countries in carrying out their "to arm but ready to talk" policies. The declaration condemned the Soviet Union for being "willing to threaten or use force beyond its own frontiers". It said: "International stability and world peace require greater restraint and responsibility on the part of the Soviet Union."

The declaration presented a six-point "program for peace in freedom". The first point expresses the hope that "a more constructive East-West relationship through dialogue, negotiation and mutually advantageous co-operation" could be established. The second point of the program calls for security for NATO "by means of conventional and nuclear forces adequate to deter aggression and intimidation".

The fact that the program mentioned "negotiation" and "dialogue" ahead of "security" was interpreted here as a U.S. "concession" intended to allay the West Europeans' apprehension of U.S. foreign policy. West German Chancellor Schmidt indicated he was pleased with the fact that it was acknowledged by the whole alliance that the effort for disarmament and arms control is part of a positive security policy. Talking to the press after the meeting, Schmidt stressed that "the alliance has been strengthened as a result of the summit meeting's identification of views on security policy, including the policy of negotiations on disarmament and arms control". However, few would take this "concession" as a substantial one since the declaration concluded by warning the Soviets that if they do not abide by "internationally accepted standards of behavior", "there can be no prospect of stable international relations." And the associated document "on integrated NATO defence" emphatically reaffirmed that the NATO countries "will continue to strengthen NATO's defence posture", and "to implement measures...designed to enhance our overall defence capabilities".

The other points of the program include: "full support" for the recent U.S. nuclear disarmament proposals, the declaration of NATO's intention to present a "new initiative" "to give fresh impetus" to the Vienna negotiations on mutual and balanced forces reductions, a call for full implementation of the Helsinki Final Act, and a "genuine detente".

At a news briefing after the summit meeting, Secretary Haig drew attention to the word "genuine". He stressed that "genuine detente" is quite different from the too often-used "detente" in the 1970's, hinting that "genuine detente" would demand that the Soviets show restraint in their international behavior.

Like the June 6 Versailles communique of the seven industrial nations, the declaration stated that economic relations with the Warsaw Pact countries should be approached "in a prudent and diversified manner consistent with our political and security interests".

HUANG HUA MEETS UN DISARMAMENT DELEGATES

[Text] United Nations, June 10 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, leader of the Chinese Government delegation to the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament, met with delegation leaders of other countries and had friendly conversations with them during the past three days.

He met with Thorbjorn Falldin, prime minister of Sweden; Sahabzada Yaqub Ali Khan, foreign minister of Pakistan, and A.C. Shahul Hameed, foreign minister of Sri Lanka, on Tuesday. Yesterday, he saw Petar Stambolic, president of the presidency of Yugoslavia; Ahmed Taleb Ibrahimi, foreign minister of Algeria; and Arun Phanuphong, deputy foreign minister of Thailand. Today he conferred with Tolentino, minister of state of the Philippines; Marwan al-Qasim, foreign minister of Jordan; and Faruq Qaddumi, head of Political Department of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

SHANDONG TO HOST UN SEMINAR ON HEALTH CARE

[Text] Beijing, June 8 (XINHUA) -- An inter-regional seminar on primary health care will be held by 15 developing countries in Yexian County, China's Shandong Province, June 13 to June 26.

Jointly sponsored by the World Health Organization (WHO), the United Nations Development Program (UNDP), the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the World Bank, with the support of the Chinese Ministry of Public Health, this seminar will promote health care work for the realization of the global "health for all by the year 2000" as proposed by the WHO. The seminar will be attended by ministers of health, ministers of planning and senior health administrators from Barbados, Democratic Yemen, the Gambia, Jamaica, Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan, the Philippines, the Sudan, Tanzania, Thailand, Vanuatu, Yugoslavia, Zimbabwe and China, as well as officials from the four sponsors.

The aim of the seminar is to find ways of developing primary health care by self-reliance in the developing countries. Participants will investigate and study health care work in Yexian County and other rural areas of China.

Yexian County was chosen by the WHO in 1980 as one of the three primary medical collaborating centers in China for its well-organized medical health network at the levels of county, communes and production brigades for peasants. The county has developed health work with the funds from the government, collectives and peasants. With the training of barefoot doctors and mass hygiene campaigns, achievements have been made in disease prevention and treatment, maternity and child health care and family planning. In cooperation with Chinese health departments, two terms of an international training class on primary health care were held there by the WHO and attended by health officials from 22 countries.

The other two collaborating centers in China are Conghua County in Guangdong Province and Jiading County on the outskirts of Shanghai.

STOESSEL'S REMARKS ON USSR PACIFIC THREAT CITED

OW110736 Beijing XINHUA in English 0716 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Text] Washington, June 10 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Acting Secretary of State Walter Stoessel said today the Soviet Union is seeking positions of "maximum geopolitical strength" in east Asia from which to "project power and influence". The United States and the Pacific states must respond to the Soviet challenge, he stressed. In his testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the Soviet challange in the Pacific and U.S. policy, Stoessel said that the Soviet Union has taken a more direct and blatant course to their objectives in east Asia. Citing the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and the Soivet-supported Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea, he said the Soviet military build-up in the Pacific "raised the threat of further actions of this sort". Stoessel noted the Soviet military force is "an instrument of geopolitical strength". "The Soviet force buildup -- globally and in the Pacific -- far exceeds any legitimate defense requirements", he added.

Stoessel said the Soviet objectives in east Asia include: neutralizing Japan in any conflict, weakening its existing defense ties and ultimately isolating it. Threatening the security of the east lanes [as received], thereby interdicting Middle Eastern petroleum to U.S. and its allies and threatening vital trade among regional states; increasing and maintaining access to Vietnamese air and naval facilities as a means of projecting Soviet military power and political influence; reducing ASEAN's links with the West as well as loosening ties among ASEAN states. Stoessel said "the increasingly formidable Soviet military capabilities in east Asia" present a challenge to the U.S. and its allies. Stoessel noted that the U.S. and the east Asian and Pacific states are adapting their defenses to respond to the Soviet threat. He said that the United States is seeking more effective cooperation for defense with Japan and attaches importance to defense cooperation with Australia, New Zealand and some other countries in the area. "Given the increasing Soviet threat to our common interests, it is essential that we, our allies and our friends transmit an unremitting signal of resolve to protect these interests for so long as they continue to be threatened", the acting secretary of state concluded.

PRC, U.S. INSTITUTES HOLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

[Text] Beijing, June 9 (XINHHA) -- A Sino-U.S. conference on international economic relations was held in Beijing between May 31 and June 4. Over 30 Chinese and American economists attended the conference, which was sponsored jointly by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the U[illegible] Brookings Institution, an influential Washington D.C.-based research organization. Participants held discussions and exchanged views on the prospects for the economy of the world in the 1980's, the world energy situation and its impacts on economic development in the present decade, and the trends in the development of international trade betwden manufactured goods and agricultural produce. Other topics discussed included the general situation of international monetary system, the transfer of technology and direct foreign investment. The economists held that the conference was useful and of academic value and voiced the hope that such conferences would be continued.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR REBUTS SRV ON XISHA ISLANDS

["XINHUA Commentator on Vietnamese Foreign Ministry's White Book" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, Jun 11 (XINHUA) -- Not long ago, the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry again released a white book on the Xisha and Nansha islands in a futile attempt, as it did in September 1979, to justify its illegal occupation of some of China's Nansha Islands and its territorial claim on the Xisha and Nansha Islands of China.

On January 30, 1980, the Chinese Foreign Ministry issued a document which lays bare and refutes the lies of the Vietnamese authorities about the Xisha and Nansha Islands with ample and irrefutable historical records and official documents. After two years, the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry issued this white book apparently as a reply to the Chinese Foreign Ministry document.

With regard to China's arguments that the Xisha and Nansha Islands belong to China, Hanoi's white book resorts either to evasion or distortion. It arbitrarily asserts that Vietnam has exercised sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha Islands "uninterruptedly" for a very long time. However, what it presents as legal basis remains to be those "ancient documentary materials" that have been refused thoroughly long ago by Chinese Foreign Ministry documents. The present article needs not concern itself with such quibbling but should concentrate on other fallacies the white book contains.

The white book says that after its occupation of Vietnam, France began exercising "sovereignty" over the Xisha and Nansha Islands in the name of Vietnam. Here it refers to the illegal French occupation of the two archipelagoes in the 1930's. This was an act of aggression by old-line colonialism and such an act of aggression does not establish sovereignty. This is affirmed by international law. The French colonialists had long coveted the Xisha and Nansha Islands. Taking advantage of China's full preoccupation with the war of resistance against Japan in the 1930's, the French colonialists occupied parts of the two archipelagoes with Vietnam as a springboard. It must be pointed out that China is the first to discover, exploit and exercise jurisdiction over these islands. There was no country other than China which exercised state power over them prior to the early 1930's. As pointed out in the document of the Chinese Foreign Ministry, the then French Premier and Foreign Minister Aristide Briand acknowledged in 1921 "the impossibility in which we currently find ourselves to claim these islands..." The French acting governor general in Indochina likewise conceded in 1929 that "according to reports from various sources, the Paracels (the Xisha Islands) should be regarded as belonging to China". Now, the Vietnamese authorities choose to ignore this historical fact, but describe the later act of French colonialist aggression as exercising "sovereignty" in the name of Vietnam. This is most preposterous. Under this logic, the occupation of vast territories of other countries by the German, Italian and Japanese fascists during the Second World War would be the legal bais of their territorial claims on the occupied countries.

It is equally absurd and untenable for Hanoi to base its "sovereignty" over the Xisha and Nansha Islands on documents about the occupation of these two archipelagoes by the Ngo Dinh Diem and Nguyen Van Thieu regimes in Saigon after 1956. As no aggression could establish sovereignty, any "inheritance" of other countries' territories taken by aggression is naturally illegal and null and void.

The white book of the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry quotes a statement made on September 7, 1951, by Tran Van Huu, leader of the Bao Dai "government" delegation to the San Francisco peace conference, claiming sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha Islands, and then goes on to say in deadly earnest that the Tran statement met with no "protest from any of the representatives of the participating countries." This is a baldface lie.

First, China, one of the major powers defeating Japan, was illegally excluded from the San Francisco conference. But on the eve of the signing of the peace treaty with Japan, Zhou Enlai, the then Chinese premier and foreign minister, made a solemn statement on August 15, 1951, stressing that the Xisha and Nansha Islands, like the Dongsha and Zhongsha Islands, "have been China's territory" which "had been fallen into the hands of Japanese imperialism during its war of aggression, but taken over en masse by the then Chinese Government after the Japanese surrender," and that China's sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha Islands "is impervious to any influence no matter whether the U.S.-U.K. drafted peace treaty with Japan mentions or not the ownership of these islands."

Secondly, the 1951 San Francisco peace conference decided that Japan should renounce the Xisha and Nansha Islands. The leader of the Soviet delegation Andrey Gromyko pointed out at the conference that the Xisha and Nansha Islands are China's "inalienable territory".

Thirdly, although the peace treaty with Japan drafted by the U.S. and Britiain did not menion the ownership of these islands after Japan's renunciation, yet in the year after the San Francisco peace treaty with Japan was signed, the fifteenth map, Southeast Asia, of the standard world atlas, which was recommended by the signature of the then Japanese Foreign Minister Katsuo Okazaki, marks as part of China all the Xisha and Nansha Islands, which Japan had to renounce as stipulated by the peace treaty, as well as the Dongsha and Zhongsha Islands. One must demand why the Vietnamese authorities shut their eyes to these irrefutable historical facts?

China's sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha Islands is widely acknowledged internationally. It must be pointed out in particular that there used to be no dispute between China and Vietnam over the ownership of the Xisha and Nansha Islands. Over a long period of time before 1974, Vietnamese official statements and notes, newspapers, periodicals, maps and textbooks all formally recognized these islands as Chinese territory.

On June 15, 1956, Vietnamese Vice-Foreign Minister Ung Van Khiem [name as received] received the charge d'affaires ad interim of the Chinese Embassy in Hanoi and told him that "according to Vietnamese data, the Xisha and Nansha Islands are historically part of Chinese territory." The acting director of the Asian Department of the Vietnamese Foreign Ministry, who was present on the occasion, also said that "judging from history, these islands were already part of China at the time of the Song Dynasty."

In its statement of September 4, 1956, the Chinese Government proclaimed the breadth of the territorial sea of China to be twelve nautical miles and stated explicitly that this provision applies to all territories of China including the Xisha and Nansha Islands.

On September 14 of the same year, Vietnamese Premier Pham Van Dong clearly stated in a note to Premier Zhou Enlai of the Chinese State Council that the Vietnamese Governmet "recognizes and supports" the statement of the Chinese Government and "respects" this decision. On May 9, 1965, the Vietnamese Government in a statement once again clearly recognized the Xisha Islands as part of the territory of the People's Republic of China. Vietnamese official press reports, maps and textbooks also unequivocally acknowledged the Xisha and Nansha Islands as China's territory.

In view of all this and according to international law and international practice, there is no justification whatsoever for the Vietnamese authorities to dispute China's sovereignty over the Xisha and Nansha Islands, still less to try to seize any one of these islands. Hence the complete silence in the white book in this regard.

Propelled by expansionist designs, the Vietnamese authorities did not hesitate to distort history and fabricate lies. But in no way can this alter historical facts and the legal basis regarding China's ownership of the Xisha and Nansha Islands since ancient times.

MRS MARCOS LAUNCHES SHIP IN SHANGHAI CEREMONY

[Text] Shanghai, June 10 (XINHUA) -- The Jiangnan shipyard of Shanghai today delivered to the Hong Kong Worldwide Shipping Group the 27,000-ton bulk carrier "Shihu" or "World Shanghai". This was the 2,095th ship built here in the past 117 years.

Mme. Imelda Marcos, now on an official visit to China, presided over a brief ceremony naming the ship. Cheers, beating of gongs and drums emanated from spectators when the first lady of the Philippines, wielding a small silver axe, cut a rope attached to the bow, breaking a champagne bottle, and unveiled a curtain covering the name of the ship painted in Chinese and English on the bow. Later, Chai Shufan, chairman of the board of directors of the China State Shipbuilding Corporation and Sir Yue-Kong Pao, chairman of the Hong Kong Worldwide Shipping Group, signed the delivery documents.

The bulk carrier "Shihu" was built under a contract signed on September 12, 1980. She was launched on February 8, 1982, and completed her trial voyage between May 17 and 22. According to a spokesman for the Jiangnan shipyard, the ship was delivered two days ahead of the date of delivery provided by the contract. The ship, 196.45 metters long and 23 meters wide, has a cruising radius of 17,000 nautical miles, added the spokesman. In other words, the vessel can sail to any major port in Asia, Europe and the Americas without refueling.

Wang Daohan, mayor of Shanghai, and Han Nianlong, advisor to the Foreign Ministry, also attended the ceremony.

REAGAN TALKS WITH THATCHER, SPEAKS TO PARLIAMENT

OW091634 Beijing XINHUA in English 1626 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] London, June 9 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan left here for Bonn this morning at the end of a two-day visit to Britain. Before his departure, Reagan held a 90-minute talk with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher on the Falkland (Malvinas) conflict and the latest developments in the Middle East.

Emerging from their final talks at Downing Street, Mrs. Thatcher told reporters that she regarded Reagan's visit as a "tremendous success." She also thanked him for the "staunch" American support for Britain's military action against Argentina in the Falklands.

Reagan said his talks with Mrs. Thatcher covered a number of "trouble spots" in the world. He said they found themselves in agreement on the need to implement the U.N. Security Council's Resolution 508 calling for an end to the fighting in Lebanon and withdrawal of Israeli forces. Referring to the forthcoming NATO summit in Bonn, Reagan said he and Mrs. Thatcher agreed that solidarity and dialog of the members of the alliance must be strengthened and the Soviet Union must be urged to restrain itself. Members of the alliance must strive for "realistic arms control," he said. Reagan said that all through his 41-hour visit, he found the alliance between Britain and the United States stronger than it has ever been.

When addressing members of Britain's Parliament on June 8, Reagan attacked the communist system, preached Western freedom and democracy, and advocated joint cooperations among Western countries to compete with communism. During the 40-minute speech, Reagan also condemned the Soviet Union for its aggression against Afghanistan and its use of chemical weapons there and in Southeast Asia. He also said he hopes to hold dialogs with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and hopes the U.S.-Soviet talks on nuclear arms will be successful.

REAGAN HOLDS TALKS WITH HELMUT SCHMIDT IN BONN

[Text] Bonn, June 9 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today reached a consensus of opinion on security matters, but failed to solve differences on detente policies. Reagan arrived here at noon today for a three-day official visit to West Germany and to attend the NATO summit conference tomorrow. His talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt were held today.

An account of the talks was given by a West German Government spokesman at a news conference. The two leaders, he said, agreed on the need for the West to take all necessary security measures to meet the challenge from the other military alliance. Reagan expressed appreciation at the contributions West Germany has made to defense, and Schmidt thanked Reagan for proposing to Moscow a curb on the arms race, the spokesman said. However, the spokesman said there have been "slight differences" between the two leaders on detente policies. In Schmidt's view, he said, detente is not an established reality, but a process of constant movement. He said Reagan maintained that the Soviet Union has benefited more from detente than the West.

Schmidt, however, shared Reagan's view that detente is not a one-way road, the spokesman said. During the talks, Schmidt gave a detailed account of West Germany's economic, defense and social situation, the spokesman said. Schmidt also stressed the importance that West Germany attaches to trade with the East, he said. Reagan made no demand of the West German Government during the talks, the spokesman said.

The two leaders also discussed the West European-Soviet natural gas pipeline contract, the spokesman said. Reagan expressed "reservations" over the issue, and Schmidt explained West Germany's position that signed contracts are to be implemented.

Reagan arrived in Bonn from Britain for the last leg of his European tour. He will visit West Berlin.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS OUTGOING YUGOSLAV ENVOY

[Text] Beijing, June 10 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang met in Zhongnanhai today with outgoing Yugoslav Ambassador to China, Mirko Ostojic. Premier Zhao said Ostojic served as ambassador at the historic turning point in the relations between the two parties and governments. In his four years in Beijing, the premier said, the ambassador has made important contributions to development of Sino-Yugoslav friendship. He wished Ostojic success in his new post.

Ostojic thanked the premier for the meeting despite his busy schedule. "It is a vivid expression of profound Yugoslavia-China friendship," the ambassador said. He said he hoped China would make still greater achievements in socialist construction. "The Yugoslav people regard every success of the Chinese people as their own," he said. "I am sure the relations between our two countries will grow day by day."

RENMIN RIBAO CONDEMNS ISRAELI 'AGGRESSION'

[Text] Beijing, Jun 11 (XINHUA) -- PEOPLE'S DAILY carries an article by its commentator today strongly condemning Israel's aggression in Lebanon. The article says: "The Israeli aggressor troops have now pushed close to the Lebanese capital of Beirut and this brought about an extremely serious situation.

"The savage Israeli aggression has not only brought the Lebanese and Palestinian people heavy losses in life and property, but also grossly violated the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and sharply aggravated the situation in the Middle East region." It points out that the Israeli invasion is a long-premeditated action. For months, the Israeli authorities have been preparing opinion for the invasion, clamouring that in order to ensure "Israel's peace and survival" it is necessary to expand the limits of security borders" and to "wipe out as many as possible the military and political structures of the Palestine Liberation Organization." Meanwhile, it has actively carried out deployments for aggression and military exercises, waiting for the opportunity to act. With the attention of the international community drawn to the British-Argentine conflict and the Iran-Iraq war, the Begin authorities seized the opportunity to launch the massive aggression, using the assassination of the Israeli ambassador in London as a pretext.

The article says: "Through this invasion the Israeli authorities vainly hope to wipe out the PLO bases in Lebanon and eliminate or weaken the PLO armed forces so as to smother the Palestinian people's struggle for the right to national self-determination and perpetuate the Israeli occupation of the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip.

"In an attempt to concentrate its forces on striking at the Palestine Liberation Organization, Israel has resorted to the tactic of destroying one by one in its invasion. But the scheme of the Israeli expansionists has fallen flat. The Lebanese Government troops, the Syrian peace-keeping forces in Lebanon and the PLO armed forces are united as one and fighting shoulder to shoulder against the invaders. Other Arab states have joined in condemning the Israeli aggression in solidarity with and support of Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization. The savage Israeli invasion has served to enhance the unity of the Arab states and people against the common enemy."

The article says: "Israel's gross violation of the principles of international law and its defiance of the international community have aroused indignation all over the world. But it continues to have U.S. connivance. The U.S. veto of the U.N. Security Council resolution condemning Israel's refusal to withdraw its troops is further evidence of the U.S. biased stance toward Israel. Such stupidities on the part of the United States naturally drew heavy fire from all countries and people upholding justice."

In conclusion, the article says: "The Chinese people strongly condemn Israel's aggression and firmly support the Palestinian and Arab people in their struggle against Israeli aggression and expansion, and for a just and reasonable solution to the Middle East problem. Israel, under the aegis of the United States, may indulge in aggressions for a time, but indulgence in evils courts destruction. Its policy of aggression and expansion is doomed to utter defeat."

CHINA DAILY ON EFFECTS OF U.S. SUPPORT OF ISRAEL

["Opinion" column by Li Tengzhi]

[Text] The United States has been advocating the formation of a "strategic consensus" with various countries in the region, purportedly to help ward off the danger of further Soviet expansion in the Middle East.

The Reagan administration has promised large sums in aid to Pakistan and Egypt, designated as the two cornerstones of this strategic consensus; it has made an arms deal with Saudi Arabia and conducted military manoeuvres in Egypt, Somalia, Oman and the Sudan.

Despite these and other efforts, no substantial gains have been made. The main reason is that the "strategic consensus" policy, like its predecessors, ignores regional concerns. The Arab countries have made clear their reservations about the U.S. perspective. The point is not that the Arabs are unaware of the threat posed by America's rival superpower, but that they cannot neglect the incessant attacks by the United States' protege, Israel. This puts a strategic consensus beyond reach. There has been no sign that Israel will reorient its foreign policy. On the contrary, its policy of aggression is hardening, with further annexation of occupied territories and more air attacks on Arab countries. Now it has even invaded Lebanon. In the meantime, the United States continues to protect Israeli from sanctions by the United Nations.

The Middle East countries learned from their own long history that their battle against subjugation by either superpower has to be fought by themselves. To rely on one superpower in their battle against the other is not a remedy. Nevertheless, it is only natural that when Middle East countries are fighting one superpower or its protege, some deals may be made with the other. The latter would naturally be delighted to oblige and take full advantage of the opportunity to develop its influence. The Soviet Union has been gaining in this sphere for some time, mainly because of Washington's backing of Israel.

Unless drastic measures are taken to check Israel, the danger of increased Soviet influence in the Middle East will loom even larger.

Unrepresentative

Israel's policy of aggression represents neither the people of Israel nor world Jewry. The masses of world Jewry did not identify themselves with political Zionism. Even among Jews who live in Israel, there are people who protest against the policies of the Begin administration. World Jewry, like other people, are differentiated into classes. There are classes in Israel as well. American support of Israel's ruling class under pressure from the American Jewish elite does not mean support for the people of Israel, or world Jewry at large. Conversely, opposing Israel's policy of aggression has nothing to do with anti-Semitism.

Since influential Arab leaders have shown a sincere desire to make peace and grant recognition to Israel, there is no justification for Israel's refusal to recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), or to negotiate. Ignoring the organization as an entity is an expression of Israel refusal to withdraw from occupied Arab territories. U.S. patronage of such an Israel cannot but alienate the Arabs.

If the Reagan administration were serious in setting up a strategic consensus in the Middle East, it would have to do its share by containing Israel's policy of aggression. Settling the question of Palestine was the Arab reply to the U.S. bid for such a consensus. They are not asking too much. Yet there seems to be no sign of a change in the U.S. posture. The people of the Third World know very well that their future is not to be entrusted to one superpower in contention with another. There is no reason to oppose any force that antagonizes the immediate enemy. Nevetheless, in a Third World Nation's struggle against a superpower, the use of another superpower is sometimes the source of new problems. Any final guarantee of a solution to the Palestinain question lies in unity among the Arabs and struggle on their own. People throughout the world will support the Arab cause, which indeed affects them all.

XINHUA CITES TASS STATEMENT CONDEMNING ISRAEL

[Text] Moscow, June 7 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet news agency TASS declares in an authorized statement today that "the Soviet Union emphatically condemns Israeli's aggression against the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples."

"The Soviet Union demands an immediate cessation of Israel's armed invasion of Lebanon and a pull-out of the Israeli troops to their territory," it says. The statement says "the new Israeli aggression was undoubtedly undertaken with consent and support from Washington which armed Israel to the teeth and is pushing it by its policy to carry out criminal anti-Arab actions".

"Israel's aggression against Lebanon and the Palestinian people is once again taking the Middle East to a dangerous line," the statement stresses. It urges the U.N. Security Council to take measures immediately to curb the aggression.

[Text] Beijing, Jun 11 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government held a red-carpet ceremony at the plaza east of the Great Hall of the People this afternoon to welcome Mobutu Sese Seko, president of the Republic of Zaire, who is on a friendship visit to China. Premier Zhao Ziyang presided over the ceremony.

At 1600, President and Madame Mobutu drove to the plaza, which flew the Chinese and Zairian national flags. Premier Zhao greeted them with warm handshakes, and the children presented them with bouquets. After the band played the Zairian and Chinese national anthems, President Mobutu, accompanied by Premier Zhao, reviewed an honor guard made up of men of the three services of the Chinese People's LIberation Army. Two hundred children waved colorful streamers and flowers to greet President Mobutu. Chinese State Councillor Ji Pengfei also attended the ceremony.

President and Madame Mobutu and their party arrived here by special plane this morning. They were greeted at the airport by Gong Dafei, Chinese vice-minister of foreign affairs; Zhang Jiexun, member of the Secretariat of the All-China Women's Federation; and Li Shanyi, Chinese ambassador to Zaire.

BURUNDI ARMED FORCES CHIEF OF STAFF VISITS

Yang Dezhi Hosts Dinner

OW081709 Beijing XINHUA in English 1643 GMT 8 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, Jun 8 (XINHUA) -- Yang Dezhi, chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, gave a dinner tonight for a Burundian military delegation led by Lieutenant Colonel Charles Kazatza, chief of General Staff of the Burundi Armed Forces.

Yang Dezhi spoke highly of the successes the Burundian people and armed forces had won in consolidating national independence, safeguarding state sovereignty, developing their national economy and building defensive capabilities.

The visit of the delegation, he said, symbolized the friendship between the people and armed forces of China and Burundi.

Kazatza said that the army of Burundi wished to develop friendship and cooperation with the armies of other friendly nations, especially China. He appreciated China's consistent support for the struggle of the Third World countries against imperialism and colonialism.

Present were Liu Kai, assistant to the chief of the P.L.A. General Staff, and Sylvere Gahungu, Burundian ambassador to China. The delegation arrived Tuesday morning at the invitation of the Ministry of National Defense. This afternoon, the ministry held a welcoming ceremony, in which Kazatza,with Yang Dezhi, reviewed an honor guard of China's ground forces.

They were accompanied by Liu Kai, assistant to the chief of the P.L.A. General Staff, and Qiu Weigo, deputy commander of the P.L.A. Beijing Garrison.

The visitors watched a display of military skills including rifle shooting,mortar shelling, grenade throwing, mining and surmounting obstacles. They also visited a service center and a barracks. Lt Col Kazatza said he was deeply impressed by the well-organized presentation. The shooting was accurate, he said.

The delegation will leave Beijing for home tomorrow.

CHINA INVESTMENT PROMOTION MEETING CONCLUDES

OW101858 Beijing XINHUA in English 1846 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 10 (XINHUA) -- The China investment promotion meeting closed here this evening. Since the meeting opened on June 7, representatives of 260 business firms from 24 countries and regions have held 1,400 rounds of talks on the more than 100 projects offered for discussion. To date, letters of intent, memorandums and other documents have been signed on 47 projects with investors from France, the United States, Italy, West Germany, Austria, Japan, India and other countries and Hong Kong-Macao region.

Projects in the light industry, textile and electronics industries were the hottest items for discussion. Signing letters of intent and memorandums with overseas investors, the Shanghai communications equipment plant, the Beijing leather hardware factory, the Shenyang No 4 glass factory in Liaoning Province, the Zhejiang linen textile mill, the Jinan towel mill in Shandong Province and the Liuzhou decorative ceramics plant in Guangxi all intended to absorb foreign capital and import advanced technologies and equipment for technical transformation and expanded production.

Foreign and Hong Kong-Macao investors showed keen interest in big projects producing products that sell well on the world market. More than 30 firms and businessmen held talks with the Huaxian county cement works in Guangdong Province which produces high grade cement and the Beijing No 2 farm chemicals plant, a manufacturer of PVC tubings, doors and windows and floor boards.

Representatives from a British firm visited the Guangzhou heavy-duty machinery plant yesterday, which wanted to introduce the designing and manufacturing technologies for the production of titanium machines.

Many overseas participants have planned to visit factories in Heilongjiang, Jilin, Beijing, Hebei, Jiangsu and Jiangxi and will continue talks, after learning more about the projects they are interested in.

It is generally acknowledged that the Chinese attitude is serious toward the absorption of overseas investment, and that China has not changed its policy.

A reception marking the closing of the meeting was given by the Chinese International Trust and Investment Corporation. Wei Yuming, vice-minister of the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade; Zeng Dingshi, vice governor of Guangdong Province and Liang Lingguang, mayor of Guangzhou city, attended the closing ceremony and the reception.

An extra session of business talks will be organized tomorrow following the meeting.

UNIDO Official Comments

OW101554 Beijing XINHUA in English 1538 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, June 10 (XINHUA) -- "The results of the China investment promotion meeting are more than satisfactory so far," said Dr. Abd-el Rahman Khane, executive director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, in an interview with XINHUA this afternoon. He said this before leaving for Beijing later in the day.

Forty-seven letters of intent have been signed so far. "From our experience this is a very good result," Dr. Khane said. The results have surpassed his original expectations, he remarked.

Dr. Khane said he considers that this meeting is an initial step for longer international cooperation.

He said the foreign participatns have been very much impressed by the organization of the meeting itself and the thorough preparation of their Chinese counterparts as far as the projects under consideration are concerned.

This is Dr. Khane's fourth visit to China. He said his impression is that China has made tremendous progress. "As to China's policy of opening to the world, I cannot but say it is a correct one," he said.

AFP REPORTS GUANGZHOU DISSIDENTS JUDGED BY COURT

BK110633 Hong Kong AFP in English 0543 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jun (AFP) -- A Chinese spokesman confirmed today that two of China's best known dissidents have been judged by a Guangzhou court but refused to disclose the sentences handed to Wang Xizhe and He Qiu. Reports from Hong Kong said, however, that Wang, 34, had been sentenced to 14 years jail and He Qiu, 33, to 10 years. The Chinese spokesman said that the two men had been "publicly tried by the Intermediate People's Court of Guangzhou for their counterrevolutionary crimes."

Hong Kong University Students Union President Chang Ka-mun said in Hong Kong recently that Wang, a pioneer of the struggle for democratization in China, was planning to appeal against his sentence.

He Qiu played an active part in southern China in the "Beijing spring" human rights and democracy movements of 1978-79, which have since been crushed. Wang, a member of the Li Yizhe group which authored a famous wall poster in 1974, bitterly attacking the lack of any form of legality in China, and He Qiu were both arrested at the beginning of last year during a clampdown on human rights activists.

The spokesman also remained tightlipped over the nature of the "counterrevolutionary crimes" attributed to the two men.

Last year police carried out at least 30 arrests of activists in various parts of China.

RENMIN RIBAO REAFFIRMS ADVANCEMENT POLICY

OW101306 Beijing XINHUA in English 1244 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 10 (XINHUA) -- The PEOPLE'S DAILY has published a series of news reports over the past weeks, reaffirming that the current policy of encouraging Chinese peasants to achieve prosperity through honest work will not change.

In a recent issue, the newspaper quoted a dispatch from Fujian Province, east China, saying that two party officials -- a deputy secretary of the Longyan prefectural party committee and secretary of the Liangcheng County party committee -- visited a peasant who had become well-known in the locality for his resourcefulness in increasing his income. The peasant, Qiu Liquan, and his family of seven earned 15,000 yuan last year by farming, bee keeping, mushroom and edible fungus growing and livestock raising. He did an efficient job of farming the plot of collective land put under his management under the job responsibility system. The officials, deputy prefectural party Secretary Huang Weiquan and country party Secretary Wu Guangran, told him that honest work such as what he had done should be encouraged. "What we oppose is speculation, profiteering and theft of public property," the officials told him.

The PEOPLE'S DAILY reprinted a FUJIAN DAILY commentary along with the Fujian story, calling for "warm support" of practices by peasants to achieve prosperity in line with the principle known as "one-uphold and two-not-to-change", that is, the principle of upholding socialist collectivization while changing neither the collective ownership of farmland and other major means of production, nor the job responsibility system, as long as peasants do not want to change it.

A similar story was published in the PEOPLE'S DAILY last month. It told of a county party secretary in Sichuan Province giving support to a rural tinsmith whose annual income exceeded 10,000 yuan in 1980 and 1981. Zhou Ganwen in Xindu County earned the money under contracts signed with the collective. The contract for 1980 allowed him to retain 30 percent of the profit made by the tinsmiths' group headed by him. The group achieved a net profit of 45,000 yuan that year, the PEOPLE'S DAILY reported, and from this Zhou Ganwen got 13,700 yuan. In 1981, Zhou Ganwen's share again exceeded 10,000 yuan even though, on his own proposal, the proportion he received was reduced to 20 percent. Again he proposed that the percentage be cut further in 1982. Nevertheless, reported the newspaper, he became anxious when some people expressed doubts that the policy of encouraging peasants to get rich might be affected by the current drive against speculation and profiteering.

On April 11, county party Secretary Huang Yiyuan went down to the village and talked with the tinsmith and other villagers. "The orientation of the tinsmiths' group has been correct," he said. "The government supports and protects such undertakings." As regards output targets and the method of distributing the profit, he said, these may be readjusted if found inappropriate," the party secretary said.

According to another PEOPLE'S DAILY report, the authorities of Xinxiang Prefecture, Henan Province, held a meeting last month at which 248 rural collectives and individual peasants were commended for achieving prosperity through honest work. In speeches made at the meeting, Xinxiang prefectural leaders said that the greater the number of such families and collectives, the greater will the socialist economy benefit. Last year, 6,000 families in Xinxiang drew from sideline production incomes exceeding 1,000 yuan, and the income for 40 families was 5,000 yuan or more.

The income for an average Chinese peasant family of five is around 1,000 yuan a year, from both farming and sideline production.

REPORT ON PROGRESS OF CEMENT PLANT CONSTRUCTION

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jun (XINHUA) -- A XINHUA reporter has learned from the department concerned that the critical situation in cement supply in China is expected to ease in the next few years. At present the nation is building and expanding 17 large and medium-sized cement plants. With the completion of these plants by 1985, China will be able to increase its cement output by more than 9 million dun each year. In addition, the existing plants are tapping potentials in production, and various localities are increasing cement production by raising funds on their own to build cement plants. By 1985 cement output in China may possibly reach 100 million dun, an increase of 15 million dun over 1981. Thus China's cement output will be able to meet the demand in housing construction for the people and in developing various activities in the fields of economy, culture and education and national defense.

At present China is 4 to 5 million dun short in top-quality and high-grade cement each year. The 17 cement plants now under construction are mainly located in Hebei, Anhui, Henan, Xinjiang, Shanxi, Zhejiang, Shandong, Guangsi, Sichuan, Heilongjiang, Jilin, Yunnan and other provinces and autonomous regions. Eight of them involve the expansion of old plants, while nine are new construction projects. With the completion of these plants, the critical situation in the supply of high-grade cement is expected to ease.

The progress in the construction of these 17 cement plants is fairly smooth. At present the Pingdingshan cement plant in Henan has basically been completed and has gone into operation on a trial basis.

The main project involving the Xinjiang cement plant -- construction of a burning kiln -- has been completed. The plant is expected to go into operation before the end of the year. The Jidong, Huaihai and Ningguo cement plants plan to use production equipment to be imported from other countries. The Jidong and Huaihai plants are presently under construction, while construction of the Ningguo cement plant will begin in September this year as scheduled.

XINHUA FEATURE ON OUTSTANDING AIR FORCE UNIT

[Newsletter by XINHUA correspondent: "Brave Eagles of the Night Sky," on the "red banner independent flight safety group" of the PLA Air Force's Aviation Corps]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 10 Jun (XINHUA) -- On a pitch-dark night, a group of high-speed fighter aircraft was training in intercepting invading "enemy aircraft" over the sea, when suddenly the starry sky was filled with the spurting flames of air-to-air guided missiles and fireballs and the dense smoke of an exploding "enemy aircraft."

This powerful group of aircraft of the People's Air Force was a flight of "brave eagles of the night sky" which not long ago was named the "red banner independent flight safety group" by the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee.

The group has safely flown patrols, intercepting invading flying thieves, and training missions at night for the past 27 years since 1955.

Assiduous flight training and conscientious and meticulous aircraft maintenance for the sake of the motherland and have made this independent group a "dagger in the sky," which is able to overcome any difficulties.

One day at dusk, the independent group was conducting a new training maneuver, and eight planes took off from the runway one after another. Suddenly, the airfield was shrouded in a cloud of dust blown in by the wind. How could the planes land when the pilots could not see the runway? "Keep your proper distance from one another and make ready for landing," ordered the commander. One after the other, the eight aircraft, which had just completed their training mission, circled the airfield above the cloud of dust. Wang Junxiang, pilot of the leading plane, confident of his instrument flying skill, flew his plane towards the control tower. As his gliding aircraft entered the cloud of dust, Wang Junxiang, fixing his gaze on the instrument panel, skillfully guided his aircraft through the cloud. When he could clearly see the runway, his plane was almost directly above it. Calm and composed, Wang Junxiang gave a light push on the controls, and his aircraft landed smoothly. Immediately afterwards, the seven other aircraft also landed safely.

CHEN YUN'S REMARKS TO LITERARY WORKERS RECALLED

[Article by Xin Ming [5430 2494]: "Precious Parting Words"]

[Text] On the occasion of commemorating the 40th anniversary of the Yanan forum on literature and art, with a feeling of joy and sincerity, I studied the talk made by Comrade Chen Yun -- "On Two Tendencies Among the Literary and Art Workers of Our Party." This talk, in fact, was the parting words Comrade Chen Yun made in March 1943 when a group of literary and art workers were about to go into the thick of life with the workers, peasants and soldiers. In the ordinary course of events, people are used to saying some auspicious words such as "Bon Voyage!" at the time of parting. Nevertheless, what Comrade Chen Yun said was quite unconventional. He warned the literary and art workers not to seek personal privileges and not to be arrogant. His advice was bitter, but good, medicine! This was good medicine, but it was not only useful at that time; it is still effective at the present time though 40 years have elapsed since the speech was made.

It still has its significance because some of the intellectuals, especially a small number of party member literary workers appear to be in a confused state of mind after they experienced the 10 years to turmoil. In the note by the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee in publishing the talk of Comrade Chen Yun, it pointed out: At present, a small number of people are very impure in party spirit. Some party member writers are tainted with evil influences and they are not entitled to be Communist Party members.

Forty years ago, a large number of literary and art workers rushed to Yanan, a sacred place of the Chinese revolution, from other parts of the country to seek a streak of light in the darkness and to seek refuge with the Communist Party. They were faithful supporters of the CCP. But they were inevitably tainted with the dust of the old society, their feelings were not interwoven with those of the workers, peasants and soldiers, and also they still stood far from the masses of the people. Therefore, they were apt to overestimate their work and themselves. Aiming at this, Comrade Chen Yun accurately hit at the weaknesses of our literary and art workers. I recall that at the 1942 Yanan forum on literature and art, he pointed out that writers could write nothing unless workers, peasants and soldiers had carried out their deeds. So why were writers proud of themselves? And why should writers be more proud of themselves than those who carried out the deeds? Comrade Chen Yun often shows us his warm affection or comradeship. All his writings, such as "Tell the Truth, Do Not Save Face" are honest advice, though unpleasant to the ear. They serve as a warning to us in strengthening our party spirit as revolutionaries. The above-quoted remarks, made by Comrade Chen Yun in simple terms, expound the profound meaning that what writers write is nothing but a reflection of actual life, which originates from the fiery struggles of workers, peasants and soldiers. Workers, peasants and soldiers are the real people who are working in industry and agriculture, or fighting in the battlefields. If a comparison is made between their work and that of writers, we may only say that each has its strong points. There are no grounds to say that writers are more important than those who are building the economic foundation and those who are safeguarding our production and construction, nor should we say that writers can be more proud of themselves than others.

Forty years have elapsed since Comrade Chen Yun gave his sincere advice. Having tempered themselves in the 40 years of real life and practice of writing, our literary and art workers find that his sincere advice is now more convincing and important to them. Some who have taken a fall can attribute this entirely to their own arrogance. On the contrary, the writers who have been bent on writing for workers, peasants and soldiers with body and soul and who have been able to handle properly the relationship between literary work and other revolutionary work, have all made headway in their work. Thus it can be seen that it is of great importance to act in accordance with what Chairman Mao and Comrade Chen Yun said.

The baneful influence of the gang of four has not yet been thoroughly liquidated. Owing to the policy of opening up to the world, some decadant ideas and ultra-individualist ideas of the bourgeoisie have infiltrated our country in recent years. All this has led some people to be confused in mind and to forget themselves. Being swell-headed, they even raised an outcry against Chairman Mao's "Talks at the Yanan Forum on Literature and Art" by saying "it is outmoded and has become an obstacle on the road of literary development. It should be breached." Some individuals have even shamefully uttered a cry: "No one should you worship, but me. And you should listen to all that I say." This type of person is really ridiculous and pitiful.

All literary and art workers should always bear in mind that what we engage in is revolutionary and socialist literature and art. We must do our little bit to help build socialism. We must exert our energy for our modernization drive. And we should assume our responsibility for the building of socialist spiritual civilization. At the present historical stage, when we review the parting words made by Comrade Chen Yun 40 years ago, we feel them particularly convincing and useful. All colleagues, let us encourage each other in our endeavors.

RENMIN RIBAO ON APPRAISING PEASANTS' IDEOLOGY

[Academic notes by Yu [4416]: "How Do We Evaluate the Concept 'Equalize the Noble and the Ignoble, the Poor and the Rich?"]

[Text] Over the last few years, in the study of the history of peasant wars, a great number of monographs and theses which carry a lot of weight have been published. However, quite a few points of view are open to question. For instance, some articles maintain that "the egalitarian mentality of the peasants is in essence interrelated with feudalism rather than diametrically opposed to feudalism in terms of practical content and the end result." Other articles consider that egalitarianism is still inferior to feudalism. These points of view involve the problem of how to actually appraise the slogan "equalize the noble and the ignoble, the poor and the rich." Recently, in his article "On 'Equalizing the Noble and the Ignoble, the Poor and the Rich'" (carried in ZHONGGUOSHI YANGJUI no 1, 1982), Comrade Qi Xia has expressed his own views on this matter.

How should we actually evaluate the concept "equalize the noble and the ignoble, the poor and the rich" which has been passed down since the Song Dynasty? The author held that in criticizing petit bourgeois socialism, Engels said: "Those matters which are wrong in the form of economics may yet become correct in world history." It was completely appropriate to use this quotation from Engels to analyze and evaluate this concept of the peasants. The maximum realm of the concept "equalize the noble and the ignoble, the poor and the rich" is none other than the accomplishment of a "well-fed" and "well-distributed" small farmer utopia where "if there is land, let all till it; if there is food, let all share it; if there are clothes, let all wear them and if there is money, let all spend it." In the intention to build a society free from both exploitation and oppression, this concept was undoubtedly the common demand and wish of the poverty-stricken peasants in history. However, this demand and wish of the peasants contained the characteristics of small producers who took individual production as the foundation, that is, the characteristic of egalitarianism. Furthermore history has proved that it was already impossible to build an egalitarian kingdom of small farmers. This is because the landholding peasants' economy was devisible and unstable: in those places where capitalism held a dominant position, apart from a small number of rich peasants who had split themselves from the landholding peasants, namely, the rural bourgeoisie, most of the landholding peasants were reduced to hired peasants who had lost their land, that is, the rural proletarians; in those places where feudalism held a dominant position, most of the small groups of rich peasants and small landlords who split themselves from the landholding peasants were reduced to semi-landholding peasants and affiliated peasants. People have failed to find an independent kingdom which is composed purely of landholding peasants, or a social economic formation which takes the landholding peasants as the primary body. What is more, small farmer socialism is reactionary to some extent. European petit bourgeois socialism and Russian pure nationalism held that individual small producers could build socialism. This was obviously wrong. Engels' statement that "those matters which are wrong in the form of economics" constituted an extremely precise repudiation of small farmer socialism.

The writer was of the opinion that although the peasants' practical activities of "equalizing the noble and the ignoble, the poor and the rich" could not eliminate the feudal system of land ownership and overthrow the rule of the landlord class, these activities enabled the peasants to seize back part of the land from the hands of the landlords and to weaken the oppressing force in the feudal relations of production and thus enabled the feudal relations of production to suit the nature of the development of the productive forces. As a result, such activities pushed history forward. Lenin repeatedly discussed the ideology of the peasants. He pointed out: "While the peasants were waging a struggle against the serf owners and the landlords, the mentality of equality was the most powerful ideological motive force to struggle for land" and "was the most revolutionary ideology in the peasants' movement."

The second half of Engels' statement -- "may yet become correct in world history" -- must be interpreted in this way. Of course, the very same ideology can, under different conditions, produce different roles. Under certain conditions, it may play a progressive role while under other conditions, it may play a reactionary role. Under socialism, egalitarianism is of course backward and reactionary and must be repudiated.

STATE, GOVERNMENT SYSTEMS SHOULD NOT BE CONFUSED

[Article by Feng Yue [7458 1878]: "The State System Should Not Be Confused With the System of Government"]

[Text] In discussing the question of democracy, some articles often confuse the state system and the system of government.

The state system and the system of government are two different concepts. In the article "On New Democracy," Comrade Mao Zedong distinctly states: "After several decades of wrangling since the last years of the Qing Dynasty, the question of the state system has still not been cleared up. Actually it is simply a question of the status of the various social classes within the state."

A state is a means of class domination. The class which occupies a dominant position decides the class character of the state. Thus, states vary in kind. There are states under the dictatorship of the feudal landlord class, states under bourgeois dictatorship, states under the dictatorship of the proletariat, or states under the joint dictatorship of several classes. In the general principles of the draft of the revised consitution, article 1 highlights the state system by prescribing that "the PRC is a socialist state of the people's democratic dectatorship led by the working class and based on the alliance of workers and peasants."

The article "On New Democracy" also points out: "As for the question of 'the system of government,' this is a matter of how political power is organized and the form which one social class or another chooses for its political power apparatus to oppose its enemies and protect itself."

Autocratic monarchy, constitutional monarchy, republic, the fascist system, the soviet system, or the system of people's congress are all different types of the state system. If they are divided according to their fundamental natures, it may be said that there are only two kinds. One is the democratic system, which is characterized by the fact that the organs of state power are elected in line with the principle of the minority being subordinate to the majority, and under the same principle, the organs of state power decide on and handle important issues. As it should be, there are different kinds of democratic systems. The other is the autocratic system which is the opposite of the democratic system and which is characterized by one individual taking the state power into his own hands and he alone having the say. The feudal monarchy of "the sovereign" and the fascist dictatorship of Hitler are all this type of ruling dictatorship system. In the general principles of the draft of the revised constitution, article 3 stipulates, "the state constitutions of the PRC apply the principle of democratic centralism." This is what we refer to as the system of government.

The state system tackles the question of which class occupies a dominant position, while the system of government solves the problem of how to carry out the domination. These two different questions should not be confused with each other. The states under the domination of the proletariat can apply the democratic system as can the bourgeois-ruled states. Even the states of slaveholders, such as ancient Athens, can apply the democratic system. Conversely, the states which apply the democratic system can be states under proletarian domination or bourgeois-ruled states or else slaveholder-ruled states. It can be seen that the form a state chooses for its political power apparatus has no inexorable connection with the class which occupies a dominant position in the state.

If we confuse the two different concepts of the state system and the system of government, many questions cannot be cleared up and there will be theoretical confusion.

ECONOMIC SOCIETY HOLDS FORUM ON CUTTING COSTS

HK100923 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 4 Jun 82 p 5

[Academic notes by Huang Renqing [7806 0088 3237]: "China Cost Research Society Holds Third Theoretical Symposium"]

[Text] Not long ago the China cost research society held its third theoretical symposium in Yichang of Hubei Province.

The Relationship Between Lowering Costs and Increasing Economic Results

The fellow deputies held that lowering costs is the only way to increase economic results. True, the aim of our engaging in production is to continuously meet the needs of the broad masses of the people but at the same time we must economize on the consumption of human labor and material labor and provide society with more and more surplus products. In this way we can fulfill the targets to expand production and continue to improve the livelihood of the people.

Some comrades pointed out that the relationship between costs and results is one of reverse ratio. While the total amount of commodities is unchanged, the higher the costs, the lower the economic results. Some comrades pointed out that cutting costs is one of the required conditions for increasing economic results. However, only when the products accord with social demand can lowering costs increase economic results. If the products are not marketable and the products produced do not sell well, it is impossible to achieve economic results even if the costs are reduced; so cutting costs is not the only condition for increasing economic results. Only when two matters -- the reduction of costs and the production of products which are in line with social demand -- are concurrently grasped can economic results be increased in an overall manner.

How Should Costs Be Lowered?

The participants at the symposium unanimously held the opinion that at present there is tremendous potential in enterprises to lower costs. Many enterprises have fixed assets in large quantities in hand,but the utilization rate of fixed assets is low; they have floating funds in large quantities in hand, but the turnover of floating funds is slow; in enterprises there is high consumption and heavy waste of raw and semi-finished materials and energy; product quality is unstable and waste products and losses are numerous; the various expenses are great, and so on. All this has made the per-unit costs of many products much higher than the relatively good level in the past. The participants considered that the key to lowering costs lies in: 1) improving the production level, that is, producing more and better products which accord with social demands; 2) raising the technical level so as to improve the product mix and product quality and reduce the consumption of raw and semifinished materials and energy; 3) heightening the management level and reorganizing and perfecting all types of management work of enterprises in real earnest; and 4) enhancing the ideological level and professional skills.

The fellow deputies maintained that to lower costs, in macroeconomic terms, it is necessary to do a good job in rationally distributing the productive forces, properly arrange the economic structure (including the technological makeup, regional structure, product mix and the structures of consumption and accumulation), increase the effect of capital construction (the rate, quality, production costs and results), organize specialized production, do a good job in structural reforms (including the systems of goods and materials, pricing and circulation), strengthen the supervision of financing and banking and intensify legal building.

In microeconomic terms, to improve operations and management, it is necessary to devote a lot of time and energy to such fields as the designing and trial manaufacturing of products, replacement and renovation of equipment and technical transformation, technologies and methods and comprehensive use of raw and semi-finished materials and energy.

It is necessary to learn from the experiences of the Shoudu Iron and Steel Company to strengthen the economic responsibility system, divide the cost indexes at each level and implement them down to the individual level. It is imperative that the controlling functional and advice-giving roles of accounting are brought into full play and strengthen the forecasting, control, accounting, analysis and examination of costs.

The participants of the symposium held the opinion that full-scale cost compensation is the required condition for ensuring the normal operation of production. Unrealistic cost compensation, including insufficient or excessive compensation, will lead to errors in estimating the national capabilities and interfere with the correct macroeconomic decisions and thus will be harmful to correctly handling the proportional relations between accumulation and consumption.

Quite a few comrades pointed out that, in macroeconomic terms, insufficient compensation is an outstanding problem in China's economy. For instance, the depreciation rate of fixed assets is low; the expenses of trial manufacturing some new products are paid by the state in the form of financial allocations rather than apportioning them into production costs; the expenses of the general survey and prospecting of mineral and water resources, those of the prospecting and programming of land and those of the monitoring and protection of the environment are paid by the state in the form of financial allocations and the enterprises are not held responsible for these expenses; subsidies for commodity prices hold a large proportion in state financial expenditure and are not manifested in the wages of staff and workers; and so on. Cost compensation must be in keeping with the economic contents of the costs. Otherwise it will inevitably bring an unfavorable influence to social production and life.

Many comrades pointed out that at present it is essential to pay attention to the arbitrariness in the cost compensation of enterprises. When they have managed to fulfill the requirements for distributing bonuses, some enterprises with a rapid increase in profits will squeeze out the costs in an unplanned and confused way, and some enterprises with a relatively slow increase in profits will purposely minimize the costs and make a false report about profits so as to have more profits retained and to distribute more bonuses. This state of affairs must be resolutely checked.

On Reforming and Perfecting the Cost Control System

The fellow deputies deemed that the main problem in China's cost control system is that people are used to concentrating on the after-the-fact cost accounting and analysis at the expense of cost decisions, cost forecasting and cost control; that they are to exclusively confine themselves to carrying out the planning, accounting and analysis of the cost involving the production process to the neglect of the cost control over the entire process of enterprises' economic activities; and that only a small number of financial and accounting personnel manage cost affairs instead of the entire staff and workers doing them. Therefore, the orientation of reforming the cost control system must be to establish a comprehensive cost control system which concurrently pays attention to the whole production and operational process, to the participation of all staff and workers and to the cost accounting and analysis, cost decisions, cost forecasting and cost control before, during and after the event.

SHAANXI RIBAO DISCUSSES NANJING TREATY

["Lectures on Modern Chinese History" column article by Yan Shiqun [0917 0670 5028] and Zhang Xianchen [1728 2009 5256]: "The 'Treaty of Nanjing' — A Milestone on the Road of Chinese Social Development"]

[Text] After the defeat in the opium war, the government of the Qing Dynasty was compelled by the British aggressors to sign the "Treaty of Nanjing" in August 1842.

Later, at the request of the British Government, China and Britain again signed, respectively in Guangzhou and Hong Kong, in July and October, 1843 the "General Regulations" under which British trade was to be conducted at the five ports of Guangzhou, Xiamen, Fuzhou, Ningbo and Shanghai and the "Treaty of Humen" as supplements to the "Treaty of Nanjing." This was the first unequal treaty of national betrayal and humiliation in Chinese history signed by the corrupt and incompetent Qing Dynasty which knuckled under to foreign aggressive forces. This incident became a milestone on the road of China's social development. It marked China's gradual transition from an independent sovereign country into a semicolonial and semifeudal country.

The United States and France also took advantage of China's misfortune and compelled China to sign respectively with them in 1844 the "Treaty of Wangxia" and the "Treaty of Huangpu."

What sovereign rights did China surrender as a result of signing the "Treaty of Nanjing" and other treaties?

1. The ceding of Hong Kong. Hong Kong was a gate to China and was of great economic and military importance. The "Treaty of Nanjing" stipulated that "in view of the necessity of repairing damage to British trading ships which come from a great distance, a place on the coast should be provided for this purpose and for storing materials for repairs." The "Treaty of Nanjing" set an abominable precendent for foreign aggressors to occupy China's territory by means of war.

2. Paying large indemnities. The "Treaty of Nanjing" stipulated that China was to pay Britain 21 million silver dollars for "losses" resulting from the war, including 6 million silver dollars as compensation for confiscated British opium, 12 million for its war expenses, and 3 million "on account of debts due to British subjects" by some of the hong merchants. This sum was equivalent to one-third of the yearly revenue of the Qing government. These large indemnities increased the burden of the Chinese laboring people and seriously wrecked China's social economy.

3. Tariff agreements. The "Treaty of Nanjing" stipulated that "a fair and regular tariff of export and import duties and other dues on British goods is to be fixed by mutual agreement." This meant that China had no right to decide its own tariffs -- they had to be agreed with the British. And, under the general regulations for trade with Britain through the five ports, the tariff rate on import goods was fixed at 5 percent. Thus China lost its sovereign rights in tariffs.

4. The opening of five ports. The "Treaty of Nanjing" stipulated that China was to open Guangzhou, Fuzhou, Xiamen, Ningbo and Shanghai to foreign trade. The opening of these five ports effectively completely opened the doors to southeastern China. As a result of this and the conclusion of the agreement on customs tariffs, commodities from capitalist countires flooded in, turning China into a market for the Western capitalist countries to dump their goods and a place for obtaining cheap raw materials. Moreover, the "Treaty of Nanjing" and its supplements also stipulated that Britain had the right to accredit consuls and relevant officials to the five ports and British merchants were allowed to bring their families with them and to lease land and build houses for permanent residence there. A "concession" is a country within another. There, foreign aggressors were able to enforce a colonial system of control and use it as a base to strengthen their control of China politically, militarily, economically and culturally.

5. Consular jurisdiction. The "General Regulations" for trade with Britain at the five ports provided that when a British subject committed a crime in these ports, Chinese officials had no power to punish him and "the British Government would enact the laws necessary to attain this end, and the British consul concerned would be empowered to put them in force." This started the so-called system of "consular jurisdiction" in a semicolonial China and foreigners were no longer subject to the Chinese law. This was a serious violation of China's juridical power.

6. The most-favor-nation treatment. The "Treaty of Humen" stipulated that "should China grant additional privileges or immunities to any of the subjects or citizens of other foreign countries, the same privileges and immunities will be extended to and enjoyed by British subjects." According to this stipulation, Britain acquired the privilege of unilateral "most-favored-nation treatment." Similar stipulations were also found in the Sino-U.S. "Treaty of Wangxia" and the Sino-French "Treaty of Huangpu." This one-sided most-favored nation treatment of equally obtaining new rights and privileges from China was a most serious violation of China's sovereignty. In the course of foreign aggression in China, all the aggressors acquired similar rights or privileges whenever any country was entitled to a right or privilege and thus China was wantonly trampled upon.

7. Freedom to do missionary work. The Sino-French "Treaty of Huangpu" stipulated: "The local Qing officials should severely punish any trespassers in French churches and cemeteries." The Qing government should ensure the French people's freedom to do missionary work. In 1845, the French aggressors again took advantage of the conclusion of the treaty and threatened the Qing government with gunboats, compelling it to give an explicit order, which read: "Since Catholicism encourages people to be good and is entirely different from paganism, its propagation should no longer be prohibited." In this way, foreign aggressors obtained the right to do missionary work in China and religion became an important tool of imperialist cultural aggression.

The "Treaty of Nanjing" and other unequal treaties which were signed after the defeat in the opium war had a tremendous and far-reaching influence on Chinese society.

Politically, China began to lose its independence.-- Before the opium war, although China was a backward feudal country, it was a country with territorial integrity and sovereignty. The opium war fettered China with unequal treaties. China's territory was divided up, its sovereignty in jurisdiction, customs and so on was impaired and it was reduced from an independent feudal country into a semicolonial country.

Economically, with the intrusion of Western capitalism, great changes began to occur in China's social economic structure. On the one hand, a large quantity of capitalist commodities imported by Britain, for exmaple, was some 9 billion pounds sterling in 1837 and was suddenly increased to 23 billion pounds sterling in 1845. [figures as published] This first caused the decline of the handicraft industries in areas along the coast. The dumping of textile goods produced by machines and other foreign goods ruined China's household handicraft industries, causing the disintegration of her self-sufficient natural economy which was a combination of a small-scale peasant economy and handicraft industries. On the other hand, the intrusion of capitalism hastened the growth of a commodity economy in China. After the war, the export volume of tea and silk rose sharply. In 12 years, 1843-55, the export volume of tea increased by 500 percent, reaching 100 million pounds and the export volume of silk increased by some 2,000 percent, reaching over 20,000 bales. The five ports open to foreign trade, especially Shanghai, began to set up mills to process tea and silk for export. However, this commodity economy was not an independent one at the very beginning but was manipulated by foreign capital and had strongly semicolonial characteristics.

Ideologically, the Chinese ideological circles were greatly stimulated and deep changes occurred in class relationships. Marx said: "Opium has not lulled the Chinese people to sleep but was awakened them instead." Some advanced thinkers of the feudal class began to shake off the yoke of decadent concepts, became more realistic, kept the whole world in mind, put forth the slogan of learning from the West and sought a road to make their country strong and prosperous. Some Chinese merchants threw in their lot with foreign merchants and comprador-merchants began to emerge. At the same time, after the war, the Qing government shifted the burden of enormous military expenditure and large indemnities into the laboring people.

The masses of the people were in extreme poverty and difficulties. This intensified the class contradictions of the Chinese society. From then on, the Chinese people's revolutionary struggle against imperialism and feudalism was ever gaining momentum and this finally brought about the great revolutionary movement of the Taiping Heavenly Kingdom.

BEIJING RIBAO URGES COMMUNIST MORALITY EDUCATION

[Commentator's article: "Persistantly Carry Out Education in Communist Morality and Ideology"]

[Text] More and more people have come to understand the importance of strengthening ideological and political work.

Over the past few years, achievements and progress in the building of socialist modernization have been closely related to the large amount of correct ideological and political work launched inside the party and among the broad masses of the people. Since we have carried out education along the line of materialistic ideology, we are able to bring order out of chaos, correct "leftist" errors, and stipulate and implement the policies and principles that comply with the new period and the new situation. Since we have shifted the focus of the party's work onto education in promoting the economy and construction, we are able to mobilize millions of cadres and the masses to plunge into the upsurge of "building the four modernizations and reviving China." Since we have launched activities to promote the "five stresses and four beauties," there has been a change for the better in the general mood and the moral standard of society. At present, we are confronted with many problems, such as criminal activities in the economic field, unhealthy trends inside the party and in society, the tendency toward bourgeois liberalization in some units and departments, and the thinking among some people that "money is everything." All of this has reminded us that we must devote major efforts to strengthening ideological and political work and must not slacken our efforts.

How should we educate our cadres, party members and the masses? Since we are communists, certainly we will educate the people with communist morality and ideology. We must also carry out patriotic education, education in social morality and professional ethics and education in arduous struggle, and the people should be guided by communist ideology. In a socialist society, how can we use other ideologies as our guidance? For example: Although there are attractive expressions in concepts such as the bourgeois theory of human nature, the bourgeois struggle of the individual and the feudal ideas of being loyal, showing filial piety and kindheartedness, which are capable of giving some illumination to some people, however, in the end, these concepts corrupt the people's minds and will do great harm to our society.

Communist Ideology and Morality Represent the Basic Interests of the Masses

Is it too unrealistic to educate the cadres, party members and the masses with communist ideology and morality? Some comrades hold that the masses now stress practicability and nobody will listen to or accept these lofty ideas.

As a matter of fact, the masses stress practicability at all times. If not for the practical interests of the masses and to free the masses from exploitation and the pain of suppression so that they will lead a happy life, why should communists lower their heads and shed blood for the revolutionary cause? If the broad masses of people do not think that the Communist Party is fighting for the practical interests of the people, why should they support the party and wage revolution with it? Only under the guidance of the correct ideology and through the arduous struggle of the people will the practical interests of the masses be gradually realized. Without the guidance of communist ideology, we would not have been able to stipulate the guiding principle and the line for the new democratic revolution or succeeded in overthrowing the three big mountains of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic capitalism, nor would we have been able to establish the socialist system in our country and score a tremendous victory in socialist revolution and construction.

The basic objective of the ongoing socialist modernization is to satisfy the incessant demands of the people in regard to their material and cultural life. Ours is a big country with a population of 1 billion. The major daily necessities such as household electrical appliances, clothing, furniture, plants, farms, houses, theatres, cultural and educational facilities and institutions...do not fall from the skies, nor can they be imported from abroad or created with illusions. Only be relying on the 1 billion people, waging arduous struggles wholeheartedly and carrying out the construction of modernization under the correct ideological guidance and the leadership of the Communist Party will the practical interests of the masses be realized. To realize this arduous task, first of all, the party members in particular cadres of the party, must have communist political consciousness, be determined, fear no sacrifice and overcome all difficulties to wage the struggle. At the same time, the broad masses of the people are required to adopt an attitude of being the masters of their own country toward labor and wage the struggle together. However, in reality, there are some erroneous ideas in society and inside the party which affect the progress of the four modernizations. For example, some units care only for the immediate individual interests at the expense of the whole. They seek help from their superiors even though they can solve the problems themselves, and they blindly import goods from abroad even though they can be manufactured at home. Some leading cadres do not actively support the advanced figures, nor do they correct the erroneous thinking of the masses. On the contrary, they consciously or unconsciously speak on behalf of the backward ideology of the masses. Some people do not have any ideals or convictions; they think only of money, are lazy on their jobs and lack discipline. In tackling these questions, if we do not carry out education in communist morality and ideology and instead allow them to run rampant, how can the productive forces of our society be greatly promoted? If the productive forces are not promoted, how can we solve the practical problems of the masses such as housing, employment, education, transportation and communications and commodity prices?

The Relationship Between Carrying Out Communist Education and Implementing Socialist Policies

Will there be contradictions between educating the people with communist morality and ideology and implementing socialist policies? No. There will be no contradictions if we can get a good grasp of them. Furthermore, the two are complementary.

Since the third plenary session, on the basis of upholding independence and reconstructing our country through our own efforts we have practiced the open-door policy, and on the basis of upholding socialist planned economy we have carried out various policies to enliven the economy. Evidence has proven that this is absolutely correct and we must continue to implement these policies unswervingly. However, we must at the same time notice that all these policies are stipulated under the guidance of the communist ideological system in connection with the actual situation of our country and with the objective of realizing communism. If we deviate from the guidance of communist ideology and if our cadres do not understand these policies, or if they have "leftist" or "rightist" misinterpretations and deviations of these policies, in implementing them they might do everything in their own way, contradict or abandon their leadership responsibility, carry out their duties improperly and have an incorrect orientation. For example, the existing principle of "distribution according to work" does comply with the development of the productive forces. This is beneficial for the masses to integrate their work with socialist construction. However, from the bourgeois point of view, if the masses are guided to care for their individual immediate interests, if they are preoccupied with money to the extent that they want more money and less work, then the principle of "from each according to his ability, to each according to his needs" will be violated. Only if we educate the masses with the collective ideology, the attitude of being the master of one's own country, the view of serving the people wholeheartedly and the spirit of fear neither hardship nor death will enhance the political consciousness of the masses, and only then will they display their ability in work and only then will the principle of distributing salary according to their work be effectively and smoothly carried out.

We must bear in mind that we should educate the people with communist morality and ideology and must not forget it after practicing some policies of the socialist historical stage. Nor should we carry out advanced communist policies now just because we have carried out education in communism.

Why Is the Party's Ideological and Political Work Accepted by the Masses?

Will the broad masses of people accept education in communist morality and ideology? Some comrades believe that it is difficult to produce the desired effect in ideological education, and they are downhearted when a considerable number of the masses do not accept their education at certain times and places. Their confidence in doing a good job of ideological and political work is dampened.

It is true that ideological work is not an easy task. People's ideas and viewpoints are formulated over a long time and it is unlikely that they will be changed overnight. The so-called "set up a pole and see its shadow" [get instant results] is only an idealistic fantasy. If people can easily change their mind, why should the party reiterate the importance of ideological work? Why should it mobilize the communists to bring their exemplary vanguard role into full play? We believe the people will understand the objective law of things sooner or later and the thinking of most people will be changed along the right track. To carry out ideological work is nothing more than promoting such changes. The political consciousness of the masses is different, and some are higher than others. Some might undergo a rapid change while others are slower. Some people might undergo a rapid change on some aspects but this may not be the case with other aspects. Some people may have a relapse after they have changed their thinking. Only a very small number of people will never change their minds. In carrying out ideological and political work, we must distinguish different situations and try everything to find the right key to open the hearts of the people. Although this is arduous work, since what we advocate is truth and what we propagandize are the principles identical to the basic interests of the people, the majority of the people will gradually understand and accept them. During the new democratic revolutionary period, our party advocated concepts of communist morality and ideology and the spirit to sacrifice ourselves for the people's interests, such as being selfless and being utterly devoted to others without any thought of oneself. A large number of warriors who had communist political consciousness emerged and united the broad masses of the people and succeeded in the revolution. Today our socialist society is already at the initial state of communism and we have laid the economic foundation of socialist public ownership and the condition for carrying out education in communist morality and ideology is much better than before. If we persist in education in communist morality and ideology, we will score significant results. Actually, this is a matter of fact. Some people say the youths do not like political lessons. However, was not Li Yanjie's report well received by the youths? In many schools, a large number of teachers have emerged who are good at giving political lessons. The situation of students disliking political lessons is changing. There has been great progress in the thinking of undergraduates over the past 2 years. Among 1981 graduates, some 90 percent of them have submitted to the distribution of the state. The broad masses of people have more confidence in the communist cause. This is the evidence witnessed by all. The success of activities during the "all-people courtesy and decorum month" launched in March this year, which takes communist ideology as the guiding principle, has illustrated that the success of anything depends on human effort and the important thing is being serious. If we adhere to proceeding from the actual situation and following in order and advancing step by step and by carrying out a large number of practical activities which the masses will accept, most of the masses will gradually change and enhance their ideology.

Giving Priority to Correcting Ideological and Political Work Is Upholding Materialism

A small number of comrades worried that idealism would be promoted when they heard of giving priority to ideological and political work.

During the 10 years of internal disorder, idealism ran rampant and the cadres and people endured untold sufferings. It is necessary to have some worries. We cannot say that these pernicious influences were all eliminated. It is a long-term arduous task for the ideological front that we continue to heighten our vigilance and eliminate the influences of idealism. However, first of all, distinguishing the basic differences between materialism and idealism depends on whether we have given priority to material wealth or to spiritual wealth, rather than how we arrange the order of work. If we do not proceed from reality and instead try to cheat and suppress the masses by assuming ideas from books and by telling lies and giving empty talks, we are advocating idealism. This is what we must resolutely oppose. However, this does not mean that people will naturally understand the objective reality. It is very common for people to make incorrect judgments because their thinking methods are incorrect, or because they have not understood the essence of things. They can only see the superficial phenomenon or take a one-sided approach to things because they are limited by their cognitive ability. Certainly they need people's help, and this is exactly what our ideological and political work is doing. The objective of our ideological education is to correctly manifest the objective reality and to tell the truth. Moreover, we are allowing the materialistic line to help the people enhance their own understanding and reform their objective world. In the course of carrying out education, we have to adhere to the law of understanding, recognize the differences and help the people to improve themselves step by step. It is in doing ideological and political work like this that we can uphold the principle of materialism. How can putting ideological and political work in command be denounced as promoting idealism? All ideological and political work, though bearing the hallmark of materialism, can only be regarded as idealistic rubbish if it ignores the following: that the economic basis of public ownership system objectively exists, that this economic basis requires people to cultivate selfless thinking which is adaptable to it, and that personal interests are related, in the final analysis, to the development of the state and collective economy in society today, but preaches the so-called rationality of individualism, and encourages a retrogression in people's thinking.

Those Who Are in Charge of Ideological and Political Work Must Improve Their Own Political Understanding

To defeat capitalism, feudalism and petit bourgeois thinking is a great historical task. Those who educate others must first accept education. Therefore, we Communist Party members, especially the party's cadres and the party's workers on the ideological and theoretical fronts, must first strengthen their own studies and improve their own political understanding. They must try their best to safeguard the purity of communism, to improve their own communist consciousness, use the communist ideological system as a reference point to observe and handle various problems, and regulate their own speeches and acts. Once we can use ourselves as examples, make efforts to probe into the law governing ideological work and carry out ideological and political work among the masses, the broad masses of people will closely unite around the party and the spiritual civilization of our society will be greatly improved. Thus, healthy and prosperous development of modernization construction will be guaranteed.

ZHOU ZIJIAN MARKS ANHUI RIBAO ANNIVERSARY

[Text] According to a report from ANHUI RIBAO, all ANHUI RIBAO staff members and workers jubilantly gathered together at a meeting on 1 June to mark the 30th anniversary of the founding of the newspaper. Attending the meeting were responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, the provincial people's government, the provincial CPPCC committee and the provincial military district Zhou Zijian, Li Shinong, Wang Guangyu, Yang Weiping, Su Yu, Lan Ganting, Yu Guangmao, Cheng Guanghua, Hu Kaiming, (Shi Junjie), Liu Zhengwen and Zhu Nong.

Zhou Zijian, acting first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, delivered a speech at the meeting. He pointed out: Every day newspapers and radio and television stations report major domestic and international events and popularize the party's line, guidelines and policies. By making use of the mass media, leading comrades at all levels and the broad masses are able to understand the current situation, know the present trend well, broaden their knowledge and conscientiously implement the party's guidelines and policies. The work of journalism has always been an important part of the party's cause. It is absolutely necessary and essential. He said: To carry out the work of journalism well, it is necessary to repeatedly disseminate the party's major guidelines and policies, maintain close touch with reality, incessantly carry out propaganda activities in light of various problems and guide the masses to forge ahead and win fresh victories. He urged all the people concerned to identify themselves with the masses, go deep into the realities of life and gather firsthand information to write more and better news reports.

The meeting was presided over by (Mao Fuxian), deputy secretary of the ANHUI RIBAO party committee and the newspaper's deputy chief editor. (Sun Zhongrong), deputy secretary general of the provincial CCP committee and secretary of the ANHUI RIBAO party committee, spoke at the meeting. Also attending the meeting were responsible comrades of the departments concerned under the provincial CCP committee, leading comrades of other journalistic units in Anhui and Hefei and comrades of correspondent's stations of journalistic units at the central level stationed in Anhui. (Liu Xin), deputy director of the provincial radio broadcast administration and the Anhui broadcasting station, and (Liu Weifu), director of the editorial department of the Anhui branch of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, delivered speeches to warmly celebrate the 30th anniversary of the founding of the newspaper.

FUJIAN MEETING ON MAO'S MILITIA WORK INSTRUCTION

OW101005 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1120 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] To mark the 20th anniversary of the publication of Chairman Mao's instruction "Militia Work Must Be Carried Out Organizationally, Politically and Militarily," the political department of the Fujian Provincial Military District held a discussion meeting of representatives of militia heroes and models in Xiamen on 8 and 9 June.

The militia heroes and models present at the meeting restudied Chairman Mao's instruction that militia work must be carried out organizationally, politically and militarily, looked back on the course of the militia's struggle in Fujian Province in every historical period, spoke glowingly of the excellent situation in militia work since the 3d plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee and made valuable suggestions on further strengthening militia building. They expressed their determination to carry forward the glorious tradition of militia work, to be good advisers to party committees at various levels, to do a good job in passing on experience, giving help and setting examples, to influence the vast numbers of cadres and militiamen with their own exemplary actions and to make still greater contributions to the entire province's socialist economic construction and militia building in the historical period.

On the morning of 9 June, (Huang Shunli), veteran militia model, and (Li Zhenghan), model militia battalion commander of the (Meilei) production brigade, gave talks respectively on the militia's glorious tradition and on their achievements in combating smuggling and resisting corruption to all commanders and fighters of units under the Xiamen municipal people's armed forces department, the city's full-time people's armed forces cadres and militia battalion cadres.

The meeting made a proposal to all militia units in the province to do a still better job of militia work organizationally, politically and militarily.

JIEFANG RIBAO URGES PUBLIC SECURITY IMPROVEMENT

OW041217 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 26 May 82 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Make Continued Efforts To Improve Social Order"]

[Excerpts] Yesterday the municipal intermediate people's court announced an order from the municipal higher people's court to give three intentional murderers the death penalty. The murderers were immediately escorted to the execution ground and put to death. In the meantime, an announcement was made on the lenient treatment of a robber who had voluntarily surrendered himself to the authorities concerned. This was another powerful action taken by the political and judicial departments in our municipality to strike at and divide criminal offenders in an effort to ensure a stable social order and to protect the people's interests.

Since June last year, our municipality has firmly acted on the guidelines of the public security forum held by the five big cities in the country. Political and judicial departments have relied on the organizations at various levels and the broad masses to crack criminal cases and confiscate weapons used in criminal activities. Fairly good results have been achieved in dealing heavy and prompt blows at major criminal offenders according to law and in giving publicity to the socialist legal system.

However, we should not overrate our achievements in consolidating our social order. We can only say that now the public security in Shanghai is better than a year ago, but we cannot say that there has been a remarkable improvement. Still less can we say that there has been a radical improvement. Actually, the present situation is far less satisfactory if we compare it with the good social order before the "Cultural Revolution." Now there are still many factors for instability in society, and there is still the serious issue of the existence of class struggle under the new historical conditions. Consolidating public security in society is a continuing, complicated and arduous task. We should avoid the slightest indifference and laxity and should not relax our work for a single day. Otherwise, our public security situation will relapse, and we will lose the achievements which we have already made. What we must do is to rely on the action of the whole party and the coordination of all departments concerned in trying to further improve our public security. Now some comrades lack an adequate understanding of the seriousness and complexity of the public security problem, and for this reason they sometimes pay attention to it and sometimes not. Others fail to do as much as they should in implementing the principle of strengthening public security in various ways. Their actions are slow and necessary measures are not implemented. Still others regard the consolidation of public security as a task for political and judicial departments only and think that it has nothing to do with themselves. Above all, some comrades do not fully understand the instruction in the 13 April "decision" made by the CCP Central Committee and the State Council: "While striking at the serious criminal activities in the economic sphere, it is necessary to resolutely investigate and deal with the serious activities in violation of law and discipline in other fields." Because of this, they have recently grasped the question of striking at serious economic criminals, but ignored the work of consolidating security and order within their departments and in society. All these problems deserve our attention and should be corrected.

Recently the municipal public security bureau has made arrangements with its subordinate organs to strengthen the public security work in the summer season. All departments and units are requested to actively support this work and make coordinated efforts.

In sum, we must take resolute action to deal heavy and prompt blow at serious criminal offenders. At the same time, every effort should be made to reduce and eliminate the factors that may contribute to violations of the law. We must see to it that our social order will be further improved this summer and that there will be a conspicuous turn for the better before the end of this year.

SHANGHAI SCIENCE, TECHNICAL INFORMATION MEETING

OW101001 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] The Shanghai scientific and technological information work conference opened on the afternoon of 9 June at the cultural square. Mayor Wang Dachan stressed at the meeting that to change the present situation in which scientific and technological information work in Shanghai has failed to meet the requirments of economic development, the leaderships at all levels should understand the urgency of strengthening informational work and make a breakthrough in all fields. Wang Daohan also pointed out: The quality of some light industrial products made in Shanghai has declined to a very serious degree. One major cause is that we have lagged behind other fraternal provinces and cities in informational work and introduction of new technology. He said: It is time that the sleeping rabbit woke up. If we let valuable time slip by, it will be very difficult to catch up later. Wang Daohan called for scientific and technological information work to be more closely linked to the economy and society and to become wide-ranging, fast, fine and accurate.

(Xu Yan), vice chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Scientific and Technological Commission, spoke at the meeting on strengthening scientific and technological information work. He pointed out: From now on, when important contributions are made in obtaining information on results of scientific and technological research, not only those who have made the scientific and technological achievements but also the scientific and technological information workers should be rewarded. Wu Heng, adviser to the State Scientific and Technological Commission, attended the meeting and made a speech. The meeting will continue until 16 June.

SHANGHAI ATTEMPTS TO INCREASE GRAIN YEILDS

[Text] The chief reason for the decline of grain yield in Shanghai suburbs lies in the lack of breakthrough in agricultural science and technology, the weekly WORLD ECONOMIC HERALD [SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO] reports. The peasants in the suburbs of Shanghai achieved grain yield of 800 kilogrammes per mu in 1978 and 1979. However, the per-mu yield declined to 600 kilogrammes in recent years, the same quantity as in the early 1970's. As the Shanghai suburbs have comparatively advanced conditions for agriculture, this is considered abnormal.

There were five breakthroughs in grain production in Shanghai in the past 30 years. The grain yield per mu of 400 kilogrammes was achieved in 1963, 500 kilogrammes in 1966, 600 kilogrammes in 1970, 700 kilogrammes in 1973, 800 kilogrammes in 1978. These five breakthroughs results mainly from improvements on agricultural technology.

The past experiences show five points for improving the present condition. The first is continual improving of breeds, which played an important role in the upgrading grain output in 1950's. The second is the renovation of cultivation techniques. The close planting has been adopted for years and there is no further progress. The third is reform of the cropping systems. Changing from double cropping to triple cropping annually in 1963 brought about the breakthrough of 800 kilogrammes per mu yield. The fourth is the improvement of water, soil and fertilizer conditions. The peasants in the suburbs of Shanghai reformed 874,000 mu farmland and brought more than 30,000 mu under irrigation in the past years. The fifth is the mechanization of agriculture, which had been one of the main elements in the upgrowth of grain output in the past years. But in the last two years, the labor force for grain production was reduced while there was no improvement on the mechanization.

PLA UNITS MEET ON MILITIA WORK IN ZHEJIANG

OW071429 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Nanjing PLA units recently held a meeting in Jiaxing municipality, Zhejiang, on militia work. Duan Fanjing, deputy commander of the Nanjing PLA units, delivered a speech, "Consolidate and Improve Work Organizationally, Politically and Militarily." Also speaking at the meeting were Deputy Chief of Staff of the headquarters (Xu Wei), Deputy Director of the Political Department Liu Yaozong, and Deputy Political Commissar Zhang Yuhua of the Nanjing PLA units.

On the basis of the guidelines laid down in the directive issued by the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, the General Staff Headquarters, the General Political Department and the General Logistics Department, the meeting studied militia work for this winter and next spring and called on various localities to strengthen militia organs organizationally. It pointed out: It is necessary to strengthen political work and military training among militiamen. It hoped that party committees at all levels would strengthen their leadership over militia work, put militia work on a solid basis organizationally, politically and militarily, and consolidate and improve the results in readjusting militia organs.

Attending the meeting were leading cadres from Jiangsu and Zhejiang, the Anhui Military District, the Shanghai garrison command and various military subdistricts concerned, as well as the leading comrades of the people's armed forces departments in some counties and municipalities. Also attending the meeting were representatives of the model militiawomen's company in (Beisha) commune in Zhejiang's Dongtou County; (Wang Shengmo), adviser to the Nanjing PLA units; Liu Yifu, vice governor of Zhejiang; and responsible comrades of the Jiaxing Prefectural CCP Committee.

PRIMARY SCHOOLS IN RURAL SICHUAN SAID IGNORED

[By XINHUA reporter Shi Wenyan]

[Excerpts] Chengdu, 9 Jun (XINHUA) -- Recently I conducted an investigation on the situation among primary schools in the rural areas of Sichuan Province. I found that in some localities attention has not been paid to primary school education; school buildings and education equipment are damaged and teaching quality is very poor. We should pay attention to these problems and immediately take effective measures to solve them.

In Hechuan County, I witnessed how rural primary schools have been abused. For instance, the Zhongxin primary school of Huilong commune used to have a fairly large sports ground with two basketball courts on it. At present the sports ground has been nibbled away by nearby residents and become smaller and smaller every day.

According to cadres in charge of culture and education in some district of Hechuan County, encroachment on the properties and buildings of rural primary schools and theft of their educational equipment have been quite serious. As many as 13 sports grounds in the country are being used as sites for village fairs. The Hechuan County People's Government in January this year issued a notice prohibiting by formal decree any encroachment on school property, but it has produced very little effect.

To my knowledge, similar situations also exist in other parts of eastern Sichuan.

Yongchuan Prefecture enrolled 230,710 first-grade pupils in 1976, but only 163,000 of them stayed until graduation in 1981; and only some 15,000 of them bassed both the language and mathematics tests in the graduation examination. Wenjiang Prefecture, Sichuan's richest prefecture, enrolled some 166,000 first-grade pupils in 1976. About 130,000 of them finished the 5 years of schooling, but only some 36,400 of them passed the graduation examination. As far as I know, of the 15.62 million students in primary schools in Sichuan Province at present, 14.44 million are attending primary schools run by communes and production brigades. Many rural primary school students quit school before they finish the full course and many fail to meet graduation standards. Unless we take effective measures to improve the situation, it will not only be hard to guarantee the good quality of new students of junior middle schools, but it will also produce more illiterates and semiilliterates in the rural areas.

SICHUAN CADRE RESISTANCE TO ECONOMIC CRIME DRIVE

HK100337 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Excerpts] In the struggle against serious economic crime, the Mianyang Municipal CCP Committee has strengthened leadership, overcome resistance and continually carried out the struggle in depth.

After the urgent circular of the CCP Central Committee was transmitted, the municipal CCP committee standing committee appointed comrades to take charge of this work and also set up a work group. The departments concerned took full stock of the clues to economic crimes already turned up in the municipality. A certain degree of success was achieved in the struggle. However, some new resistance arose as the struggle went deeper. The leaders of some units were unable to distinguish between the policy of enlivening the domestic economy and opening up to the world on the one hand and economic crime on the other; they were overcautious, indecisive, and afraid of causing new miscarriages of justice. Certain leaders, who pursued unhealthy trends, dared not bother about or investigate economic crime. In particular, action was very slow and hesistant in following up clues that involved leading departments and responsible cadres. In addition, certain cadres failed to take a clear-cut attitude and normal mood toward certain cases whose clues led to their own unhealthy trends. As a result, the struggle was unable to unfold in depth.

In view of this, the municipal CCP committee convened an enlarged meeting of its standing committee, and organized the leading cadres of the departments, committees and bureaus to seriously study the central documents and deepen their understanding of the importance of this struggle. The principal responsible comrades of the municipal CCP committee personally spoke with leading cadres who pursued unhealthy economic trends or who had certain links with economic criminals in their work, in order to heighten their understanding and help them to spontaneously accept the masses' correct opinions, seriously sum up experiences and lessons, and have a good cleansing at a suitable time. (Li Yuqi), vice chairman of the municipal economic committee and director of the No 2 light industry bureau, who continued to conceal his errors and seriously interfered with investigations, was immediately suspended from duty for self-examination. This decision was publicly announced at a rally of party members in the municipal organs. This evoked a strong response throughout the city. The cadres and masses voluntarily came forward to expose his problems. To improve leadership over this struggle, the municipal CCP committee and government have appointed a leadership group composed of four municipal CCP committee standing committee members, two vice mayors and one municipal people's congress standing committee vice chairman, and transferred more than 100 cadres from the municipal organs to carry out case investigations. As a result of these efforts, 8 economic cases involving more than 1,000 persons have been exposed, and 46,000 yuan have been recovered. More than 60 newly-discovered major clues are now being followed up.

SICHUAN REPORTS INCREASE IN SUMMER GRAIN HARVEST

[Summary] Chengdu, 10 Jun (XINHUA) -- Sichuan Province, despite serious floods last year, reports a good harvest of summer grains and oil-bearing crops, according to provincial authorities. The total output on over 2.9 million hectares of summer grains was 650,000 tons more than last year, an increase of 10.9 percent. The output of rapeseed, which was grown on some 587,000 hectares, increased by 200,000 tons over the previous year, registering a jump of 28 percent. Provincial government officials say that sound policies, hard work, fewer plant diseases and pests, and good weather in the harvesting season contributed to this year's good summer crops. Institution of the job responsibility system, they say, has aroused the enthusiasm of the peasants for production. Earlier this year, the province organized a large number of agricultural technicians to introduce scientific farming methods and popularize good strains of wheat and rape. This raised the province's per-hectare yield of wheat by 352.5 kilograms.

County-Level Work Discussed

HK031515 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] The 13th session of the 3d people's congress standing committee of the Xizang Autonomous Region continued its plenary meeting on the morning of 31 May. At the meeting, Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo delivered a report on carrying out the work of people's congress standing committees at the county level. In his report, Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo said: "Since they were set up in the second half of 1981, the people's congress standing committees in various counties have done a lot of work within the limits of their authority as prescribed by law. They have made investigation and studied important and major problems which emerged in their counties and adopted corresponding resolutions and decisions on these problems. They carried out education in socialist democracy and the legal system among people of all nationalities. They supervised the work of people's governments, people's courts and people's procuratorates at the corresponding level. They decided on the appointments and removals of state personnel and contacted deputies of people's congresses at the corresponding level. They handled the letters the people had sent in and the complaints the people had made when they called. They also formulated regulations for their own work. In order to improve the work of the people's congress standing committees at the county level, it is necessary to turn the committees into the people's authoritative power organs step by step. In his report, Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo gave his opinions on the problem of strengthening the people's congress standing committees ideologically, professionally and organizationally. Ideologically, Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo said, it is necessary to emphasize a high degree of democracy and to reinforce the work of the people's congress standing committees at the county level in the course of building socialist society. This is the essential substance in building a highly democratic political socialist system, and is also one of the major measures in strengthening organization. Local people's congress standing committees at various levels are permanent organs in the local people's congresses at and above the county level. When the people's congresses are not in session, their standing committees are the organs which exercise state power. The tasks of local people's congress standing committees at various levels are ensuring proper implementation of the constitution and laws as well as the policies of the party and state in their respective administrative areas. However, the people's congress standing committees do not take part in concrete administrative work. They must, under the leadership of the party committees at their corresponding levels, carry out their work by following the mass line in accordance with opinions and demands of the masses. Working according to provisions of the law is characteristic of the work of the people's congress standing committees. The standing committees are organs of power and also functioning organs. They must adhere to the party's leadership. On strengthening vocational work, Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo said that the people's congress standing committees exercise their functions and powers under the party's leadership and according to provisions of the law. This is their duty.

To put it briefly, the people's congress standing committees at the county level have three rights -- the right to make decisions, the right to exercise supervision and the right to appoint and remove state personnel. They must work by resolutely relying on local organizations. They must discuss and decide on major issues in their respective administrative areas in line with the actual local conditions. This is what we refer to as the right to make decisions. In accordance with the actual situation in our region, the people's congress standing committees at the county level have the right to make decisions on the following five important affairs: 1) on the observance and implementation of the line, principles, policies, constitution and the laws of the party and the state and on the carrying out of decisions made by the regional party committee and government; 2) on the problems which closely relate to the production and life of the masses; 3) on the problems concerning nationalities, religions and important policies; 4) on the affairs related to economic construction, especially to culture, education, public health and popularization of science and technology; 5) on some regulations which everyone in the whole country must abide by.

In line with the actual local conditions and in accordance with the central task of the party, the people's congress standing committees in various counties must know how to grasp problems of prime importance in their localities and to list the major points of these problems for their discussion and the making of decisions. Supervising the work of governments, courts and procuratorates at the corresponding level is an important expression of how the people's congress standing committee exercise their duty of governing the country on behalf of the people. They mainly supervise how the principles, policies, constitution and decrees of the party and state are bing carried out and how the resolutions and decisions adopted by them are being implemented. The methods for this purpose can be taken as hearing reports on certain special topics from the local governments or other departments concerned and reports on how the governments carry out the resolutions by the people's congress standing committees, organizing people's congress deputies to make investigations or members of the standing committees to make inspections, or hearing reports from two sides. In accordance with the organizational law for local people's congresses, the people's congress standing committees at the county level can decide on appointments and removals of leading members of local governments, cadres of county courts, deputy procurators of county procuratories, and members of the local discipline inspection committees. On the problem of strengthening organization, Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo said that there must be a chairman and vice chairman who are specially in charge of the work of the people's congress standing committees at the county level, under which there is an office with professional staff. It is necessary to properly arrange the convention of all meetings of the people's congress standing committees, and to strengthen ties between the people's congress standing committees at the regional and county levels. Liaison workers are needed for contacts between the two levels.

Ending of Session

HK040237 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Summary] The 13th session of the 3d Xizang Regional People's Congress Standing Committee was held from 25 May to 2 June. The meeting conveyed the spirit of the 22d and 23d Sessions of the NPC Standing Committee. The representatives seriously discussed the draft of the revised constitution and the report on the work of county people's congress standing committees delivered by committee Vice Chairman Chen Jingbo. The meeting adopted a resolution on organizing the people of the region to discuss the draft of the revised constitution, and approved in principle provisional regulations on the control of urban and rural trade fairs and on investigating speculative activities. The meeting also approved the proposal of standing committee Chairman Yang Dongsheng on appointing Namgyal as an additional standing committee member. Vice Chairman Raidi presided at the concluding session on 2 June. Also present at the meeting were Vice Chairmen Chen Jingbo, Dege Gaisan Wangdui, Ciren Lamu and Duojiecaiden and Secretary General Namgyal. Present as observers were Pagbalha Geleg Namgya, vice chairman of the regional people's government, Zi Cheng, president of the regional higher people's court; Deputy Regional Procurator (Zhang Chengqing); and responsible comrades of regional departments concerned and of prefectural and county people's congress standing committees.

HEILONGJIANG RIBAO ON RELAXATION OF POLICIES

[Article by Qiu Zhen [6726 4176]: "A Discourse on Relaxing Policies"]

[Text] At present, some people are complaining about the practice of relaxing policies, and they think that all the various criminal activities that have cropped up in the economic field have stemmed from this practice. This is a very wrong belief. The relaxation of policies that the CCP Central Committee has decided to undertake is not aimed at giving up restrictions that we have set in our policies, at lowering the standard to be maintained in carrying out our policies or giving up our principles. On the contrary, it is aimed at correcting the previous erroneous policies of ultraleftism in light of our country's actual conditions and making our policies more suited to the demands of the socialist modernization of our country.

In order to achieve this aim, we must do the following two things: First, we should bring order out of chaos and resolutely correct the "leftist" policies of the past. For example, our policies of organizing cooperatives in rural areas were correct and we achieved good results by carrying out these policies. But, under the guidance of the "leftist ideology," we began to adopt the erroneous principle of "the larger the cooperatives and the more they are publicly owned, the better." Thus, we gave scope only to the activities of the "big collectives" and deprived the commune members of all their "small freedom" in carrying out family sideline undertakings. As a result, we turned ou rural economy into an economy that consisted of a unitary form of undertaking and was run with a unitary method of management. Our experiences have proved that if we had not relaxed this policy, we would not have been able to adapt our policies to the diversified degrees of development of the productive force and to the situation of uneven economic development in our rural areas.

Another example is circulation. In the past we exerted too much strict control over the purchases and marketing of commodities, and allowed only one channel for the circulation of all our commodities. Moreover, throughout the field of circulation a bureaucratic work style prevailed. This had a seriously evil impact on production and on the people's livelihood. A third example is the employment of our workers. In the past, we only allowed one channel for providing employment and thus gave rise to the phenomenon of some people being unemployed while some work went unattended because of lack of manpower. In the field of distribution there were the malpractices of "eating out of the same pot" and of paying the same remunerations to the workers regardless of whether they did their work satisfactorily or poorly and regardless of the amount of work they did. Moreover, at that time we regarded as a revisionist measure the responsibility system that assigns output quotas or tasks of production to workers and enables them to get bonuses. All this proves that we must readjust and correct our policies.

Second, the relaxation of our policies means that in order to deal with the new conditions and new problems that will crop up in our socialist modernizations, we should formulate a number of new policies that differ from those we have already adopted. Over the past few years, we have utilized the unprecedentedly favorable situation both at home and abroad and carried out the policies of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the economy at home. This is an act of carrying forward the revolutionary force and forging ahead as well as an act of bringing order out of chaos. Therefore, in a sense, we can say that this is the result of the implementation of the relaxation of our policies. This is why we say that the relaxation of our policies is aimed precisely at leading all the policies and strategies of our party onto a normal path and charting a new path for the socialist modernization of our country. By relaxing policies, we do not mean that we will relax all our policies indiscriminately, nor that people will be allowed to do whatever they like. We have set a basic restriction on all our activities. This restriction is that we must adhere to the four basic principles.

The existing production relations in our country are, on the whole suited, but in some respects unsuited to the productive force, as is the superstructure to the economic foundation. Therefore, we should adhere to our basic system and basic policies and not allow any changes in them.

What we should readjust is only that part of the production relations and superstructure that is not suited to the productive force and the economic foundation. For example, in relaxing our rural policies, all the areas are allowed to establish diversified forms of production responsibility system in light of their actual local conditions, but they all must adhere to the socialist collective road and the public ownership of land and other basic means of production without the slightest deviation.

Regarding our economic structure, in order to enliven the economy, we should enlarge the decisionmaking power of the enterprises and give full play to the regulation of the market mechanism. However, we must adhere to the principle of taking the planned economy as the core and supplementing it with the regulation of market mechanism. In order to utilize the favorable international situation and carry out the policy of opening up to the outside world, we can use foreign capital, introduce foreign technology and carry out international technical exchanges and international trade. However, we should not change the policy of preserving our independence and the policy of self-reliance. We allow some areas, communes, production teams and individuals to get rich earlier than the others, but we should adhere without deviation to the principle that people must rely on their labor to become rich and they must correctly handle the relationships between the interests of the state, the collective and the individual. Therefore, our relaxation is favorable to the development and expansion of the socialist economy and to giving full play to the socialist initiative of all sectors. It is an act to practice flexibility under the prerequisite of adhering to our principles. Our party is resolute in carrying out the relaxation of our policies, but it never upholds the fallacy of "relaxing all policies," nor does it allow the relaxation to go beyond a certain boundary. This boundary is that we should politically adhere to the four basic principles, economically persist in taking the planned economy as the core and supplement it with the regulation of market mechanism and ideologically resist the corruption of the degenerated capitalist ideology. It would be a mistake to go beyond this boundary and we are not allowed to do so. From this we can see that criminal activities in the economic field have by no means stemmed from the relaxation of policies. On the contrary, they are precisely the result of the violation of the relaxation of the policies. The problem lies precisely in the fact that leading persons in some areas and units have adopted a passive, wait-and-see attitude in relaxing policies and some of them have committed offenses against the law and discipline under the excuse of relaxing policies.

Judging from what has actually happened over the past 2 or 3 years since our relaxation of policies, we have failed to adopt certain necessary administrative measures or carry out timely ideological and political work. As a result, we have provided the evildoers with an opening and thus the criminal activities in the economic field have wantonly aggravated. For our leading organs and our cadres at all levels, the relaxation of policies never means that we can relax our leadership or work less hard. Because we have relaxed our policies, we must conscientiously study and propagate the party's policies formulated since its third plenary session and make the broad ranks of cadres and masses understand what our present policies are, which part of our policies we have relaxed and why they have been relaxed. We should ensure that they clearly know the boundary of our policies. After we have relaxed our policies, we may run into many new conditions and many new problems. For example, while we are opening up to the outside world and developing healthy international exchanges, the bourgeois degenerate ideology and lifestyle will penetrate into our country. After we have expanded the decisionmaking power of enterprises and enlivened the economy at home, some people may develop the trend of departmentalism, separatism and liberalization. We must resist the corruption of the capitalist ideology and the bourgeois lifestyle while relaxing policies. We must be able to "stand at the riverside" but "keep our shoes from getting wet." This is precisely an important task of our ideological and political work. It is also a new test facing the broad ranks of party members and cadres, especially the leading cadres at all levels. All of this tells us that policies should be relaxed. But, what is more, we should pay close attention to our ideological and political work and strengthen our leadership in order to continuously enrich and perfect our various economic principles, policies, systems and methods, and thus be able to do our work better.

LIAONING ENTERPRISES URGED TO COMBAT WASTE

SK052254 Shenyang Liaoning Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "It Is Necessary To Rely on the Masses in Vigorously Combating Waste"]

[Excerpts] Liaoning Province has achieved relatively rapid progress in production among industrial and communications enterprises, surpassing the plan set in early 1982 calling for the province to maintain a 4-percent increase and to strive for a 5-percent increase. This is very good.

However, a key problem of industrial enterprises is poor economic returns. The profit increase achieved by industrial enterprises throughout the province is lower than their output value increase. The profits gained by some departments and enterprises are lower than the average level of their 1981 returns. Some have had output increase but no increase in income. Some even have lost income while having increased their output.

Needless to say, there are many reasons for a decline in economic results. Serious waste is a prime reason. Practice has shown that economic returns will certainly be upgraded as long as enterprises are willing to do a good job in combating waste. For example, in 1981 enterprises under the Shenyang Municipal First Light Industrial Bureau surpassed their total output value of 1980 by 10 percent, but their profits handed over to the state decreased 10 percent. Thanks to a drive to combat waste in early 1982, the profit increase scored by them between January and May was over 200 percent higher than their output value increase. Experience gained in this regard by them and the Liaoyang General Petrochemical Industrial Company indicates that in combating waste it is not necessary to increase investment, equipment and personnel, or to hold training classes on advanced technology. It is very possible to get immediate results as long as leading cadres are resolutely determined to earnestly arouse the masses in the work and to closely rely on the masses in ending waste. [passage omitted]

Working comrades: Let us go into action immediately and speed up the steady expansion of the workers' contingent which enthusiastically engages in combating waste so we can organize all mighty forces to launch attacks in eliminati ; waste to make still greater contributions in building material and spiritual civilizations.

NINGXIA RIBAO ON PLANNED AGRICULTURAL MANAGEMENT

[Article by Zhu Jintang [2612 6855 1016]: "More on How To Make a Success of Managing Agricultural Planning"]

[Text] Recently, after studying Comrade Chen Yun's speech on "ensuring that the planned economy plays the major role and regulation by market mechanism the supplementary role," considering the new conditions and new problems that have arisen in agricultural production in recent years, I deeply feel that the planned economy should still play a main role after the production responsibility system in agriculture is introduced. So, it is necessary to strengthen planned management in agricultural production.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, proceeding from the levels of development of their local productive forces, communes and production teams have properly adjusted the relations of production, established and perfected various forms of production responsibility systems step by step, and fully mobilized the initiative of the peasants. The situation in the rural economy is getting better and better. This change has raised many new problems for leading organs of the party and government at all levels. These problems call for serious study and proper solution. From past practice, I found that the main problems in planned management of agricultural at present are as follows:

1. In the process of agricultural reproduction, the distribution of manpower, materials and financial resources is not reasonable enough, thus affecting the improvement of the comprehensive results in agriculture. According to the statistics in eight communes of Chuan district in Wuling County, among their 1981 results of farming, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery, only gains from farming increased owing to the bumper harvest of grain, while gains from other sectors have all dropped. The gross income after taking into account increases offsetting decreases is still lower than that of the year before by a large margin. According to a survey in a commune where the "double contract" responsibility system has been widely introduced, labor used in farming in 1981 was 9.2 percent more than in the former year, and this part of labor thus became relatively excessive, while labor used in other sectors reduced. This consequently constituted a decline in the proportions of output value achieved by forestry, animal husbandry. industry and sideline occupations in the gross output value.

2. In the process of agriculture reproduction, the development scale and growth rates of production, distribution, exchange and consumption have not been properly apportioned and dovetailed. According to Marx' theory of reproduction, the nature of production determines the aim and manner of distribution, exchange and consumption, but in a sense, distribution, exchange and consumption can restrict and affect the development of production. A great change has occurred in the manner of production since the production responsibility system was introduced, and the manner of distribution, exchange and consumption should thereby change correspondingly. In this case, if there is no guidance by state plans and the law of value blindly dominates everything, that will inevitably result in a waste of material resources and labor force. Taking an example from the production of melons and vegetables in Wuling County, because market prices in 1982 were fairly high, the growing areas in the whole county increased by nearly 100 percent in 1981, melons thus became an unsalable commodity due to the limited consumption of the masses. If planned guidance is not strengthened, the growing areas of melons and vegetables will probably reduce and the marketable volume will diminish this year, and all this may cause prices to go up again.

3. The growth of population and the production of the means of subsistence have not been balanced. After production responsibility systems were introduced, some communes and production brigades relaxed their guidance and intervention in family planning, thus resulting in a rebound in the natural growth rate of population. This rate in Guojiaqiao commune was as high as 32.7 per thousand, an increase of 3.9 per thousand over the year before. Although the 1981 output of grain in this commune was 12.7 percent higher than that of 1980, marketable grain per capita only increased by 7 jin.

In order to change this state of affairs, I think that the following matters should be properly handled for the purpose of improving planned management in agriculture:

First, it is necessary to effectively strengthen the political and ideological work in rural areas. 1) We must propagate and implement the spirit of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee. The introduction of the production responsibility system is a reform of the management system which is suited to the current level of the masses' consciousness, cadres' management skill and productive force. It cannot be regarded as "dividing the fields and working alone." 2) Leading organs at all levels should strengthen their leadership over agricultural production. Exerting planned management on the national economy is an important means by which the state can exercise its function of managing the economy and guiding the development of the national economy through unified planning. To relax the planned management of production will ultimately run against the fundamental interests of the state and people. 3) We should properly handle the relations between the state, the collective and the individual.

Second, it is necessary to do a good job in signing and implementing economic contracts. Economic contracts are provided with legal effects. Once they are signed, both contractors must scrupulously abide by their promises and jointly uphold the solemnity of contracts. At present, some production teams arbitrarily raise quotas of contracts without acquiring agreement from contracted households, thus harming the masses' interests. This practice must be straightned out. The phenomenon that some contracted households do not fufill terms specified in contracts when presenting products to the state or collectives must be eliminated as well.

Third, work out scientific systems for targets. A system of planned targets is worked out on the basis of the needs of social expanded reproduction and the overall balance in the national economy. Only based on the balance in the national economy, can the national economic plans be scientific plans. When Comrade Chen Yun says "giving the major role to planned economy," he means that on one hand, planned targets cannot rigidly control everthing like in the past and exclude the role of regulation by market mechanism; on the other hand, the practice of liberalizing everything and allowing the law of value to control everything like some localities are doing is unadvisable. The social expanded reproduction of essential materials must be guaranteed. The production of the first category of materials, such as grain, cotton and oil-bearing crops, should be controlled by state plans and it is necessary to issue mandatory targets for these items. Targets for guidance or reference can be adopted for the production of the second and third categories of agricultural sideline products, and the purchase of these items can be regulated by market mechanism, such as prices, taxes and other economic levers. Planning personnel are thereby required to hold an overall viewpoint and a scientific and scrupulous attitude, make careful investigation and study, and to work out target systems which comply with actual conditions and reflect objective laws.

Fourth, basic purchasing quotas of agricultural sideline products should be set as reasonably as possible. All unreasonable deviations should be avoided. The rate of marketing grain supplied to the state by congxing commune was 32.5 percent and production teams where each member could share over 800 jin of grain accounted for 19 percent of the total number of production teams in this commune. But things were quite different in a neighboring commune where the rate of marketing grain was only 17.7 percent and production teams with a grain share per capita of over 800 jin accounted for 42.1 percent. Such unreasonable purchasing targets are not beneficial to arousing commune members' enthusiasm. Under the principle of "keeping policies unchanged for 5 years" in a county, can we readjust some basic quotas for communes and production teams? This question is worth studying.

Agricultural production is a material production activity which combines natural reproduction with economic reproduction. Its classification is complicated by a multitude of specific elements. Moreover, production cycles are fairly long in this sphere, and there are quite a lot of factors that can affect and restrict this production. Therefore, it is rather difficult to consciously conduct regulation by planning mechanism over such a complicated process of production. In order to realize planned and proportionate development of the national economy, leading organs and planning departments of the national economy, leading organs and planning departments at all levels must work as Stalin says: "They must study this economic law, grasp it, learn how to skillfully apply it and work out plans which can completely reflect the demands of this law." ("Problems of the Socialist Economy in the Soviet Union") This will keep our agricultural economy correctly orientated toward giving the major role to planned economy and the supplementary role to regulation by market mechanism and will achieve rapid development along the socialist road.

NINGXIA DEVELOPS MINORITY TELEVISION STATION

[Text] Yinchuan, June 7 (XINHUA) -- The 10-storied building and 180-meter high tower for the new Ningxia television center have been completed. The center is expected to open next year. The central people's government has allocated 16 million yuan to Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region for the development of television. A northwest China region with a population of 3.83 million, mainly of the Hui, Han and Manchu nationalities, Ningxia now has 60,000 black and white and color television sets.

Five large TV relay stations have been built in Yinchuan, the regional capital, and Dawukou, the main coal mining area, and 20 smaller ones have been erected by district governments, factories and mines.

PREMIER SUN DISCUSSES ISSUE OF REUNIFICATION

OW101059 Taipei CNA in English 1029 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] Taipei, 10 Jun (CNA) -- Premier Sun Yun-hsuan, Thursday told Chinese and American scholars attending the 11th Sino-American conference on mainland China that there is no "Taiwan issue" -- only the "China issue" of whether there is to be "a strong and hostile Communist China or a peace-loving non-communist China." If there is to be a peaceful China, he said, the problem of China's future should be left to the decision of the Chinese people as a whole.

Premier Sun noted that the Chinese Communists had advanced a nine-point peace proposal, but said it is only "a gimmick to deceive the people of the world," and to create a "phony image of peace."

The Communists laid down two preconditions, he said: 1) acceptance of Chinese Communist sovereignty over Taiwan, and 2) invasion by force if peace talks fail. The Communists are really calling for the surrender of the Republic of China, he said, and called on the Free World to "recognize the Chinese Communist regime's conspiracy of attempting to disarm free China and communize its people through the employment of diplomatic pressure."

Free China, the premier said, is proposing to unify China on the basis of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people -- democracy, nationalism and the people's livelihood. He said these principles are intended to establish a country of the people, by the people and for the people. The three principles have already succeeded in Taiwan, Premier Sun said, and compelled the Chinese Communists to admit that mainland China cannot catch up with the Republic of China economically. The premier also noted that the Communists had followed the Republic of China's example in:

-- Recognizing the greatness of Sun Yat-sen and the success of his principles.
-- Imitating RCC export processing zones.
-- Seeking foreign capital for the expansion of exports.
-- Giving priority to agriculture.
-- Allowing limited economic individualism.

Premier Sun said the "Chinese Communist regime has been compelled to bow to reality and make an aboutface after a series of setbacks." He called on the Chinese Communists to give up their "four principles" of the socialist road, Communist Party leadership, dictatorship of the proletariat and ideological fealty to the thought of Marx, Lenin and Mao.

Chinese unification, he said, "should be based on the free will of the Chinese people as a whole." If this will is followed, he indicated, the Communists will scrap the four principles and take further steps to change their way of life. "If the political, economic, social and cultural gaps between the Chinese mainland and free China continue to narrow," Premier Sun said, the conditions for peaceful reunification can gradually mature. The obstacles to reunification will be reduced naturally with the passage of time.

He called upon the scholars to undertake studies to serve mankind's well-being and achieve "an in-depth understanding of the reality of the Chinese mainland."

Among scholars from the United States attending the conference were Kenneth Rush of the Atlantic Council of the United States, Leonard Unger of the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, former U.S. Ambassador to R.O.C., Ray S. Cline of Georgetown University, Robert F. Dernberger of the University of Michigan, Robert L. Downen of Georgetown University, Harold Hinton of George Washington University, Edward Luttwak of Georgetown University, Thomas A. Metzger of the University of California at San Diego, Jan S. Prybyla of Pennsylvania State University, Robert A. Scalapino of the University of California at Berkeley, Donald S. Zagoria of Columbia University and Parris H. Chang of Pennsylvania State University.

PRESIDENT CHIANG HAILS REAGAN ANTICOMMUNIST CALL

[Text] Taipei, 9 June (CNA) -- At the weekly meeting of the ruling party Wednesday, President Chiang Ching-kuo praised President Ronald Reagan's call for a campaign to promote democracy and consign communism to the "ash heap of history." Addressing the British Parliament Tuesday, President Reagan said: "What I am describing now is a plan and a hope for the long term, the march of freedom which will leave Marxism-Leninism on the ash heap of history...."

President Chiang said President Reagan's far-sighted call is not only a lofty ideal, but a practical step fitting the needs of humankind today to root out the disasters caused by Marxism-Leninism. Together with other peace-loving and freedom-loving peoples of the world, President Chiang said, the Republic of China will join in President Reagan's call to unleash hope and strength and "tell the world that a new age is not only possible but probable."

BAKER'S STAND ON TAIWAN RELATIONS ACT VIEWED

[Editorial: "Taiwan Relations Act Must Not Be Revised, Nor Should It Be Misinterpreted -- On Senator Baker's Statement in Peiping"]

[Text] Senator Baker, U.S. Senate Republican party leader, made some observations on the China issue at a press conference held at the close of his visit to the Chinese mainland. First, he said that the Taiwan Relations Act should not be amended. Then he said that he personally does not support a major revision or any revision of the Taiwan Relations Act at this time. The Taiwan Relations Act is a national law of the United States. It was enacted by the U.S. Congress as representative of the American people for the purpose of continuing in substance the relations between China and the United States. Senator Baker vigorously pushed for the law when it was being formulated. He even made it known that he felt this act should be made more forceful. If, because of pressure from the Chinese Communists, there is any rash talk in the U.S. Government and U.S. Congress about a revision of the act, how could they explain it to the American people? How could they expect the world to trust them? While stating his principle of no support for a revision, Senator Baker added the words "at this time" to his statement. By adding this time factor, he has obviously watered down his resolution not to support a revision. We regret that he cannot consistently maintain confidence in his support of an act for which he worked so hard. What puzzles us even more is why Senator Baker interpretted the Taiwan Relations Act in such an ambiguous way. If the news dispatched by American news agencies was correct, then Baker also said that he does not think that this act (referring to the relations act) provides for the sale of weapons, although there is no provision in the Taiwan Relations Act that bans the sale, either.

According to Baker, it seems that arms sales are something ambiguous and vague in the relations act, something not indispensable. However, a careful reading of the contents of the act tells us otherwise. Arms sales are not only clearly spelled out in it, but also regarded by it as a policy obligation of the United States. It is clearly stipulated in Article 2, section B, No 5 of the relations act that one of the policies of the United States is to "provide Taiwan with defensive weapons." Section A of Article 3 is even clearer: "In order to promote the policy prescribed in Article 2 of this act, the United States should make available to Taiwan the defense articles and defensive logistical service needed to maintain an adequate self-defense capability." According to this article, it is a policy stipulated by law that the United States should provide defensive weapons and that it has the obligation to make "available" to Taiwan an adequate force for self-defense. Therefore, whether arms should be sold to Taiwan is not a matter for the President to determine or Congress to consider. What should be determined by the President and considered by Congress is, as stated in Section B of Article 3, that "a judgment on Taiwan's need, by which the nature and quantities of such defensive articles and logistics support are decided." For example, the decision of the American President not to sell F-16 fighters to the Republic of China but F-5E aircraft instead was made on the basis of the provisions under Section B of Article 3. However, this does not mean the President can change the provisions under Section A of Article 3 and make Taiwan "lose" an adequate self-defense force. This being the case, it was also wrong for Baker to state in his press conference that "whether arms sales should be made to Taiwan is a matter for the President to determine and Congress to consider." If things are done in this way, it would constitute a clear and concrete violation of the provisions of this law. It would also run counter to the original intent of the U.S. Congress in drafting this law on behalf of the American people.

Something else which we find it very hard to understand is the statement made by Senator Baker that "the U.S. Government side obviously hopes it will not undertake further arms sales." Senator Goldwater, the senior U.S. senator who visited China as Baker was visiting the mainland, expressed an entirely different view on the issue of arms sales than that made by Baker. Answering a reporter who wondered whether there was a possibility President Reagan would stop arms sales to the Republic of China, Senator Goldwater replied: "There is no sign whatsoever. I myself serve on the Senate Armed Services Committee and I know that the President has not even thought about stopping arms sales to Taiwan." Senator Goldwater is an old friend and political partner of President Reagan. He openly stated while in Taipei that his purpose in making the visit was to convey the feelings of President Reagan and make people inside and outside the Government of the Republic of China in Taiwan note Reagan's determination to attach importance to his promise of friendship for the Republic of China. We are pleased to see Senator Goldwater arrive bearing this news. However, at the same time we feel very perplexed by the vague, contradictory remarks made by Senator Baker. As we have mentioned above, the sale of arms is prescribed in the articles of the law. If one of the original legislators should distort the original intention of the law and even go so far as to suggest that the act be scrapped, it would be something very rarely seen in the annals of the parliaments of democratic countries. The harm which the severance of diplomatic relations between China and the United States had done to the relations between the two peoples is very obvious. It was to make up for the harm that the U.S. Congress, acting in line with the wishes of the people, adopted the Taiwan Relations Act after repeated discussions and considerations. It was enacted to make sure that the administration would not act against the state interests of the United States. With his dual status as one who pushed for the enactment at the time and as the leader of the government party in Congress at present, Senator Baker should act in consistency with the principle of safeguarding the interests of both China and the United States to exercise supervison and urge the administration authorities to truthfully implement the act because this is the kind of attitude a statesman who works for the good of his country should have.

If he yields to a passing situation and recklessly makes improper statements, he would be doing something no wise man would approve. Because of the rude interference from the Chinese Communists, recent relations between China and the United States have already been affected. We hope that leading political figures like Senator Baker in America will cherish and defend this foundation which keeps the relations between Chinese and American people from being broken and guard against any rash statements and actions which would more adversely affect the relations between the two sides.

TAIWAN, ROK BEGIN ECONOMIC COOPERATION TALKS

[Text] Taipei, 10 Jun (CNA) -- The 16th Sino-Korean economic cooperation conference opened in Taipei this morning with chief delegates of both countries stressing the importance of closer cooperation to tide over the worldwide economic recession. The Korean finance minister, Na Ung-pae, and Chinese Economic Affairs Minister Chao Yao-tung agreed that the two countries face protectionism both from industrialized countries and countries with rich natural resources and that economic regionalism is on the rise. It is a time for inter-dependency in economic relations, Na said. The days that one country can think only of its own interests are gone forever, and all countries in the world should now coordinate their efforts to promote economic well-being, he added. Na said the Republic of Korea and the Republic of China sometimes find themselves competing against each other in international trade. It is not vicious competition, he stressed, but fair and good-willed competition. Due to this phenomenon, he proposed that the two countries work out a cooperation scheme to economically complement one another. Chao supported Na's views. He said it was extremely hard for the two countries to expand their trade, and proposed that the ROC and the ROK work out a system of division of labor in industrial production.

The ministerial level meeting will be held for three days at the Ministry of Economic Affairs, from June 10 to 12. It followed a three-day talk at the working level by vice ministers of the two countries.

Preliminary agreements reached during the three days of talks include: to encourage cooperation between small and medium business in both countries; to improve cooperation in the fields of energy, communications, technology and hog raising; to strengthen existing ties in the machinery, textiles, steel, electronics, and petrochemical industries; to step up the exchange of information on economic and fiscal policies between the ROC's Council for Economic Planning and Development and Ministry of Economic Affairs and their Korean counterparts.

One subject on which there has been no agreement so far is transportation of cargo by sea. Both sides said, however, that they hope to hold a second meeting on this as soon as possible, with the aim of reaching an agreement then.

HUANG HUA SPEAKS AT UN DISARMAMENT SESSION

[Text] United Nations, 11 June (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, chairman of the Chinese Government delegation, in his speech today at the second special session of the UN General Assembly devoted to disarmament, expounded China's principled stand on disarmament and put forward the principal measures for an immediate end to the arms race and for disarmament on behalf of the Chinese Government.

The Chinese state councillor and foreign minister pointed out that since the 1978 first special session of the UN General Assembly on disarmament, the world situation has remained in tension. "This has been mainly due to the acts of expansion and aggression by the hegemonists and to the intensified arms race and fierce rivalry between the two superpowers. One superpower has been pressing forward to expand its sphere of influence. Not wishing to be outdone, the other superpower has exerted its utmost to build up its strength and to try to regain its former position of world supremacy. The two superpowers have been contending for world hegemony. Their rivalry extends to all parts of the globe, thus threatening the independence and sovereignty of small and medium-sized countries as well as world peace and security. As a result, more hot spots have been created, thereby aggravating the already tense international situation."

He said that in the past four years, no real progress has been made in disarmament. "This is because the two superpowers are not at all sincere about disarmament and have instead stepped up arms expansion. They have started a new round of the arms race, each striving to improve or upgrade its own strategic and theater nuclear weapons in order to gain superiority over the other. At the same time, they have been developing conventional armaments, vying for the control of strategic areas and stepping up war preparations."

"In recent years," he said, "the people of Europe, Japan, the United States and elsewhere have launched a mass movement against the nuclear arms race of the two superpowers and for preventing nuclear war. We fully understand and sympathize with their concern for peace and for the prevention of war."

He said: "As the arms race intensifies and the menace of war increases, the Third World and other small and medium-sized countries demand all the more strongly that progress be made in disarmament and that results be achieved at this session. They are fully entitled to do so because they are always the first to suffer from the two superpowers' rivalry and from the aggression and expansion by the hegemonists."

Talking about the two superpowers' professed desire for disarmament and their various proposals or programs, Huang Hua said: "Now one superpower stresses that an arms freeze should come first while the other insists on priority for arms reduction. They appear to be talking about the need to maintain a balance of arms. In fact, each side wants to attain supremacy and to strengthen its own position in the contest for world hegemony by means of a new round of the arms race."

Huang Hua emphatically pointed out that the posturing on the part of one superpower is particularly noteworthy. Every year it produces an assortment of proposals or plans which are merely variations on the same theme. But it has taken no concrete action. One is bound to ask the following questions:

Who pledged at the last special session of the UN General Assembly on disarmament that he 'has never unleashed war and will never do so' and turned around only 1 year later to send 100,000 troops to invade and occupy Afghanistan? Were these troops sent there on a sightseeing tour instead of a combat mission?

"Why is it that this superpower which talks glibly about prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons has always refused to undertake unconditionally to 'renounce the use of nuclear weapons' against nonnuclear states?

"If this superpower is truly willing to implement 'confidence-building measures' in Asia, why does it not establish its credibility by withdrawing its troops immediately and unconditionally from Afghanistan and stopping its support for the aggression against Kampuchea?

"This superpower has been describing 'detente' in such glowing terms. Why then has it effected such a dramatic increase in its nuclear and conventional armaments precisely during the so-called 'decade of detente'? Was it trying to promote 'detente' by means of arms expansion, or it was carrying out arms expansion under the camouflage of 'detente'?"

He said: "Any cursory comparison between this superpower's pronouncements and its actions will provide the right answer." The posturing on the part of this superpower "is merely trying to cover up the truth, deceive the people of the world and divert their attention from the objectives of disarmament so that is can press on with its hegemonistic policies of nuclear arms expansion, blackmail and war preparations."

Huang Hua said: "The Chinese Government and people have always stood for genuine disarmament and made positive efforts toward progress in disarmament. Since the 1960's, the Chinese Government has on a number of occasions put forward its views and proposals on disarmament and on strengthening international security. We have always opposed the arms race and the threat or use of force in international relations, and we are against any country carrying out aggression or expansion by means of superior military strength."

We are in favor of Soviet-U.S. talks on nuclear disarmament, hoping that the two countries would take a serious and responsibile attitude to reach agreement genuinely helpful to limiting the nuclear arms race and preventing the threat of a nuclear war, and that they would not follow the same old r which has, instead of leading to the reduction of nuclear armament, left much room fo im ving their nuclear weapons."

Huang Hua reiterated the basic principles followed by the Chinese Government with regard to disarmament and put before the session the principal measures for an immediate end to the arms race and for disarmament on behalf of the Chinese Government.

Huang Hua said: "The central contents of the measure are: An agreement should be reached by all the nuclear states not to use nuclear weapons. Pending such an agreement, each nuclear state should without attaching any condition, undertake not to use nuclear weapons against nonnuclear states and nuclear weapon free zones, and not to be the first to use such weapons against each other at any time and under any circumstances."

"The Soviet Union and the United States should stop testing, improving or manufacturing nuclear weapons and should reduce by 50 percent all types of their nuclear weapons and means of delivery. After that, all other nuclear states should also stop testing, improving or manufacturing nuclear weapons and should reduce their respective nuclear arsenals according to an agreed proportion andprocedure."

"Conventional disarmament should be effected simultaneously with nuclear disarmament. As a first step, all states should undertake not to use conventional armaments for intervention or aggression against and military occupation of any country."

Explaining these measures, he said: The first step in nuclear disarmament should be the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons to be followed by their progressive reduction and ultimate destruction. "If the nuclear states refrain from threatening nonnuclear states and undertake unconditionally not to use nuclear weapons against them, then these states will have no need to possess nuclear weapons or seek foreign nuclear protection. If a nuclear state does not first ask itself whether it is posing any threat to nonnuclear states but holds them responsible and demand that they undertake not to threaten it, wouldn't that be as absurd as putting the cart before the horse?"

He continued: "It is our view that conventional disarmament should be effected simultaneously with nuclear disarmament." This is because one can only assume two circumstances in which a nuclear war may break out: Either the nuclear powers engage each other in a nuclear war from the very beginning, or they may begin by a conventional war which may escalate to a nuclear conflict. If we direct our efforts solely to the prevention of a nuclear war and relax our vigilance against a conventional war, that may still leave open the possibility of the outbreak of a nuclear war. The superpowers often use their conventional armaments as a means of aggression and expansion.

He stressed that the two superpowers should be the first to carry out substantial arms reduction in nuclear as well as conventional armaments. Since countries vary in size and military strength, we should require the stronger states to reduce their armaments so as to ensure the security of the weaker ones, rather than demand equal and simultaneous reduction of arms by all countries.

Huang Hua said: "The views that I have just outlined indicate the obligation China is prepared to undertake for disarmament. In point of fact, the Chinese Government has long repeatedly pledged to the world that at no time and under no circumstances will China be the first to use nuclear weapons and that it undertakes unconditionally not to use such weapons against nonnuclear states. This amply shows the good faith of the Chinese Government on the question of disarmament. I would like to announce here that if the two superpowers take the lead in halting the testing, improving or manufacturing of nuclear weapons and in reducing their nuclear weapons by 50 percent, the Chinese Government is ready to join all other nuclear states in undertaking to stop the development and production of nuclear weapons and to further reduce and ultimately destroy them altogether."

Huang Hua said: "The basic principles of the Chinese Government concerning disarmament and the essential measures for disarmament I have just outlined emanate from China's foreign policy of peace." "The fundamental guidelines of China's foreign policy are: Unite with the Third World and all other peace-loving countries; oppose hegemonism; and maintain world peace."

"China needs an extended period of stable and peaceful international environment in order to attain the lofty goal of her modernization program by the end of this century," he declared. "Only in peace can our economic development go forward and our people's needs be satisfied."

He said: "China's social system and fundamental interests require that we pursue a policy of peace. We do not need war and we firmly oppose a new world war. China's armaments, including her nuclear capabilities, are entirely for the purpose of self-defense against foreign aggression.

"China does not have a single soldier outside its own borders and never seeks any bases on foreign soil. Neither does it have any territorial ambitions. Our record shows that we were forced to act in self-defense only when a war of aggression was imposed on us. We oppose aggression or threats against ourselves, and we never pose any threat to others."

Huang Hua said in conclusion: "Disarmament is, in the final analysis, a question of how to prevent war and maintain peace, so it is bound to attract the attention and arouse the concern of the people throughout the world. So long as the people of all countries unite in a persistent and relentless struggle against war of aggression, it will be possible to maintain world peace. The people's struggle is a powerful impetus to disarmament and maintenance of world peace. Our task is to make concerted efforts for the realization of genuine disarmament in conformity with the wishes of the people of the world."

XINHUA on Reaction to Speech

[Text] United Nations, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Warm applause and praises greeted the speech made by chairman of the Chinese Government delegation Huang Hua at the second U.N. special session on disarmament today.

Huang Hua won warm applause from the audience when he announced, "If the two superpowers take the lead in halting the testing, improving or manufacturing of nuclear weapons and in reducing their nuclear weapons by 50 percent, the Chinese Government is ready to join all other nuclear states in undertaking to stop the development and production of nuclear weapons and to further reduce and ultimately destroy them altogether." This was the first time in four days that a government delegate won applause from the audience in the course of his speech at the special session.

When Huang Hua returned to his seat after his speech, delegates from nearly 60 Asian, African, Latin American and European countries queued up for their turn to shake hands with him in warm congratulation:

Many Third World delegates showed great appreciation of China's pledge that at no time and under no circumstances will China be the first to use nuclear weapons and that it undertakes unconditionally not to use such weapons against non-nuclear states. Some delegates and reporters from Japan and the West described Huang Hua's speech as concrete, explicit, reasonable and sincere, which they said indicates that the Chinese Government is playing a unique role in regard to the disarmament question.

UN DEBATE CONTINUES TO URGE END TO ARMS RACE

[Text] United Nations, June 11 (XINHUA) -- The general debate of the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament entered its fourth day today with more nations calling for an end to the arms race and for the non-use of nuclear weapons against non-nuclear states.

President of Cyprus Spiros Kiprianou said that the major powers had the obligation to do their utmost to end the arms race through bold agreements, until the goal of collective international security was achieved.

Irish Prime Minister Charles J. Haughey urged the nuclear powers to give binding security guarantees to the non-nuclear states to ensure that "no nuclear power will ever use nuclear weapons against a non-nuclear power."

Arturo M. Tolentino, minister of state for foreign affairs of the Philippines, said that China had taken the lead by its declaration of the non-first-use of nuclear weapons and non-use of nuclear weapons against a non-nuclear state. "We welcome this assurance," and "the world looks to the nuclear weapon states, and particularly to the two superpowers who each possesses a devastating array of nuclear weaponry, to respond to world public opinion," he noted.

Claude Cheysson, minister of external relations of France, said that the overarmament of the superpowers was "a threat to peace." On the arms race between the two superpowers, Cheysson said that while one of them had reduced its effort in the past few years the other moved ahead relentlessly and strengthened its arms potential aimed exclusively at Western Europe. "Now the former is obliged to react," he continued; "in this way, with the two parties moving from positions of inferiority to overcoming that inferiority and then surpassing each other, the arms race in turn destabilizes and terrifies each of the two camps. Stability based on deterrence might be compromised by the reappearance of first strike capabilities," he added.

The minister said that a more just and more secure global international order could be attained through "the balance between East and West at the lowest, safest and most stable level possible" and "the defense and the guarantee of independence of each state through regional security."

HUANG HUA ATTENDS DINNER HOSTED BY KISSINGER

[Text] United Nations, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese state Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua attended a dinner party given in his honour by U.S. former Secretary of State Dr. Henry Kissinger. Ling Qing, Kang Maozhao and Liang Yufan, deputy leaders of the Chinese Government delegation to the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament, were among those present.

During the dinner party, which proceeded in a warm and cordial atmosphere, Huang Hua had friendly conversations with noted American personalities from political, financial, business, social and mass media circles.

The Chinese state councillor and foreign minister also conferred this afternoon with Claude Cheysson, minister for external relations of France.

NEW CHAIRMAN OF U.S.-CHINA RELATIONS GROUP NAMED

OW071926 Beijing XINHUA in English 1920 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Washington, June 7 (XINHUA) -- Raymond Philip Shafer has been appointed chairman of the National Committee on United States-China Relations, its board of directors announced today.

Shafer succeeds Ambassador Charles W. Yost, who was chairman from 1975 until his death in 1981.

Shafer is now partner and senior counsellor of the international accounting firm of Coopers and Lybrand. He was governor of Pennsylvania (1967-71) and counsellor to Vice President Nelson Rockefeller (1975-77).

Accepting his new post, Shafer said, "for more than a decade, the People's China and the United States have been developing better relationships and mutual understanding. Before and during this period, the national committee rendered responsible, pioneering leadership, earning respect in both countries. I look forward to helping build on and extend this distinguished record."

The national committee, formed in 1966, is a leading non-profit organization conducting exchanges and related educational programs involving leaders in government, education, culture, management and communications in the United States and the People's Republic of China.

Since 1975 the organization's president has been Arthur H. Rosen, a former career Foreign Service officer.

XINHUA NOTES U.S. SPACE PROGRAM'S MILITARIZATION

OW091236 Beijing XINHUA in English 1215 GMT 9 Jun 82

["'U.S. Space Programs Go Military' by XINHUA correspondent Zhou Zexin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, June 7 -- The militarization of U.S. space operations is drawing more and more public attention as the date set for the space shuttle Columbia's fourth and final test flight is drawing near.

The U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) has announced that the shuttle's fourth test flight will be launched on June 27 and is scheduled to return on July 4. The Columbia will carry a secret military cargo of the Defense Department into orbit. This is the first secret military cargo to fly on an American space ship. The Defense Department reportedly has placed its cargo into the cargo hold of the Columbia but refused to disclose what type of equipment it consists of. The pilots have been under orders not to talk about the test with the mission control center. They also must avoid beaming television back to earth of the device mounted in the cargo hold so as to protect information about the U.S. space systems from the Soviet Union.

The militarization of U.S. space programs began long ago. It is getting more and more publicity along with the aggravation of the arms race with the Soviet Union. The United States stresses that this has resulted from the stepped-up space operations of the Soviet Union in recent years. Some U.S. military experts hold that the Soviet Union is already many years ahead of the United States in the field of space-based high-energy laser weapons and that Soviet research programs are far grander than those of the United States.

They fear that this kind of weapons might threaten the satellites and rockets of the United States.

They also hold that the manned space shuttle programs of the Soviet Union have for many years been military-oriented. The Soviet Union has indicated that before 1985, it will send into space orbit a permanent space station manned by 12 to 14 persons. The recent flight of the Salyut-7 space station is considered to be possibly related to these programs.

The United States has also stepped up its research and manufacture of laser weapons. The Washington POST disclosed on May 5 that an early warning infrared laser system is being loaded on board the Columbia. The New York TIMES reported on June 6 that the Defense Department has worked out a new military program under which the Air Force is instructed to deploy anti-satellite weapons within the coming five years as part of the program to reinvigorate the U.S. nuclear deterrent forces. A deputy secretary of the Air Force department disclosed in his testimony before the Congress not long ago that the Defense Department and the Air Force have solid programs for a continued expansion of the U.S. military capabilities in space so as to explore the space for military purposes.

While the U.S. Defense Department is stepping up its deployment in the space arms race, NASA programs are being geared to military activities and even shifted to a military basis.

NASA has increased its contacts with the Defense Department by increasing the number of officers and military-related personnel in its staff. The newly-established office of space operations under NASA is headed by an Air Force major general.

U.S. spaceships are being used more directly for military purposes. The carrying of Defense Department cargo by the Columbia is just a beginning. The U.S. President has decided that NASA and the Air Force will share the use of spaceships. Thus the Defense Department has become a chief user of spaceships. According to an official report, almost half, or at least 114 of NASA's 243 spaceship missions preliminarily planned for the period from now till 1994 will be assigned to the Defense Department.

NASA's scientific research is becoming more and more military-oriented. NASA Director James Beggs testified before the Congress last February that the 1983 military-related space programs of scientific research and development, especially those using spaceships, will remain unchanged or even be expanded, while civilian space programs will be cut or postponed. In order to give priority to the development of military-related rockets, NASA has postponed to 1984 its program for exploring the Jupiter. A quarter of NASA's 3.5-billion-dollar budget for 1983 will be spent on military-related operations.

A number of American congressmen have criticized the militarization of NASA operations for affecting the development of non-military space science and technology. Observers here regard the linkage between spaceships and the military systems of the Defense Department as a dangerous new development.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON KIRKPATRICK 'OUTBURSTS'

["International Jottings" by Chen Feng [7115 1409]: "Hard To Avoid 'Clumsiness'"]

[Text] U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Jeane Kirkpatrick has blown her top again. At a lunch on 7 June, she said the reason U.S. influence in the United Nations had consistently waned was because "the United States is always acting clumsily in international relations," and "is not proficient in UN politics," and "we are simply a bunch of laymen."

She said when venting her wrath back in February: "The United States has become a nation without a single follower." Now she says the way to solve the problem is to appoint someone "proficient in UN politics" as the permanent representative there. The day after her latest outburst, when the Security Council was debating the urgent issue of Israel's invasion of Lebanon, Kirkpatrick alone, representing the United States, vetoed a draft resolution condemning Israel for refusing to withdraw its forces from Lebanon. While the whole world was condemning in concert Israel's large-scale armed invasion of Lebanon, she, representing the United States at the United Nations, defended the Begin authorities' aggression, thus "clumsily" isolating herself yet again.

No matter how much Mrs Kirkpatrick may moan and complain, if the U.S. Government continues to persist in its erroneous ways of running counter to the aspiration of the Third World peoples, it is certain that its influence in the United Nations will continue to wane. The affairs of the United Nations are the affairs of all its members, and cannot just be decided on by a few big states; this is the UN politics of today. If the United States does not understand this simple truth, no foreign affairs expert it appoints as permanent U.S. representative to the United Nations can avoid "laymen's and clumsy" acts.

U.S. MIDDLE EAST PROBLEMS SAID SELF-MADE

["International Jottings" by Shi Fang [1102 5364]: "The 'Opportunity' Is Disappearing"]

[Text] Speaking on the Middle East situation in Chicago recently, U.S. Secretary of State Haig said that in this "particularly dangerous" region, there were both "perils" and also "opportunities" for the United States, and so the United States "should influence Middle Eastern affairs" and prevent the Soviet Union from "taking advantage of the turmoil there to reach its strategic goals."

Why has the Middle East become a "particularly dangerous" region? Obviously, one important reason is that the Israeli authorities pursue a policy of aggression, expansion and hostility to the Arab people, with the result that there is no peace in the region. And the reason the Israeli authorities dare to act in such a rabid fashion is because they have gained U.S. connivance and support. The latest proof of this is that the Begin regime recently defied world opinion and brazenly launched a large-scale armed invasion of Lebanon.

However, Haig's reference to "perils" for the United States had another meaning, which was that U.S. interests and influence had been "challenged," while by U.S. "opportunities" he meant the possibility of preserving U.S. interests and influence. It is quite evident that these "perils" and "opportunities" exist, and the question is, what policy will the United States adopt. If the Washington authorities cling obstinately to their course, help a tyrant to do evil, stand opposed to the Arab people and support Israel's wanton acts, the United States will indeed be in peril of losing everything, and any talk of preventing the Soviet Union from "taking advantage of the turmoil there to reach its strategic goals" may turn out to be an idle dream.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS JAPANESE BANK DELEGATION

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) - Premier Zhao Ziyang met here this afternoon with a delegation from the Export-Import Bank of Japan led by Michio Takeuchi, president of the bank. Zhao Ziyang told the delegation that a good foundation for economic and technical cooperation between China and Japan was laid in the past ten years. "This has opened a good prospect for still greater cooperation in the future," he said. Michio Takeuchi said the Export-Import Bank if Japan would make efforts to expand the cooperation.

Present were Bu Ming, chairman of the board of directors, Li Fakui, vice-president, of the Bank of China, and Vasue Katori, Japanese ambassador to China. The delegation arrived here June 9 at the invitation of the Bank of China. While in Beijing, the two sides exchanged views on further financial cooperation. They will leave here tomorrow for other parts of China.

XINHUA REPORTS REAGAN'S 'NEW BERLIN INITIATIVE'

OW120308 Beijing XINHUA in English 0243 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Text] Bonn, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Before leaving Bonn for home this afternoon, U.S. President Ronald Reagan paid a short visit to West Berlin, terminating his two-day West Europe trip with a "new Berlin initiative" in a speech delivered near the "Berlin Wall."

During the trip, Reagan attended the Versailles economic summit meeting as well as the Bonn NATO summit meeting and paid official visits to Vatican, Rome, London and Bonn.

In the company of West German Chancellor Schmidt, Reagan flew from Bonn to West Berlin this morning for a 3-hour visit. After inspecting the "Berlin Wall", he addressed a rally at the Schloss Charlottenburg Square. He reaffirmed the U.S. commitment to West Berlin, saying that the U.S. "remains committed to the Berlin agreement", and "will continue to honor its commitment to Berlin."

He condemned the "expansionism of the Soviet Union" and the "ruthless pursuit of its goals around the world." He challenged the Soviet leaders to join in the "quest for peace, security and a lowering of the tensions and weaponry," to eliminate their SS-20, SS-4, and SS-5 missiles, to slash the conventional ground forces of the Warsaw Pact and NATO in central Europe to 700,000 men each, to live up to the Helsinki treaty and to reduce the "human barrier." He packaged all these "challenges" as a "new Berlin initiative" and called on the Soviets to respond with "positive actions rather than rhetoric as the first proof of Soviet good intentions."

"A united, resolute Western alliance stands ready to defend itself if necessary, but we are also ready to work with the Soviet bloc in peaceful cooperation if the leaders of the East are willing to respond in kind," he said.

Addressing the same rally, Chancellor Schmidt stressed that the presence of U.S. military forces in West Berlin "is a demonstration of the U.S. to be ready to safeguard the freedom of the city." While seeing President Reagan off at the Bonn-Koln airport later, the chancellor said, he, too, hoped the East would respond positively to Reagan's "new Berlin initiative."

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS REAGAN'S EUROPEAN TRIP

[Unattributed report: "U.S. President Reagan Visits Western Europe"]

[Text] While attending the seven-nation Western summit and the NATO summit, President Reagan also visited France, Italy, Britain, West Germany and West Berlin and held talks with the leaders of the four countries on the international situation and bilateral relations.

Reagan addressed the Bundestag during his visit to West Germany. He stressed the "permanence" of U.S. commitments to Western Europe, saying that the United States "is resolved to maintain well-equipped and highly trained forces in Europe." He also clearly stated that the United States would stand together with the peoples of Western Europe to preserve European security. He said it is necessary to strengthen unity and dialogue between the members of NATO. The West must strengthen its defenses in nuclear and conventional weapons.

Addressing the British Parliament, Reagan denounced the Soviet policy of aggression and expansion, and also declared that he hoped to meet Brezhnev and desired success in the U.S.-Soviet nuclear talks. In his address to the Bundestag, Reagan also announced a proposal for reducing conventional forces in central Europe, that is, to reduce Eastern and Western conventional ground forces in the central European region to 700,000 men each and the air forces to 200,000 men each. This proposal was welcomed by the West European countries.

There are still differences between the United States and certain West European countries on the question of East-West detente. In his talks with Chancellor Schmidt, Reagan held that so far detente had brought more advantages to the Soviet Union than to the West. He also maintained an attitude of reserve regarding the Western Europe-Soviet natural gas pipeline deal. Schmidt held that as the contract had already been signed, it must be carried out.

Apart from this, Reagan also specially discussed with Britain the military conflict between Britain and Argentina over the Falklands (Malvinas). Leaders of the United States and the four West European countries also exchanged views on Israel's large-scale attack on Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war, and East-West economic relations. In talks on the Malvinas dispute, British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher thanked the United States for its support. During the two summits and Reagan's visits, tens of thousands of people demonstrated in Rome, London and elsewhere in opposition to the superpowers' nuclear arms race.

XINHUA COMMENTARY ON NATO SUMMIT IN BONN

["Commentary by correspondent Yang Yi: Narrowing Differences To Show Unity -- An Observation of NATO's Summit in Bonn" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Bonn, June 10 (XINHUA) -- The heads of state and government from the 16 NATO countries came here yesterday to hold the sicth summit conference since the alliance was formed in 1949. When the international situation is becoming more turbulent and increasingly changeable, the summit conference cannot but arouse close attention in the world.

Instead of focusing discussions on concrete issues, the conference proceeded in a way of sidestepping contradictions to show "unity." During the one-day conference discussions on concrete issues took up only a few hours. As a result, the 16 participants could not get into a serious study of concrete questions but stated their positions in turn instead. In addition, as the declaration of the conference and documents attached to it were drafted and basically finalized in advance, they were submitted to the conference just for final approval.

Then, why did so many people come here to hold such a meeting? Analysts here said this was because great changes have taken place in the relative military strength of the NATO and the Warsaw Pact, that of the United States and the Soviet Union in particular, since the last NATO summit conference in Washington 1978. The Soviet Union has surpassed the United States in the speed of developing nuclear arms and conventional forces. This has further deepened the differences within the NATO on its strategy to deal with the Soviet Union. The Reagan administration stands for vigorous reinforcement of defense, arms expansion and war preparations as well as a hard line in negotiations with the Soviet Union so as to force the latter to check its ambition for expansion.

However, the NATO countries in Western Europe, proceeding from their historic and geographic condition, and for the sake of their national security, political needs and economic interests, are more willing to pursue the policy of "power plus negotiation." Although they are by no means to give up the policy of maintaining military strength at a certain level, they advocate serious dialogue with the Soviet Union. They have gradually lost their faith in the effectiveness of the U.S. nuclear umbrella and the continuity of its foreign policy. Therefore, they hope to seek a real detente in their relations with the Soviet Union and their own security in return. Under these circumstances, the NATO member states deemed it necessary to hold a summit conference to exchange views, narrow differences and coordinate actions.

The "Bonn statement" adopted at the conference gives prominence to a dual strategy which places defense and dialogue on a par, a subtle shift in NATO's strategic thinking. It demonstrates that the United States is drawing closer to its West European allies and reversing to the strategy employed in the mid-1970's of using dual tactics against dual tactics, with a view to maintianing the solidarity of the military alliance of the West. This compromising move has eased the contradictions between the Reagan administration and Western Europe. It was well received by those who attended the conference with some praising it as laying the groundwork for NATO cooperation in the 1980's.

Reinforcement of conventional armament also finds some reflection in the "statement'. A document adopted by the conference on military integration of NATO states that NATO will continue to strengthen its defense posture, with special regard to conventional forces. However, deep-seated differences remain as to how to put this vague and general principle into practice.

Explaining why the Reagan administration has made compromise to its allies on armament control and disarmament and taken up again the banner of negotiation, dialogue and disarmament, the observers here attributed it to U.S. financial troubles which cannot sustain its excessive military spending. A surge in the peace movement at home, the mid-term parliamentary elections this year and the existing rift between the United States and Europe are the other reasons they cited. As for the West European countries which are confronted with the Soviet threat, they still need U.S. support and an effective NATO existence. Therefore, the conference has harmonized some differences.

In spite of the many praises, various postures of "solidarity" and certain reconciliations made by the heads of state and governments, the fundamental differences inside the NATO, as some official spokesmen and news media pointed out, did not and could not be settled by a one-day conference.

The Reagan administration still puts more emphasis on strengthening defense and seeking its own superiority. But West European countries place more hopes on detente. As a West German Government spokesman has said, contradictions on the policy of detente still exist on both sides.

On East-West economic relations such as the control of the volume of trade with the Soviet Union, the limit of trust loans granted to it and the construction of natural gas pipelines from Siberia to Western Europe, each country wants to go its own way and no particular agreements have been reached.

It is also difficult for the NATO member states to coordinate their stands on critical international issues. For instance, the conference could not issue a joint statement on the situation in Lebanon because the United States continues to carry out its short-sighted policy of being partial to and siding with Israel.

In spite of the fact that the NATO's defense might be weakened, Britain has moved its main fleet to the South Atlantic. This, too, has deepened the differences within the NATO. Only a few speakers at the conference expressed their support for Britain's military action.

Now that the Bonn conference is over, many participants have heaved a sigh of relief and feel some satisfaction. The differences between the United States and its allies on the security strategy and defense policy remain untouched. Completely different explanations may be made to some equivocal documents and provisions approved at the conference. Old scores between Greece and Turkey have not been settled. Spain and Britain still take different attitudes towards the Malvinas conflict. Observers here are less optimistic about how long the relative balance inside the NATO can be kept.

MATERIALS ON VISIT OF ZAIRIAN PRESIDENT MOBUTU

Meets Deng Xiaoping

OW120813 Beijing XINHUA in English 0759 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) -- Deng Xiaoping, vice-chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met with Zairian President Mobutu Sese Seko and the principal members of his entourage in the Great Hall of the People here this morning.

Welcoming the president to China on his fourth visit, Vice-Chairman Deng said: "Since the normalization of diplomatic relations between China and Zaire in 1972, leaders of the two countries have established a relationship of mutual trust because our two countries have had similar experiences of being bullied by imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism," he said. President Mobutu said there indeed exist relations of mutual trust between the two countries. He thanked China for the aid and cooperation given Zaire.

Deng Xiaoping briefed the guests on China's domestic situation. He said the political situation in China is one of real stability and unity and the initial success in streamlining China's institutions is a clear proof of this. "The people of the country can now concentrate their efforts on national construction," he said.

Mobutu said, as China's friend, Zaire is very much interested in the developments in China.

Present were Chinese State Councillor Ji Pengfei, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Gong Dafei, Vice-Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Lu Xuejian, and Chinese Ambassador to Zaire Li Shanyi.

Later, Deng Xiaoping hosted a luncheon for President Mobutu, his wife Bobi Ladawa and principal members of their entourage.

Meets Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang reaffirmed today that China would continue to follow the policy of safeguarding and strengthening unity among Third-World countries.

He made his statement during his talks with Zairian President Mobutu Sese Seko in the Great Hall of the People this afternoon. Mobutu spoke highly of China's policy.

In a cordial atmosphere, the premier and president both said that the friendship and cooperation between the two countries had expanded and strengthened since normalization of relations in 1972. They said the two governments would make further efforts to expand such relations. The two leaders discussed international issues of common interest, and both had the same or similar views on many major issues.

Taking part in the talks for Zaire were Yoka Mangono, commissioner of state for foreign affairs and international cooperation, Seti Yale, special adviser to the head of state, Bokana W'ondangela, commissioner general for planning, Nimy Mayidika, director of the presidential office, Nkema Liloo, principal adviser to the presidential office, and Tuma-Waku Dia Bazika, Zairian ambassador to China.

Present for China were Gong Dafei, vice-minister of foreign affairs, Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, Chi Haotian, deputy chief of General Staff of the Chinese People's Liberation Army, and Li Shanyi, Chinese ambassador to Zaire.

Zhao Ziyang Banquet

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang gave a banquet here this evening in honor of Zairian President Mobutu Sese Seko and his wife Bobi Ladawa.

The guests were greeted by Premier Zhao and State Councillor Ji Pengfei when they entered the banquet hall. A military band played and the Dong Fang (oriental) song and dance ensemble entertained the guests. Soprano Zhu Mingying's Zairian songs won warm applause. The two leaders toasted further development of the friendship between China and Zaire.

Among those present were Lei Jieqiong, vice-president of the All-China Women's Federation, Zhou Jiannan, minister of the machine-building industry, Gong Dafei, vice-minister of foreign affairs, and Chinese Ambassador to Zaire Li Shanyi. Zairian Ambassador to China Tuma-Waku Dia Bazika was also present.

Meets Building Experts

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) -- Zairian President Mobutu Sese Seko met today with Chinese experts who had worked in Zaire. These experts helped build the people's palace and a farm tools plant and grow sugar and rice crops.

Shaking hands with the Chinese experts, President Mobutu said: "I'm very happy to meet you here and join you in recalling the days when you worked in Zaire. The relations between our two countries in all fields are developing."

The Chinese experts thanked the president, and the Zairian Government and people for their care and hospitality given to them during their stay in Zaire. Yoka Mangono, commissioner of state for foreign affairs and international cooperation, was present.

Departure for Guangzhou

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Mobutu Sese Seko, president of the Republic of Zaire, Madame Mobutu and their party left here for Guangzhou by special plane this morning after concluding their visit to Beijing.

Before their departure, Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, went to the guest-house to say good-bye to the distinguished Zairian guests. Zhao Ziyang said that the president and Madame Mobutu's visit, although short, is fruitful. The Chinese premier asked President and Madame Mobutu to convey the best wishes and regards of the Chinese people to the Zairian people after they return home. Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Gong Dafei accompanied President and Madame Mobutu on their way to Guangzhou.

HUANG HUA CONDEMNS ISRAEL'S INVASION OF LEBANON

[Text] United Nations, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, chairman of the Chinese Government delegation, state councillor and foreign minister, today strongly condemned Israel's armed invasion of Lebanon at the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly devoted to disarmament.

"While we are discussing the question of disarmament at this special session, the situation in the Middle East is seriously deteriorating as a result of Israel's flagrant invasion of Lebanon," he said.

"We strongly condemn Israel's armed aggression and firmly support the heroic struggle of the peoples of Lebanon and Palestine against Israeli aggression.

"We consider that the United Nations must take prompt and effective measures to halt Israel's aggression," he said.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES ARAB UNITY AGAINST ISRAEL

HK130727 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jun 82 p 6

[Short commentary: "We Wish the Brothers Quarrelling at Home Would Resist the External Aggressor"]

[Text] Israel's massive invasion of Lebanon has caused a serious situation in the Middle East. Confronted with this great enemy, the Arab and Islamic states urgently need to unite to face the enemy together.

The mediation committee of the Islamic Conference Organization has appealed to Iran and Iraq to cease fire immediately and aim their guns at the Israeli enemy. Iraq has already responded that so long as Iran agrees to a ceasefire, the Iraqi Armed Forces are immediately prepared to withdraw inside the international boundary within 2 weeks and terminate all armed action. It has also stated that until agreement is reached on the issues in dispute, it will accept the ruling of the emergency meeting of the Islamic Conference Organization or any ruling of the Nonaligned Movement or the UN Security Council. This is a positive move by Iraq for ending the war.

The 20-month Iran-Iraq war has not only caused grave losses in every aspect to the belligerents but has also had a bad effect on peace and stability in the Gulf and Middle East regions. The war has weakened the strength and unity of the Arab and Islamic states. In daring to launch such a wanton invasion of Lebanon on this occasion, Israel was to a certain degree precisely taking advantage of differences between the Arab states and disputes among Muslim brothers; it vainly attempted to wipe out the PLO Armed Forces and dismember Lebanon at one stroke. In the face of this wanton Israeli aggression, Iran and Iraq have both expressed sympathy and support for the heroic fight of the Palestinian and Lebanese peoples against aggression. According to reports, Iran is prepared to dispatch combat personnel to Lebanon to take part in the battle to resist the Israeli aggressor forces, while Iraq has stated that the moment Iran agrees to a ceasefire, Iraq will agree to Iranian forces passing through its territory to join in the fighting in Lebanon and Syria. This is encouraging. In these circumstances, if the Iran-Iraq war goes on, it is bound to disperse the forces for struggle against Israel. This is obviously not in accord with the highest interests of the Arab nations and of Islam, nor does it benefit peace and stability in the Gulf and Middle East regions.

Brothers quarrelling at home should resist the external aggressor. In the face of this great enemy, we hope that the Islamic states of Iraq and Iran, both Muslim brothers, will immediately stop killing each other, effect a ceasefire, end the war, and unite as one to deal together with Israeli aggression. In the common struggle against the enemy, there will be a much better atmosphere for the two countries to solve their differences through peaceful negotiations.

CHINA DAILY ASSAILS ISRAEL'S LEBANON INVASION

["Opinion" column by CHINA DAILY commentator: "Against Human Dignity"]

[Text] Once again Israel has defied the world's conscience and committed an outrage against human dignity by its latest invasion of southern Lebanon.

The large-scale incursion spearheaded by columns of tanks and armoured vehicles followed two days of savage bombing by Israeli aircraft that killed hundreds of innocent Lebanese and Palestinian people and caused enormous losses to their property.

The wanton aggression was launched despite the presence of peacekeeping forces dispatched there by the United Nations precisely to prevent such acts after a similar Israeli offence in 1978.

Unconditional Withdrawal

The aggression continued following the UN Security Council call for an immediate cease-fire on Saturday. It demanded again on Sunday that the Israeli invaders withdraw from Lebanon "forthwith and unconditionally." A third resolution condemning Israel's act of aggression was supported by 14 of the 15-member Security Council but vetoes by the aggressor's patron, the United States.

For years, with the consistent moral backing and massive supplies of military hardware from the United States, Israel has been pursuing a policy of armed expansion and unceasing encroachments on the territories of neighbouring countries. On the pretext of safeguarding its own "security," the Israeli expansionists have not hesitated to take the lives of thousands of Palestinian and other Arab people and render many times more homeless. Like Hitler, expansionist Israel feels "secure" only when all its neighbours are made insecure. It is pure gangster logic for it to brazenly claim the right to invade Lebanon and kill Palestinian people so as to make the Galilee "panhandle" safe!

This latest act of aggression. on top of numerous preceding ones over the last 34 years, conclusively shows that the expansionist policy of Tel Aviv is a root cause of prolonged Middle East tension and unrest. Until it is restrained, there will be no end to misery and disaster for the people of the Middle East, the Israeli people included.

It is time for the Arab and Muslim world to put aside whatever differences that might exist, and unite to face the reality of Israel's expansion and aggression.

Stop Invasion

It is time that all peace-loving and justice-upholding nations the world over took effective action to stop Israel's current invasion, and make sure it will never recur. This can be done by working seriously and urgently for a just and reasonable solution to the Middle East problem.

The Chinese people, as all the people in the world, cannot repress their righteous indignation against the Israeli expansionists. All our sympathy goes out to the innocent Lebanese and Palestinian peoples. They and the other Arab people can be sure of our support in their just fight for the right to live and regain their lost territories.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PROBLEMS IN TRANSFERRING CADRES

[Commentator's article: "Firmly Rectify the Unhealthy Trend in Transfer of Cadres"]

[Text] The report about Shanxi's disciplinary action against cadres who disobeyed transfer orders shows that if the CCP committees take a clear-cut stand on this problem and take effective measures, the problem of a few cadres who demand special consideration from the organization but reject its discipline can be solved.

Since the "gang of four" was smashed, the unhealthy trends within our party, including the unhealthy trend in transferring cadres, have effectively been rectified. However, the phenomenon of disobeying orders and holding to one's own views still exists in some places. Under all sorts of pretexts, such as being "unaccustomed to the climate of a place," "unsuitable appointment," "being in poor health" and so forth, and by exaggerating their difficulties, some comrades have often "bargained" with the party organization. In fact, these "excuses" are "not to go where conditions are hard, not to work in the departments where there are many problems to solve and not to do the work which one is not content to do." Some cadres even require that the transfer should be satisfactory to their spouse and children as well. If not, they allow or urge their family members to make trouble. When they cannot achieve their aim, they just stay at home and refuse to report for duty and do not go to work for several months, the whole year or even for several years. This unhealthy trend has violated organizational discipline, corrupted the atmosphere in office and weakened the fighting force of the party.

How do we rectify this unhealthy trend?

First, we must forcefully stress the importance of discipline. On the question of where to go, what to do and what post to hold, all cadres in our party, no matter how proficiently they are qualified, how great their contributions may be and how high their positions are, must unconditionally obey the decisions of the party organization, which are made under the principle of democratic centralism and in accordance with the needs of the party's cause and the political integrity and professional ability of the cadres. Of course, this does not mean that the party organization can make decisions without taking into consideration the opinions, speciality and difficulties of the cadres. Nevertheless, it is wrong for anyone to legalize ultraindividualism under any pretext and insist on giving pride of place to one's own interests without any consideration for the overall situation in work transfers. This is also impermissible by organizational discipline.

Second, it is necessary to work out effective rules and regulations. Without rules and regulations, nothing can be done well. It is necessary for various localities to work out rules and regulations in light of our party's conventional practice and their actual conditions to govern the work of transferring cadres, and make them known to all. These rules and regulations should set demands on cadres as well as on the party organization. For example, before a decision is made to transfer a cadre, the party organization must make investigation and study among the masses, listen attentively and accept the reasonable opinions of the cadres and pay special attention to the speciality of professional and technological cadres. The cadres must truly report their actual difficulties and the party organization should help them solve the difficulties. However, severe criticism should be given to those who are reluctant to work at a lower level and those who wilfully make trouble, and disciplinary action should be taken against those who persist in their errors. On receiving an order from the party organization at a higher level on cadre transfer, the lower level organization should publicize it without delay and be responsible for its execution. If the lower level organization does not carry out the order and does not report the reason, it must be investigated and the responsibility must be determined. When a decision is made by the CCP committee on the transfer of a certain cadre, no individual has the right to change it. One can report one's opinions to the CCP committee or the higher level, but one is not allowed to privately make promises and toady to cadres who are being transferred. Rules and regulations are necessary even if they are not yet perfect. They can be perfected step by step through practice.

Third, it is necessary to check the unhealthy trends impartially and resolutely. Only when leading comrades of the CCP committees and organizational departments are impartial and resolute will it be possible for the unhealthy trend in cadre transfers to be rectified. It often happens that when some cadres who have not done their jobs well or have committed serious mistakes and are transferred elsewhere reject the orders of the party organization, some people intercede for them or obstruct the responsible departments from carrying out the collective decision of the CCP committee through various relations. Among these people, there are not only "old acquaintances," "old colleagues" and "old friends" of the cadres who are transferred, but also some of their "old leaders" and "direct superiors." Very often the interference of these people makes leading comrades of the CCP committees and comrades in charge of the work, who adhere to the party's principles, feel very awkward and vexed. The only correct way to free them from the awkward and vexed situation is to adhere to the party's principle of "telling the truth and not being concerned about saving face," smash the shackles of vulgar relations and defend the correct decisions. This may bring troubles to those comrades who adhere to principles. But to see the matter through, it is worthy of our cadres, especially the organization and personnel cadres of our party, to safeguard the party's principles and discipline, to improve the party's work style and enhance the fighting force of the party organization at the cost of "offending" some people, losing some votes or "being given tight shoes to wear." Moreover, things have become very hard today for anyone who tries to brazenly resist the historical trend of rectifying the party's work style. When we meet with such a "difficult problem" in cadre work, we should think and act in this way. Otherwise, how can we be regarded as firm, sober-minded and promising Marxists and how can the unhealthy trend in cadre transfers be rectified?

RENMIN RIBAO REVIEWS ECONOMIC CRIMES CRACKDOWN

[Commentator's article: "Practical, Effective Measures for Rectification of the Party and Work Style"]

[Text] At present the struggle to crackdown on serious economic crimes is being launched throughout the country. An important task confronting the discipline inspection departments of CCP committees at various levels is to closely coordinate, under the unified leadership of the party, with the public security organs, procuratorial organs, law courts and other relevant departments, pay attention to selected major cases and, by taking facts as the basis and the law as the criterion, severely punish those criminals in order to ensure the smooth progress of socialist construction.

Cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field is an important manifestation of the class struggle under the new historical conditions and is a major struggle waged by the CCP members to uphold the purity of communism and to resist moral degeneration. The significance of this struggle has actually far surpassed the economic scope. Viewed from the angle of party building, cracking down on serious criminal activities in the economic field is a practical and effective measure for rectifying the party and work style in the present conditions. With respect to this point, it is imperative for the CCP committees and discipline inspection committees at various levels to have a sufficient understanding, and, in the course of paying close attention to the investigation and handling of major cases, lay stress on consolidating party organizations and the work style of cadres.

Viewed from cases of serious economic crimes exposed in various localities, some of the criminals are remnant elements of the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques and some are people with a history of evildoing. At the same time, there are indeed some cadres who are CCP members but who have failed to resist the corrosion of capitalist ideas and have been morally degenerated. They cannot withstand the test in the new situation, have viciously inflated individualism, seek ease and comfort, are blinded by lust for gain to such an extent as to forsake the communist ideal, engage in various criminal activities and sabotage the cause of socialist construction.

With respect to these cadres who are party members and who engage in serious economic criminal activities, no matter how long they have held party membership or how high their positions are, it is necessary to resolutely dismiss them from their posts and clear them out of the party in order to ensure the purity of the party organization. With respect to the extremely small number of CCP organizations which are seriously impure politically and organizationally, it is necessary to resolutely consolidate them with guidance and in a planned way. With respect to the extremely exceptional party organizations which have practically rotted away, it is necessary for the CCP committees at the higher level to thoroughly investigate the situation, reorganize or disband them and do a good job of reestablishing the CCP organizations. By so doing, the party's organism will be healthier, the face of the party will take on an altogether new aspect, the link between the party and the masses will be closer and the combat effectiveness of the party will be stronger.

The current struggle to crack down on serious criminal activities in the economic field has provided us with a lot of favorable conditions to conduct ideological and political education among the CCP members and cadres. We should, in light of the actual conditions in this struggle, educate the numerous CCP members to fully understand the importance, the protracted nature and the complexity of resisting the corrosion of capitalist ideas and to conscientiously preserve the purity of communism. At no time and under no circumstances will the CCP permit a reduction in the criteria of CCP members, nor will it permit CCP members to be morally degenerate. Through ideological and political education in the light of practical struggle, the political level of the numerous CCP members will be extensively raised and they will remain clearheaded in the face of corrosion by decadent capitalist ideas. Those CCP members and cadres who are on the verge of moral degeneration will also be redeemed.

A few CCP members have committed the serious mistakes of violating party discipline and the "Guiding Principles for Inner Party Political Life," but their problems have not developed to such a serious extent that it is necessary to affix the responsibility for the crime according to law. In this case it is necessary, according to the seriousness of their mistakes, to take disciplinary actions against them within the party. This also constitutes an education and redemption for these CCP members.

GUANGMING RIBAO DISCUSSES CURRENT CLASS STRUGGLE

[Article by Xue Yan [5641 1693]: "How Should We Look at Class Struggle Under Present Conditions?"]

[Text] Since the carrying out of the struggle agianst serious crimes in the economic field, certain vague understandings have been found among certain cadres and the masses. Some people have said: "Now that the work focus is shifted, how can we mention class struggle again?" Some people have worried that "the mention of class struggle means the pursuit of the road to retrogression and thus we will commit the past mistake of 'taking class struggle as the key link.'" Other people have even gone as far as to say that the current situation is an adverse consequence of third plenary session, ever since which class struggle has not been mentioned. Clarifying these vague understandings and educating the cadres and the masses to correctly understand the CCP Central Committee's important ideology in relation to our country's current problems of class struggle is extremely essential to doing a good job of carrying out the struggle against serious crimes which undermine the economy.

During the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee when the decision on shifting the whole party's work focus was made, it was explicitly pointed out: "A small number of counterrevolutionaries and criminals who are hostile to and sabotage our country's socialist modernization cause still exist in our country at present. We absolutely cannot slacken our efforts in waging a class struggle against them and must not weaken proletarian dictatorship." Later on, in the speech by Comrade Ye Jianying delivered in commemoration of the 30th anniversary of the founding of the country, which was later approved by the party's fourth plenary session, it was pointed out: "Our country's exploiting class has already been eliminated as a class. However, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits."

Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out in his speech delivered in December 1980 that: "Although class struggle is no longer the major contradiction in our society, its actual existence has not been eliminated and we should not underestimate it." The "Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of the Party Since the Founding of the PRC" adopted at the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee made a comprehensive and scientific exposition on the question of class struggle within the country. It also pointed out that: "We must maintain sharp vigilance and carry out effective struggles against the sabotaging political, economic, cultural and social activities of those elements who are hostile to socialism."

Over the past few years, the analyses and estimates of our country's class struggle situation made by the CCP Central Committee and the central leading comrades have been proved perfectly correct and far-sighted. Now, some comrades suspect that the CCP Central Committee has turned "right" because class struggle has not been mentioned again since the third plenary session. Others think that the CCP Central Committee is turning "left" when the question of class struggle is brought up again. All these views are wrong. This shows that some of our comrades only have a superficial or a one-sided and wrong understanding of the central documents and the important speeches of the central leading comrades. Therefore, comprehensively and correctly clarifying the scientific exposition of the question of class struggle made since the third plenary session and, in particular, in the "resolution" pf the sixth plenary session, is still an important task.

It was pointed out in the "resolution" of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee that: "Class struggle no longer constitutes the principal contradiction since the exploiters have been eliminated as a class. However, owing to certain domestic factors and influences from abroad, class struggle will continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come and may even grow acute under certain conditions. It is necessary to oppose both the view that the scope of class struggle must be enlarged and the view that it has died out." This is a scientific summation of the class situation and the question of class struggle of the socialist society in our country under the new historical conditions made by using the fundamental Marxist principles. This is also an important ideology guiding our correct understanding of the question of class struggle at present.

What accounts for the continuous existence of class struggle after the exploiters have been eliminated as a class?

In view of the domestic situation and the situation abroad, it is not difficult to understand this question. First, while the exploiters have been eliminated as a class, the remnant elements of the exploiting class and other hostile elements continue to exist. They will stir up troubles whenever there is a chance. Second, while the exploiters have been eliminated as a class, the ideas of the exploiting class will continue to exist for a long time to come. They will, undoubtedly, corrupt the minds of some people. A great number of facts have proved that a large proportion of the present new exploiting elements, corrupted elements and criminals who commit serious crimes, are the shaky elements of the worker contingent, peasant contingent, intellectual contingent and cadre contingent. They have all been corrupted by the thinking of the exploiting class. Third, the statement that the exploiters have been eliminated as classes is only applicable where mainland China is concerned. However, the exploitation system and a perfect exploiting class still exist in areas such as Taiwan, Penghu, Jinmen and Mazu. The counterrevolutionaries among the people in those areas will definitely adopt various forms to corrupt areas in the mainland. Fourth, as far as the international situation is concerned, imperialism and hegemonism are always trying every possible means to penetrate, sabotage and subvert our country's politics, economy and culture. Fifth, in the wake of the development of economic relations with foreign countries, corrupt bourgeois ideas of the West and the bourgeois way of life will attack us by various channels. Owing to the above-mentioned factors, after the exploiters have been eliminated as a class in our country, class struggle continues to exist within certain limits. Also, due to specific historical conditions, this struggle will definitely last for a long time to come and will probably become acute under certain conditions. This is an objective law which is independent of man's will.

The struggle against serious crimes in the economic field, which is underway at present, fully proves the scientific summation of the "resolution" of the sixth plenary session. Judging by the economic crimes crimes exposed in the initial stage, the serious criminal activities in the economic field such as smuggling and selling contraband, graft and accepting bribes, speculation and deception and stealing state and collective property are far more serious than the "three evils" which were struggled against in 1952. If nothing is done to put an end to the development of such crimes, the socialist cause will be more severely undermined. Have the grim realities not deeply shown that class struggle will not only continue to exist within certain limits for a long time to come but will also grow acute under certain conditions?

Another argument has come into being at present. It holds that striking hard blows at serious crimes in the economic field can hardly be defined as a struggle between different classes. Many comrades state that during the feudal period many good officials also accepted bribes and that the capitalist countries also oppose corruption and bribery and ask if we can define this as class struggle.

Some other comrades have even advocated replacing the terms class contradiction and class struggle with the terms social contradiction and social struggle. We should see that these views are inappropriate. Lenin said: "In analyzing any social problems, the absolute demand of Marxism is to raise the problem in certain historical limits." If we abstractly discuss whether or not corruption is class struggle divorced from certain historical limits, we will not be able to draw a correct conclusion. Both in feudal societies and in capitalist countries, the exploiters occupy ruling positions. The intrinsic quality of the exploiting class is to reap without sowing. They oppose corruption and punish corrupt officials because they want to solve contradictions within their own class, deceive the people and consolidate the reign of the exploiting class. All this is different in nature from our struggle against serious crimes in the economic field which is being carried out at present. Our target is to eliminate the exploitative system, eliminate the classes and eliminate all phenomena of reaping without sowing. Serious economic crimes are not ordinary crimes. They are purposely sabotaging and overthrowing our country's socialist system with an intent to reestablish the capitalist system. Waging this struggle is related to the success or failure of our socialist modernization cause and the life and death of our party and our country. This is a serious struggle between the proletariat and the broad masses of people who uphold socialism on one side and those elements who are hostile to and sabotage socialism on the other side. It is an absolute conflict of interests and thus it is unmistakably an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic field. Naturally, minor economic offences do not fall within the limits of class struggle. We should distinguish them from serious crimes in the economic field. This should go without saying.

When we stress that dealing hard blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is an important manifestation of class struggle in the economic field, recognize that class struggle will continue to exist for a long time to come within certain limits and will even grow acute under certain conditions, will we, as some comrades have worried, make the past mistake of "taking class struggle as the key link" and the mistake of enlarging class struggle? The answer is no.

"Taking class struggle as the key link" was a slogan put forth shortly before the "Great Cultural Revolution." Theoretically speaking, this slogan deviated from the correct analysis of the situation of class struggle in our socialist society. After the completion of the socialist transformation of the private ownership of the means of production, we continued to erroneously treat class struggle as our country's principal contradiction, firmly believing that class struggle existed everywhere in our society. We also believed that a large number of representatives of the bourgeoisie existed inside the party, the government, the army and the cultural circles -- persons in power who followed the capitalist road. In accordance with this unrealistic and subjective analysis, the slogan of "taking class struggle as the key link" was put forth, leading to the erroneous launching of the "Great Cultural Revolution."

Practice has fully proved that the analysis of the class situation at that time and the slogan of "taking class struggle as the key link" were all wrong and they brought about serious consequences. We must bear this historical lesson in mind.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee decisively put an end to the use of the wrong slogan of "taking class struggle as the key link" which is inapplicable in a socialist society, resolutely shifted the whole party's work focus onto socialist modernization and fundamentally corrected the "leftist" guiding ideology. Simultaneously, the CCP Central Committee has summed up both positive and negative experiences of our party concerning the question of class struggle and has made a sober estimate of class struggle under the present conditions. It has also pointed out that in our country, the exploiters have been eliminated as a class. The current class struggle is a class struggle of a socialist society under the new historical conditions. This is a special form of class struggle, or it can be said to be a special legacy of the historical class struggle under the socialist conditions. It is very important to correctly understand and master this fundamental characteristic of the current class struggle. On the one hand, it should be distinguished from the class struggle which existed before the exploiters had been eliminated as a class, and on the other hand, it should be distinguished from the future society in which classes and class struggles will be completely eliminated. Thus, we can refrain from the views that class struggle has died out or that the scope of class struggle must be enlarged. In addition, this new characteristic also helps to draw clear demarcation lines, as far as a series of questions is concerned, with the "leftist" guiding ideology of the past such as the so-called "taking class struggle as the key link."

First, the object of class struggle has changed. Before it was wiped out, the exploiting class as a whole was the object of class struggle. Since the elimination of the exploiting class, the object of class struggle mainly includes counterrevolutionaries, enemy special agents, criminals seriously disrupting socialist order, new exploiters going in for graft, embezzlement and speculation, remnants of the "gang of four," a very small number of landlords and rich peasants who have not been successfully remolded, and some remnants of the old exploiting class. At present, stress should be put on hitting at those who have committed serious economic crimes. As a response to the slogan "take class struggle as the key link," the former practice of taking the so-called "capitalist roaders," who actually did not exist, as the main object of class struggle, was entirely wrong.

Second, the status of class struggle in Chinese society has changed. Since the exploiting class has been eliminated, class struggle is no longer the principal contradiction in Chinese society. This was pointed out in the "resolution" adopted by the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee" "After the socialist transformation was fundamentally completed, the principal contradiction that our country has had to resolve is that between the growing material and cultural needs of the people and the backwardness of social production. It was imperative that the focus of party and government work be shifted to socialist modernization centering on economic construction and that the people's material and cultural life be gradually improved by means of an immense expansion of the productive forces." Class struggle, including the current campaign against serious crimes in the economic field, must be subordinate to and serve economic construction.

Third, the assessment of the conditions of class struggle has changed. In the past, class struggle was thought to be present at all times and in all places and a number of social contradictions which did not fall within the scope of class struggle were regarded as having a class struggle nature. At present, class struggle is thought to be present only within certain limits and will be present for a long time to come. Meanwhile, the "resolution" pointed out: "We must correctly understand that there are diverse social contradictions in Chinese society which do not fall within the scope of class struggle and that methods other than class struggle must be used for their appropriate resolution." This means that in the socialist society in our country at present there exists class struggle and various social contradictions which do not fall within the scope of class struggle. One of these social contradictions is the reflection of class struggle among the people.

It is a social contradiction related to but different from class struggle. Such struggle means a struggle against the influence of the exploiting class reflected among the comrades, and such a contradiction is a nonantagonistic contradiction. Of course, nonantagonistic and antagonistic contradictions develop into each other in given conditions. For example, a minor economic offense, if developed, may develop into a serious economic crime. This transformation covers a course leading from quantitative change to qualitative change. However, before a qualitative change has taken place, the contradiction does not fall within the scope of class struggle. Apart from this, there exist among the people numerous contradictions between right and wrong and between the advanced and backward. These contradictions are not of the nature of class struggle. We can limit class struggle within a certain scope as long as we pay attention to strictly distinguishing class struggle and its reflection from various social contradictions which are not of the nature of class struggle.

Fourth, the method of class struggle has changed. Because class struggle is no longer the principal social contradiction at present, we need not and should not launch a turbulent movement of a mass character as we formerly did. It is entirely possible for us to make full use of our state apparatus to solve problems of class struggle which exist within certain limits. The current campaign against serious crime in the economic field is not being launched in the manner of a mass movement. Instead, problems are solved by taking facts as the basis and the law as the criterion, by acting according to judicial procedure and by the method of handling a law case.

The above analysis shows that whether in assessing the current situation or in considering the characteristic, object, status, scope and method of class struggle, we can see that class struggle under new historical conditions in our socialist society is fundamentally different from the former "leftist" guiding ideology of "taking class struggle as the key link." Some people say that be resuming the formulation adopted before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, we are taking the road back. Their view is groundless. If we correctly approach and grasp the characteristic of class struggle under the new historical conditions, correctly assess the conditions of the current class struggle without diminution or exaggeration, act in strict accordance with the central authorities' principles and policies on the campaign against serious crimes in the economic field and prudently handle the crimes according to law, we can certainly and correctly handle the current problems of class struggle in the economic field and shall never again make the mistake of widening the scope of class struggle. There can be no doubt about this.

ARTICLE ON 'PERSONS UNFIT FOR LEADING POSTS'

HK111430 Beijing REVIEW in English No 23, 7 Jun 82 p 3

["Notes From the Editors" by political editor An Zhiguo: "Three Types of Persons Unfit for Leading Posts"]

[Text] It is said that "rebels" who got into high positions during the "Cultural Revolution" are not permitted to join the leading bodies. Does it mean you are "purging" those people with ultra-left ideas?

Reorganization of ministries and commissions under the State Council has been completed and the structural reform of leading organs of the party Central Committee is also going smoothly. A major task of the structural reform is to promote competent younger people to leading posts at various levels, and a large number of veteran cadres have already left their posts.

What kind of persons should be chosen for the responsible posts? The answer to this question will not only affect the success or failure of the structural reform, but will determine whether or not the line and policies formulated at the end of 1978 at the third plenary session of the 11th party Central Committee will be continued. It was at this session that a blueprint for China's new historical period was drawn up.

It has long been clear that three types of people are unfit for any leading posts: followers of Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and company who wormed their way into high positions during the "Cultural Revolution" (1966-76); people with strong factional ideas; and those who engaged in beating, smashing and looting during the "Cultural Revolution." Anyone in these three categories who is found to be holding a leading post definitely will be removed from office.

Two news items appeared not long ago that are relevant to this issue:

The vice-director of a science research institute in an enterprise in Jilin Province was removed from his post because it was found that he had played a destructive role during the "Cultural Revolution." He had been a leader of a rebel group in a university and had taken a direct part in the persecution of the former Defense Minister Peng Dehuai, and had joined in beating people.

The leadership of the Tianjin marine products bureau recently was reorganized because the director and vice-director and two other leading cadres had been rebels who gained their positions during the "Cultural Revolution." After they came to power, they promoted many of their equally disreputable followers to leading positions in departments under the bureau. Ignoring directives from the State Council, these persons persisted in pursuing a wrong policy in their work, with the result that fish output dropped drastically and costs were the highest in China.

These two items support the contention that the three aforementioned types of people are unfit for responsible posts. They are the remnants of the gang of four, both organizationally and ideologically. Although there are not many of them, they often cause great trouble. They stick to ultra-left methods and refuse to follow the line and policies formulated since the third plenary session. They gang up and carry on secret activities; some are two-faced and pretend to be active in work in order to win the trust of the leadership. Such people will stir up trouble when the time is ripe, so are considered dangerous.

However, strict distinctions are called for. Those who committed serious errors during the "Cultural Revolution" should not be equated with these three categories of persons, still less those who made minor mistakes. Many of the latter group have realized the nature of their mistakes and have since earnestly implemented the line, policies and principles formulated since the third plenary session. Some have made contributions in their work and enjoy the support of the masses. It is possible that such people might be elected to leading posts.

Barring the three kinds of persons from leadership does not mean we are suppressing those with ultra-left ideas. The two should be distinguished. As to the three kinds of persons mentioned above, they will not hold leading posts; and if they are party members, they will not automatically be expelled from the party. They will be dealt with according to their particular situations and will be educated so that they will realize their mistakes. In the case of those who have ultra-left ideas, they will be helped to enhance their understanding, correct their mistakes and advance together with the others.

Because we have already achieved political stability, the policy of stability and unity will remain unchanged.

HONGQI ARTICLE ON STATUS, DUTIES OF PREMIER

[By Xu Chongde in HONGQI]

[Text] DEMOCRACY IS FLOURISHING IN CHINA. A LIVELY DISCUSSION ON THE NEW DRAFT CONSTITUTION IS GOING ON AMONG THE ENTIRE CHINESE PEOPLE. CHINA DAILY IS INTRODUCING THIS TWICE-WEEKLY COLUMN TO ALLOW OUR READERS TO JOIN THE DISCUSSION. [passage published in boldface]

The structure of China's highest administrative organs has undergone three stages of development. The first was the government Administration Council of 1949-1954 which was a committee system. The council consisted of one premier, several vice-premiers, a secretary general and several administrative councillors. Administrative councillors could hold concurrent posts as directors of council commissions or ministers, who were not necessarily administrative councillors.

The second stage, the State Council, was stipulated in the 1954 Constitution. The difference was that there were no committee members holding either concurrent posts as ministers or ministers without portfolio; and all ministers and directors of commissions were without exception members of the State Council.

The present State Council is the third stage. This system places the ultimate decision making responsibility on the premier. Its characteristics are:

-- The number of vice-premiers is reduced to the minimum. "The premier directs the work of the State Council. The vice-premiers and councillors of state assist the premier in his work." This shows that the premier holds the dominant post.

-- The premier is to be appointed by the chairman of the People's Republic. Actually, the chairman is the symbol and representative of the state. Therefore, the premier actually receives the mandate from the state. He is to represent the interests of the people in organizing the government and in bearing the responsibility of managing state affairs and leading the highest administrative organ.

Big Change

It can be readily seen that the draft has further strengthened the status and duties of the premier. Undoubtedly this is a significant change needed to meet the needs of modernization.

Collective management is feasible under certain conditions. Lenin called such a system a "preparatory class" in learning management. It is, however, liable to create multiple leadership with none assuming the ultimate responsibility.

When the will of the state, formed democratically through collective discussion, is to be put into execution, the executive organ must do it rapidly, and in the process clarify the areas of personal responsibility.

The basic principle of management is that a person should be held entirely responsible for a definite work under his charge. If we continue to content ourselves with unending discussions and piles of official documents -- an irresponsible attitude towards work which is incompatible with the requirements of socialist modernization -- the future of our nation will be dreadful to contemplate.

Some people think that the system of decision making by the premier contradicts democratic centralization. But this is wrong. This system still requires collective discussion of major problems in regular and plenary meetings of the State Council. The regular meetings, in particular,exercise the function of collective leadership, as Premier Zhao Ziyang said. "We need committees to discuss certain basic problems and personel responsibility and personal leadership to avoid procrastination and shirking of responsibility."

The draft constitution also enlarges to a certain extend the function and power of the State Council. One measure bestows on the council the power to draw up and approve administrative statutes. In China, democratic centralism and "unity of discussion and action" have been the basic principles of the socialist political system.

MINISTRIES ISSUE CIRCULAR ON TRAIN ATTACKS

[Text] Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Public Security and the Ministry of Railways recently issued a circular to public security departments and bureaus as well as railway and engineering bureaus in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions on serious attacks against passenger trains, calling on them to adopt effective measures to curb attacks against trains, ensure the safety of passengers and safeguard railway transportation.

The circular pointed out: Several attacks against trains occurred in 1981. New incidents were reported during the first quarter of this year. More trains were attacked in districts under the administration of the Qiqihar, Harbin, Jilin, Shenyang, Beijing, Shanghai, Wuhan, Chengdu and Lanzhou railway bureaus. Even more flagrant were the incidents that occurred on railways between Jagdaqi and Nenjiang and between Suihua and Langxiang in Heilongjiang, between Tianshui and Lanzhou in Gansu and near Zhangjiaji in Hubei. All these incidents seriously endangered the safety of passengers and railway transportation.

The circular held: First, the majority of incidents were caused by youngsters and middle and primary school students in various communes and brigades in cities and towns along the railways who played pranks or tried to attack the trains for fun. Second, some people were asked to pay when they were found riding trains without tickets. They became angry and attacked the trains for revenge. Third, the services rendered by a few train attendants were sometimes unsatisfactory. This angered passengers who then attacked the trains for revenge.

The circular called on the public security and railway departments in various localities to carry out the following tasks:

The public security departments at all levels must rely on the local people's governments at all levels in resolutely implementing the guidelines laid down by the directive of the party Central Committee and the State Council on strengthening public security measures along the railways, in educating the masses, youngsters, and middle and primary school students in various communes and brigades along the railways on the socialist legal system, on protecting the railways, on cherishing the trains and in vigorously carrying out the "five stresses and four beauties" activities.

The railway administration departments must closely coordinate with various localities in maintaining public order along the railways. They must dissuade the commune members and people from riding trains without tickets or becoming stowaways on freight trains. The main line trains and key railway stations where public order has been disturbed must firmly stop stowaways and prevent people from riding trains without tickets. Vendors must be educated and placed under control in selling farm and sideline products and foodstuffs at the railway stations. Vendors without proper permits are not allowed to peddle near trains.

Railway workers must be educated to foster the thinking of wholeheartedly serving the people; adopt a correct attitude in serving passengers; pay attention to policy, method and courtesy in handling problems; and combat illegal practices.

Various localities must earnestly investigate and find out the truth about attacks against trains occurring in their own districts and seriously deal with such incidents. Parents must be instructed to exercise strict control over students and youngsters who attacked the trains. In serious cases, the parents should be held responsible for their own children and pay for damages to trains. Those commune members and people who attacked the trains must pay for damages to trains. In addition, disciplinary actions, such as warnings, fines and detention must also be taken against them according to the seriousness of the case. Concerning those who attacked the trains and carried out sabotage activities, it is necessary to pursue their criminal liabilities in accordance with the law.

BEIJING RADIO CALLS FOR STOPPING SCHOOL DAMAGE

[Station commentary: "Resolutely Stop Damage to Schools"]

[Text] As a result of the party and government's keen attention to education, the status of teachers has been gradually elevated and new progress has been made in the field of education in recent years. However, showing contempt for education and teachers has yet to come to a complete halt, causing harmful effects on the undertaking of education.

Party and government leaders and education administrative departments of some localities have failed to take timely measures to correct the situation and merely shifted responsibility among themselves, thus encouraging the unhealthy practice and aggravating the situation.

Incidents in Xintian County in Hunan Province had continued for nearly a year. The county party committee had time and again delayed handling of the incidents. It was only after the provincial party committee adopted a firm attitude recently that the county party committee started to pay serious attention to the incidents. Shouldn't this problem merit our deep thought?

The school is a garden for training talented people for the building of the four modernizations and the teachers are the diligent gardeners. Only when the school property is protected, lawful rights of the people's teachers safeguarded, and normal teaching order maintained, can education flourish. Party committees at various levels and departments concerned should show great foresight by including education, an important matter of strategic significance, on the agenda and take effective measures to achieve progress. At the same time, it is necessary to conscientiously investigate and handle people and practices showing contempt for the teachers or seriously damaging the school's interests and disrupting the teaching order. Serious cases should be punished in accordance with law.

Problems in Hunan

[Text] Since July 1981 some middle schools and primary schools in Xintian County, Hunan Province, have begun to suffer serious damage, with school properties looted, educational bases encroached upon and many teachers insulted, cursed and beaten, making it hard to maintain normal campus order. It has been almost a year. The damage has not been effectively stopped. On the contrary, the situation is becoming worse. During 1981 summer and winter vacations alone, the middle schools and primary schools in Xintian County lost school properties worth more than 31,000 yuan.

During the winter vacation, all desks and benches for the more than 200 students in 5 classrooms of the (Sanxia) primary school in (Sanjin) commune were looted and taken away. Doors and windows were smashed and blackboards destroyed. The looters even took teachers' desks, cooking utensils, beds and cabinets.

The school buildings of the (Xixianshan) primary school are newly built, but all doors and windows have been damaged. In addition, local commune members have taken forcible possession of all the wooden stools for 147 students. Of the 25 middle schools in the county, 10 have been wrecked. Nearly 200 of the 481 primary schools have been damaged to various extents. The failure to duly deal with the lootings of school properties encouraged some 80 troublemakers of the (Longyimao) production brigade to grab for a mile after taking an inch. They repeatedly took away electric wires and lights from the classrooms of the (Jiantou) middle school and ruined the crops on more than 10 mu of school land. People in many localities held wedding or funeral banquets in schools and forced the schools to suspend classes. Because of commune members' wedding banquets, the (Xinglong) commune primary school has lost more than 240 double benches. Some 400 students have to stand through all classes. Eighty percent of the educational bases of the middle schools and primary schools in Xintian County have been encroached upon.

At the same time, insulting and beating teachers constantly occurs in Xintian County. In 1981, six cases concerning beating of teachers happened in Xintian County. Only one of them has been dealt with, while the other five were closed without any settlement. People destroyed all the 3,500 trees planted by teachers and students of the (Chiyang) middle school on its campus as a landscaping project. The leading cadres and teachers of the school were insulted and beaten when they tried to stop the sabotage. On the afternoon of 6 April, some 20 youths from the (Songjia) production brigade chased and beat the students. They beat and severely injured (Xiao Changfa), a teacher, a when he stepped forward to stop them from chasing the students. (Xiao) was hospitalized.

The Hunan Provincial CCP Committee is paying great attention to the repeated wreckings of some middle schools and primary schools in Xintian County. It has issued a circular to thhe whole province. The Xintian County CCP Committee and People's Government, acting on the instruction of the provincial party committee, are forming a working group in order to conduct an investigation in coordination with the departments concerned to duly deal with this important case as soon as possible.

FURTHER ON INVESTMENT PROMOTION MEETING

HK140201 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE 1515 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Text] Guangzhou, 11 Jun (ZHONGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The China investment promotion meeting, which lasted for 5 days, has given people a deep impression with its broad scale, significant results and profound influence. This is a successful attempt by China to use foreign capital on a large scale.

The United Nations Industrial Development Organization [UNIDO] and the Chinese Government attached great importance to the meeting; as a result, the meeting was carried out smoothly.

One of the characteristics of the meeting was that it was broad in scale. Judging from the number of people attending, this meeting was attended by more people than any other meeting of its kind sponsored by the United Nations. Some 500 foreign investors and some 800 participants from the Chinese side attended the meeting.

The broad scale of the meeting was manifested by the large number of projects proposed at the meeting. The 130 projects which had been seriously screened were different from those proposed at other meetings of its kind. Moreover, these projects involved many kinds of industries, with stress on medium and small-scale projects. This complies with the actual situation of China and tallies with the financial capability of the majority of medium and small foreign firms. This was the special attraction of the meeting.

The second characteristic is its significant results. Up till now, about 60 proposals and memorandums have been signed with foreign investors; that is about half of the total number of proposed projects. The number of light industry, textile and machine-building projects was far greater than expected. Furthermore, with the other proposed projects, although no proposals have been signed, both parties have arrived at agreements and they will keep in contact in the future. There is a chance of success. Although the signing of proposals and memoranda does not signify ultimate success, this is indeed a good omen.

Some results of the meeting cannot be calculated in terms of figures. This is what we meant by the influence and significance of the meeting, which is the third characteristic of the meeting.

By means of propaganda and introduction through various channels, the China investment promotion meeting has drawn the attention of the international economic society. Since many Western countries have more connections with the United Nations, more people from these countries have attended the meeting, and more proposals have been signed with them. The foreign merchants said that they would convey the message of the meeting to their partners so that they would also come to China to invest. Foreign merchants were arriving at the meeting right up to the last day to talk over projects they were interested in.

The meeting has just come to an end and it is still too early to appraise the significance of the meeting. However, a foreign banker said that China is a huge market and it is getting more ready for foreign investments. The Chinese are very determined and China has bright prospects. Most of what he said, in fact, represents the opinions of the participating foreign merchants.

The foreign and Chinese participants of the meeting unanimously held that the meeting sponsored by China and the United Nations was a success. It was successful in that so many projects were proposed and so many foreign merchants took part in the meeting to have direct contacts with their Chinese counterparts. However, since this is the first large scale meeting of its kind ever held, there is still much left to be desired regarding the preparation work, organization work and reception work. Since the Chinese party did not have sufficient understanding of the situation of foreign merchants, trade talks had been hampered, and since the foreign merchants had not provided sufficient information on their proposed projects, it was difficult for the Chinese to make decisions. We believe the UNIDO and the Chinese departments concerned will make a summary of the meeting. We believe that the China investment promotion meeting is a good start for China to absorb and utilize large-sacle foreign capital and this task will be perfected in the days to come. It will certainly open up new prospects for Chinese foreign economic activities.

BANK OF CHINA TO SPUR FOREIGN INVESTMENT

[Text] Guangzhou, June 11 (XINHUA) -- The Bank of China, the nation's only foreign exchange bank, is willing to provide loans and services to projected started through cooperation between Chinese institutions and Hong Kong, Macao or foreign investors, including joint ventures, cooperation enterprises and compensation trade, according to a senior official of the financial institution.

The official, who attended the China investment promotion meeting in Guangzhou, said that the Bank of China is willing to underwrite such projects with working capital loans, accounts receivable financing and fixed asset loans, as well as settlements of accounts and consultant services.

The official reaffirmed the principle of allowing foreign investors to remit net profits after taxes and other legitimate income abroad, in accordance with the regulations for exchange control of the People's Republic of China.

According to the same regulations, foreign workers or staff members employed in joint ventures may remit abroad foreign exchange in an amount not exceeding 50 percent of their net wages and other income after taxes.

Representatives of more than 40 banks in France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, Pakistan, the U.S., as well as foreign banks based in Hong Kong, attended the investment promotion meeting. A number of commercial banks, including the Deutsche Bank of the Federal Republic of Germany, have expressed willingness to provide loans to potential foreign investors and joint ventures.

CHINA DAILY REPORTS BANK OF CHINA ASSETS

[Report: "Bank of China Gives Annual Reports"]

[Text] The Bank of China had assets totalling 92.2 billion yuan at the end of 1981, compared to 76 billion at the close of 1980, according to the bank's annual yearbook, which will be published soon.

During 1981, the bank opened a branch in New York and a representative office in Paris, bringing its total number of foreign offices to 22. The Bank of China also has correspondent relations with 2920 offices of 1071 banks abroad.

Loans

The bank's 141 domestic offices extended foreign exchange loans totalling US$3,87 billion in 1981, of which $3.61 billion was utilized. Repayments in foreign exchange amounted to $3.38 billion.

The bank also has RMB 6.2 billion yuan outstanding in loans aimed at increasing production of commodities for export, as well as RMB 530 million yuan extended for other purposes.

By the end of last year, the Bank of China had set up trust and consulting offices at 38 branches, which have already handled 6000 contracts involving an estimated US$1 billion.

"It may be justifiably said that the trust and consultancy business is gradually developing into one of our main banking businesses, " a bank spokesman said.

The Bank of China has also initiated several other new services, including credit card, tourism, securities, and investment services.

FURTHER ON BUILDING MATERIALS INDUSTRY MEETING

OW130423 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1242 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- The national meeting on the building materials industry which ended on 11 June said: The building materials industry in China must strive to create a new situation in achieving better economic results and expanding production promptly so as to keep pace with the development of the national economy and meet the pressing needs of the broad masses for building materials.

During the meeting, a principal reponsible comrade of the State Economic Commission listened to the briefing made by a responsible person of the State Bureau of the Building Materials Industry on the meeting and put forward a proposal on how to further quicken the pace in developing the building materials industry.

Zhang Jingfu, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, said: The building materials industry must become the pioneer of the national economy. It is necessary to whip up the enthusiasm of all the departments concerned, particularly that of the building materials departments and nonbuilding materials departments at the central and local level. Particular attention must be paid to bringing into full play the enthusiasm of various localities and the masses in raising funds of their own in developing the building materials industry. The building materials industry must be developed in a flexible way. We must neither demand uniformity in everything, nor exercise excessively rigid control over the industry. We must keep in mind the interests of the state while making adequate allowances for the interests of various localities and enterprises.

He also said it is essential to strengthen leadership over the local enterprises in the production of building materials. The building materials bureaus in various provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions can only be strengthened instead of being weakened.

This national meeting on the building materials industry is the first nationwide meeting on this industry since the restructuring of the State Council. The meeting emphatically discussed how to create a new situation in developing the building materials industry.

The building materials industry is a weak link in the entire national economy in China. There are many contradictions between supply and demand for the great majority of building materials. The supply of such materials falls far short of the needs in quantity, quality and variety. The responsible persons of the building materials departments in various localities who attended the meeting had conscientiously discussed several specific measures on how to create a new situation in the development of the building materials industry. The issues discussed at the meeting include the issue of giving full play to the enthusiasm of all the departments concerned under the unified plans of the state, the issue of finding funds through various channels for the development of the building materials industry, the issue of conducting technical innovations in old plants by adopting advanced technology, techniques and equipment, and the issue of paying full attention to streamlining the enterprises.

The meeting also made specific arrangements for capital construction work for the building materials industry. It decided to pay full attention to the seven projects which are expected to be completed and commissioned within the year. It pointed out: Efforts must be made to quicken the pace in building the three large cement plants under construction -- Jidong, Huaihai and Ningguo -- in an effort to finish the construction projects as soon as possible and improve economic results for the money invested.

XINHUA Commentator

[XINHUA commentator's article: "Make the Building Materials Industry One of Vitality"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- Building materials are a means of subsistence as well as a means of production. The speed of development of the building materials industry has a tremendous bearing on a country's national economy and its people's livelihood.

In their recent speeches, CCP Central Committee and State Council leading comrades repeatedly noted the need to make the building materials industry viable and build it into an industry of vitality. This is a very relevant comment.

What will make the building materials industry an industry of vitality? Judging from the present situation, it has to meet at least the following three requirements: 1) It has to be able basically to satisfy the housing needs of the 1 billion people and the need of the four modernizations in the quantity, variety and quality of its products. 2) The policy and methods adopted by the various departments of the industry must be in keeping with the actual situation and proved to be very effective. 3) It must have good economic results and be capable of providing large sums of construction funds to the state.

If we use the aforementioned three points as a gauge, we will find the building materials industry we have now has serious shortcomings. It falls short of needs, whether in quantity, variety or quality. It is estimated that the amount of cement provided the state for distribution is short by several million dun each year. The plate glass available can meet only around 40 percent of the total need. Ceramic sanitation equipment and some of the other building materials are also very difficult to find on the market. The building materials industry has become a particularly weak link in the national economy.

At present, there are nearly 50,000 enterprises in the building materials industry in China. Of these enterprises, only 11 percent are under the ownership by the whole people and 89 percent are owned by collectives. The industry has a total of 3.5 million workers and staff, but only 1.67 million, or less than half of them, are employed by units under the ownership by the whole people. Therefore, we have to know how to skillfully organize and lead the production by the collectively owned building materials enterprise, and mobilize the initiative of the workers and staff of these enterprises because this will have a great impact on the development of this industry. Collective enterprises should be encouraged and guided to produce bricks, tiles, mortar, sand, stones and other such building materials.

The building materials departments should strive to open vast vistas, employ various methods and explore different channels of possible sources to obtain development funds by themselves. For instance, they may make use of bank loans or foreign capital, promote compensatory trade with domestic or foreign customers, obtain credits from buyers, promote joint ventures, and so on. In addition to our efforts to build factories with foreign capital to produce new types of glass and other building materials, enterprises of other industries, including the military industry, should be encouraged and helped to turn out such materials.

Now the country has established the China new-type building materials corporation and is preparing to establish four more corporations, including those of cement, glass and ceramics, and nonmetallic minerals. All of them will be economic entities that combine industry and trade and place production, supply and marketing under unified operation.

In order for the building materials industry to become viable, it is also necessary for leading cadres at all levels in the industry to have a correct guiding thought, really see to it that all work in various fields is geared to the goal of good economic results, and strive to open a new vista of vigorous development.

MEASURES FOR RAISING TRANSPORT CAPACITY OUTLINED

OW110952 Beijing XINHUA in English 0737 GMT 11 Jan 82

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (XINHUA) -- "Double-tracking" and electrification of rail lines, construction of new railways and wharves and dredging of the Grand Canal are among the major measures scheduled to be adopted to improve China's transportation, according to the recent issue of the publication ECONOMIC INFORMATION.

The measures were outlined by Guo Hongtao, adviser to the State Economic Commission, at a recent inaugural meeting of the China Communications and Transportation Association.

Guo Hongtao said that a number of rail lines will have a second set of tracks constructed parallel to existing ones, and electrified to facilitate the transportation of coal from the major producing areas of Shanxi and Henan Provinces and the Ningxia and Inner Mongolia Autonomous Regions.

This work will involve the Beijing-Qinhuangdao railway, Fengtai-Datong railway, Shijiazhuang-Taiyuan railway, Shijiazhuang-Dezhou railway, and Datong-Pukou railway. Sections of the north-south trunk line, the Beijing-Guangzhou railway, and parts of the east-west trunk line, the Longhai railway, will also be double-tracked or electrified.

The other measures to be adopted include:

-- building new wharves and adding shipping fleets to expand Yangtze River navigation and coastal and ocean-going shipping;

-- electrification of the Guizhou-Kunming and other railways in remote southwest China, transforming a few railway sections there and improving navigation along Xijiang River, the major tributary of the Pearl River;

-- starting work this year on dredging the 830-kilometer southern section of the Grand Canal running from Jining in Shandong Province to Hangzhou in Zhejiang Province, with the long-term goal of making the whole section navigable all year round;

-- using larger railway freight cars and larger trucks, and producing refrigerator cars and cars for container traffic;

-- raising the coal dressing capacity which will in turn help ease the tension in the transporation of coal; and

-- increasing the daily flights and passenger carrying capacity of the civil airlines.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR ON LITERATURE, ART

[Commentator's article: "Strive To Portray New Life and New People -- Studying Comrade Mao Zedong's 15 Letters to Literary and Art Circle Figures"]

[Text] When the literary and art circles celebrated the 40th anniversary of the Yenan forum on literature and art, Comrade Mao Zedong's 15 letters to literary and art circle figures and Comrade Chen Yun's article "On the Question of Two Tendencies Among the Party's Literary and Art Workers" were published. The publishing of these two documents is of immediate instructive significance.

Conscientiously studying, understanding and implementing the spirit of these documents will definitely be beneficial to the development of socialist literature and art in the new period and to making literary and artistic creation flourish.

The 15 letters by Comrade Mao Zedong to literary and art circle figures cover a wide sphere and have substantial content. One of the most important points in these letters was the call to and encouragement of writers and artists to portray new world and new people. After regarding Comrade Xiao San's poems, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out that "works depicting the struggle are needed now, because current life is full of struggle. I hope you can produce more works." After watching a play, reflecting the life of struggle in the enemy's rear areas, put on by the opera troupe of the Eighth Route Army, he pointed out in a letter to Comrade Ouyang Shanzun and other leaders of this troupe: "I believe that you have put on a good play. Yanan and the border areas need to see dramas which can reflect the life of struggle in the enemy's rear areas. It is hoped that you can put on more plays of this kind." In a letter to Comrade Ding Ling and Comrade Ouyang Shan, he made a positive appraisal of their articles introducing two models in the Shanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border area, and said: "Congratulations to both of you on your new writing style." In another letter to Comrade Xiao San, Mao Zedong agreed with Xiao's article on the issue of writers and artists going deep among the masses of workers, peasants and soldiers. He also specially noted that it is necessary to remind a few leading comrades in the party, asking them to create conditions for writers and artists to participate in some meetings of labor models and mass rallies. In a letter to Comrade Shen Yanbing, he provided an inscription -- "It is hoped that more good works can be produced" -- for the first issue of PEOPLE'S LITERATURE. All these form one continuous line with the spirit of Comrade Mao Zedong's speech at the Yanan forum, in which he encouraged writers and artists to plunge into the thick of life and devote efforts to portraying "the new people and the new world."

At present, our country has entered a new epoch of socialist modernization construction. We are building our country into a socialist power with modern industry, modern agriculture, modern national defense and modern science and technology and with highly developed democracy and civilization. When building a highly developed material civilization, we also need to raise the scientific and cultural level of the whole nation, enrich people's cultural life with noble ideology and build a highly developed socialist spiritual civilization. It is necessary to cultivate our people, especially the young generation, with noble ideals and morality and make them well-educated and highly disciplined. In the course of realizing this great historical mission, literature and art shoulder an important task which no other departments can fulfill.

Our art and literature must actively portray the life of the new people. Social life is the source of all literary and artistic creations. The life of the broad masses is an inexhaustible source of our socialist literary and artistic creation. Our writers and artists should depict this varied and colorful social life. They should pay more attention to portraying the course of people's united struggle to transform the old society and the old ideology and to build the new society and their new life. They should eulogize people's fighting spirit and their great achievements under the leadership of the Communist Party. At present, a small number of writers are keen on portraying the isolated "ego" which is divorced from the masses. Some of them even use literature and art as a means of giving vent to personal spite, exposing shameful secrets and advocating extreme egoism. This practice fundamentally distorts the nature and functions of socialist literature and art. If we let this practice go unchecked, art and literature will be led in a wrong orientation. The ideology of extreme egoism spread by these works can also sully and poison the general mood of our society. Socialist literary and artistic creation is a lofty cause. We should follow Marxist aesthetic principles to develop artistic creation "in accordance with aesthetic laws."

We should make efforts to portray the mental outlook of the socialist new people. In his congratulatory speech on behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council at the fourth national conference of writers and artists, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "Our literature and art should devote greater efforts to depicting and cultivating socialist new people and to striving for greater successes." His words are of far-reaching significance to socialist literature and art. Revolutionary art and literature can and should proceed from actual life; by portraying various characters, educate and influence the masses and help them to push history ahead. In the new period of the socialist modernization drive, thousands and thousands of pioneers are emerging. We should make efforts to depict their new mental outlook and portray these vigorous socialist new people. Through the portrayal of their images, we can arouse the socialist initiative of the broad masses and encourage them to play a creative role in the historical cause of the modernization drive. Since the downfall of the "gang of four," especially since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the overwhelming majority of our writers and artists have devoted their efforts to working in the above-mentioned manner. However, a small number of writers have, on the contrary, tried to "probe the secrets of the human soul." They depict some people's abnormal state of mind. In their works, the characters of the people living in the epoch of socialism are totally different from the features of this age. Our standard is communism. We should let a hundred flowers bloom in literary and artistic creation. However, no matter what themes or what character are depicted, we should always apply communist ideals and sentiments and the socialist spirit of our age in the production of our works, so as to educate people and give our works a force to encourage people to forge ahead.

Our writers and artists, especially those inside the party, should bear in mind their responsibility. Comrade Chen Yun has correctly pointed out: "Why do the masses welcome a writer? It is mainly because his works can reflect their feelings. Therefore, a revolutionary writer, a writer who can identify himself with the revolutionary masses, can be welcomed by the revolutionary masses. If someone sees this relationship absolutely and assumes that whatever he writes will surely be accepted by the masses, that is just a terrible misunderstanding. There is no need to say that a writer who runs in a direction opposite to that of the masses, or even a writer who goes in the same direction as the masses but does not advance as fast as them, can be forgotten by them." Comrade Chen Yun also warned that writers and artists inside the party should first regard themselves as common members of the party and not intellectuals; they must be neither privileged nor conceited. We should try hard to be worthy writers and artists of the party.

Making socialist literature and art flourish, raising the level of literature and art, producing excellent literary and artistic works and performing works which are worthy of our great people and our great age are the historical mission of all our writers and artists. We believe that, under the party's leadership, by adhering to the four basic principles, through a conscientious study of Marxism, Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and through studying society and closely combining with the people in the new era, China's socialist art and literature will inevitably show a new flourishing scene like hundreds of flowers blossoming in a riot of color.

LEADERS CELEBRATE BEIJING THEATER'S ANNIVERSARY

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jun (XINHUA) -- A grand party was held on the evening of 11 June to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the Beijing People's Art Theater.

Attending the party were Deng Yingchao, Ulanhu, Wan Li, Xi Zhongxun, Gu Mu, Deng Liqun, Zhou Weizhi, Li Bozhao, Yang Hansheng, Zhou Erfu, Duan Junyi, Jiao Ruoyu and veterans and well-known personages in Beijing's literary, art and theatrical circles. Some 600 people attended in all. They are regular spectators of the Beijing people's art theater.

Speaking at the party, Deng Yingchao said she has been a regular spectator ever since the opening of the theater. She said that Chinese modern drama has in recent years attained a much higher level than ever before, and the artists, old, middle-aged and young, have shown great improvement. The theater has made this progress under the guidance of Chairman Mao's principle of letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools of thought contend, she added. She said she is fully confident that the study of Chairman Mao's talks at the Yanan literary and art forum and the party's policies on literature and art and the practice of criticism and self-criticism will help the literary and art circles score new achievements.

In his speech Xi Zhongxun, member of the CCP Central Committee's Secretariat, said that the Beijing People's Art Theater has achieved tremendous progress in art over the past 3 decades. Some dramas may create one problem or another, but, in general, dramas presented by the theater are wholesome. He said the theater has done a good job in building a repertoire of historical, foreign and contemporary dramas in line with Chairman Mao's "hundred flowers" principle and the policy of making the past serve the present and foreign things serve China. He urged the artists to continue their efforts in scoring greater achievements and making their fine tradition and performance serve the people and socialism.

Zhao Xun, vice chairman of the Chinese Dramatists' Association, spoke on behalf of the All-China Federation of Literary and Art Circles and the association. He said that in the past 30 years, the Beijing People's Art Theater has created an artistic style acceptable to the broad masses of spectators and contributed greatly to the history of Chinese drama.

XINHUA DESCRIBES 'HOW A CHINESE THEATER WORKS'

OW111910 Beijing XINHUA in English 1836 GMT 11 Jun 82

["How a Chinese Theatre Works" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (XINHUA) -- China's leading theater of modern drama today celebrates 30 years of fruitful work of building a classical repertoire, training artists, keeping in step with social conflict and progress and serving the people.

With a staff of 300, the Beijing People's Art Theater is headed by President Cao Yu, a playwright who has half a century's stage experience.

The late Jiao Juyin, an expert in world drama, was the theater's general director until his death in 1975.

On its 30th anniversary, the theatre's Vice President Diao Guang Tan told XINHUA today that the theater will work on more contemporary themes with deeper insight and plans more exchanges with drama troupes from other countries.

An art committee of 30 prominent dramatists decides the repertoire and evaluates performances.

Characterized by superb directing and acting, the theatre has built a repertoire of 156 plays in the last three decades, including the works of Shakespeare, Moliere, Chekhov, Gorky, Ostrovsky and Durrenmatt as well as contemporary Chinese dramatists Guo Moruo, Tian Han, Xia Yan, Yang Hansheng and Ding Xilin.

Critics and audience are unanimous that the theater can be admired for its literary refinement and its ability to capture a national flavor when it comes to Chinese masterpieces. Its presentation of "Teahouse" in Europe in 1980, a debut of Chinese spoken drama in this part of the world, proved to be a success.

Contemporary themes make up 75 percent of the repertoire while historical plays and European classics make up the rest. 25 percent for historical and classic productions is a percentage relatively higher than for most troupes in the country. In a sense the theater has a job to introduce world classics to China.

Four generations of dramatists are working together to build up the fame of the theater. There are veteran members of the "resistance" drama troupes founded by the late Premier Zhou Enlai and Guo Moruo during the war against Japanese aggression, progressives of the 1940s in the Kuomintang controlled areas before liberation, graduates of new China's drama colleges and young people trained by the theater.

All the younger performers are required to continue studies in literature, history, painting, dance, music, and writing. "No stardom here," a member on the art committee said. "We want artists, real artists."

The theater keeps close ties with various circles of drama, music, dance, the fine arts and film studios. Many of the actors and actresses are concurrently teachers at the Central Drama Institute.

In spite of its fame and high quality of work, the theater's tickets are sold at 40, 60, and 80 fen, the same prices as charged by most drama companies. The theater has an average annual income of 150,000 yuan RMB and receives an annual subsidy of 360,000 yuan from the government. The highest pay for performances is about the same as that of a university professor.

The Beijing People's Art Theater has its own theater house, the Capital, with 1,200 seats. With the best acoustics in China, four rehearsal halls and the city's first rotary stage of the 1950s, the theater is often picked by visiting troupes from other lands for performances.

The theater receives an average of 100 new scripts each year. It helps writers who show talent by staging the revised scripts.

Often the theater invites people from the public to preview new productions and solicits their opinions. The artists go to the countryside, factories, schools, shops and army units to observe life. Its latest hit, "Who Is Stronger," about the people's fight against unhealthy tendencies, was the work of one of the theater's writers who spent a half year at Beijing No 2 textile mill and was also the result of opinions from workers and cadres.

BEIJING COMMENTARY URGES IMPROVED FALL HARVEST

OW130500 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "Do a Good Job in Fall Production To Reap Bumper Harvests for the Whole Year"]

[Text] Summer harvesting has reached its high point in China. The preliminary situation shows that this year's total summer grain output is close to that of last year and rapeseed production surpasses last year's. This result is hard-earned.

During the growing period of summer grain and oil-bearing crops, droughts persisted and dry and hot winds blew in northern parts of China, while rains and cold spells before April adversely affected the growth of summer crops in southern parts of the country. However, the party's policies have aroused enthusiasm among the broad masses of peasants, agricultural science and technology have tapped the potential of increasing production, and farmland water conservation facilities have helped to combat natural disasters and greatly reduce losses. An important task confronting cadres and people in the vast countryside, after doing a good summer harvesting job, is to continue to exert themselves, overcome difficulties with greater determination and courage, do a good job in fall production and reap bumper harvests for the whole year.

Fall production is the main part of annual agricultural production. Fall grain crops account for two-thirds of total grain crops in terms of both sown area and output. Most industrial crops, such as cotton, oil-bearing crops, sugar crops and tobacco, are harvested in the fall. The success or failure of fall production has an important bearing on the fulfillment of the annual agricultural production plan, on the improvement of people's livelihood and on the smooth progress of national construction as a whole.

We have made some accomplishments in summer harvesting this year, but we have not achieved the desired results yet. This will add to our fall production tasks. Striving for a fairly large increase in fall production is a key to reaping bumper harvests for the whole year. Natural conditions, such as sunshine, water and warmth, are favorable to the growth of crops. However, natural disasters are also very likely during the growing period. Therefore, cadres and commune members in the vast countryside must be prepared ideologically, organizationally and materially to combat natural disasters and adopt measures to win good harvests. Localities where good summer harvests have been gathered should not be blindly optimistic. Localities where summer harvests have decreased should work still harder. From now on, we should do an excellent job in summing up the experience and lessons of local fall production while doing a conscientious job in summer harvesting work. We should take measures to solve specific crucial problems.

Our experience over many years shows that timely early planting and transplanting and early and careful tending may hasten ripening and thus greatly reduce damage done to crops by early frost and cold dew [17th solar term] winds. These methods hold great promise for increasing production. In leading fall production in various localities, we should pay attention to production in high yield regions as well as intermediate and low yield regions. We should help the intermediate and low yield regions to popularize scientific and technological methods that are less costly and yield quick results. We should support those regions in various respects. The intermediate and low yield regions have greater potential for increasing production than the high yield regions. They will make great contributions to the country if their production increases.

A fall bumper harvest concerns the overall national economy. The agricultural departments at all levels and rural communes and production brigades and teams should further improve the system of responsibility and bring into play the initiative of both collectives and individuals. All trades and professions should provide active and effective support to agriculture within their capabilities. Let us work hard together to win bumper agricultural harvests this year.

GUANGDONG ORDERS IMPROVING RURAL ENTERPRISES

HK100425 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] The Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee and Government recently issued instructions on straightening out commune and brigade enterprises, demanding that party committees and government at all levels and the departments concerned strengthen leadership and strive to straighten out all commune and brigade enterprises in rural Guangdong within 2 or 3 years.

The instructions fully affirmed the important position and role of the commune and brigade enterprises in the national economy. The instructions pointed out: The aim of straightening out these enterprises is to make them better meet the needs of the new situation, eliminate negative factors, bring the positive ones into play, further consolidate and improve the enterprises and ensure that they firmly follow the socialist road and develop still more healthily. It is necessary to deal severely with violations of law and discipline, and help to solve various practical problems. We must certainly not interpret straightening out the commune and brigade enterprises as limiting their development.

In light of conditions in Guangdong, the province should concentrate on grasping the following issues in straightening out the commune and brigade enterprises: readjust the pattern of the enterprises and their product mix; straighten out their management; and improve their economic returns, with current emphasis on straightening out finances. It is necessary to deal severely with cases of corruption, embezzlement and bribery, recover sums of money long owed by units and personnel concerned, and take stock of tax arrears. It is necessary to press repayment of state loans that are due, set up strict financial and economic accounting systems, correct unhealthy trends, and hit at serious economic crime. It is necessary to rectify the leadership groups.

NANFANG RIBAO ON SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONE STRATEGY

["Ideological Front" article by Sun Ru [1327 1332]: "A Discourse on the Significance and Role of the Special Economic Zones From the Aspect of Strategic Aims"]

[Text] The experiment of the establishment of the special economic zones has already been carried out in Guangdong for more than 2 years. During this period of time, we have realized through practice that by establishing the special economic zones we have achieved certain results in utilizing foreign capital, introducing technology and learning from the experiences of scientific management and that the special economic zones can play a positive role in promoting the socialist modernization of our country. In this article, I will discuss the significance and role of the special economic zones solely from the aspect of our strategic aims.

Regarding the problem of socialist construction, some comrades have upheld for a long time a "leftist" view. They only see the opposition and antagonism between the socialist and the capitalist economic systems, but fail to realize another aspect of the situation, that is, that economically, all the countries in the world are related to one another. As a result, they think that the only economic relationship between socialist countries and capitalist countries is international trade and that besides this, there should not be any further economic relationships or cooperation; otherwise, socialism will be infected by the pestilence of capitalism and this will lead to the restoration of capitalism. This view was especially in vogue during the decade of turmoil. At that time, the mere mention of external economic relationships and cooperation was regarded as an offense and would have been punished by labeling people as "worshipping and having blind faith in things foreign" and "upholding the philosophy of slaves." This practice muddled people's minds and made them wrongly treat the "closed-door" policy as an orthodox Marxist policy. In fact, this "closed-door" policy does not conform to the basic principle of Marxism.

A socialist country is not an isolated island. In the world, every country forms a part of the world system consisting of many countries and the world economy is an integrated entity consisting of the mutually related and mutually dependent economies of many countries. All the countries are inevitably related to one another in various aspects, no matter what economic systems they adopt and no matter whether they are economically developed or underdeveloped. It is a basic viewpoint of Marxism-Leninism that the socialist economy is never severed from the capitalist economy. It is not feasible to sever the one from the other by means of the "closed-door" policy and this policy will only hinder the development of the socialist economy.

When human society develops from one mode to another new higher mode, the new mode takes shape and develops from the economic basis of the previous mode of society. Therefore, between any new society and the old society that the new one has originated from, there will inevitably be a relationship of succession and criticism. A socialist society is established on the powerful material basis created by the capitalist society. It will criticize and abolish the unreasonable relations of production of the capitalist system, that is, the private ownership of the means of production and the system of wage labor. However, the socialist society should inherit and develop the tremendous productive force that has been created by the capitalist society and should also inherit and develop socialized mass production, and the advanced technology and experiences of scientific administration and management that have taken shape in the capitalist society.

According to what Marx and Engels foresaw, the socialist revolution would first achieve victory in a few developed capitalist countries, and these countries would use the tremendous productive force and the socialized mass production they had already achieved in building up a new communist society. However, in the course of the history of the world proletarian revolution, owing to the uneven development of capitalism when it entered the stage of imperialism and owing to the differences in the revolutionary strength of the proletariat and the proletarian parties in various countries, the countries where the proletariat first achieved victories in revolution and established socialist social systems were not the highly developed capitalist countries, but the countries where the small-scale peasant economy was prevalent and where there were not the powerful material basis of the capitalist economy. The proletariat in these countries are obliged to utilize the tremendous productive force, the advanced technology and the scientific methods of management and administration that have already been developed in the national economic systems of the modern world, including the strength of the capitalist countries, in order to build up and develop their socialist economy.

In leading the socialist revolution and construction of the Soviet Union in the initial period, Lenin had already stressed the utilization of foreign capital. He raised the idea that the Soviet regime had to carry out economic cooperation with "the advanced financial capital of the advanced countries." He further pointed out that if they were not good at drawing in foreign capital, this would "show their lack of the spirit of seeking truth from facts in handling their economy." ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 32, p 291) There is nothing to be apprehensive of if a socialist country draws support from foreign capital in order to develop its economy and build socialism, or if it allows capitalist enterprises to exist under the supervision and guidance of the socialist state. As long as we keep our minds sober, as long as we firmly maintain the political and economic sovereignty in the hands of the socialist state and as long as we restrict the economic support we draw from foreign capital within certain limits, there will be no risk of the degeneration of socialist society. At present the total area of the three special economic zones that have been established in Guangdong on a trial basis is less than 350 square kilometers. Whatever experiments we make in these special economic zones are only local events in a very small area. They will never have any dangerous impact on our socialist line.

The CCP Central Committee has decided to establish special economic zones on a trial basis in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces. In my opinion, this decision is aimed at delimiting a few zones stretching over a certain number of kilometers in places where there are appropriate conditions and carrying out more pragmatic policies and more flexible measures in these zones than in other areas.

Thus these zones will become special managerial zones where various kinds of experiments will be carried out in order to more vigorously focus on attracting foreign capital and in order to carry out economic cooperation of various forms with foreign, Overseas Chinese and Hong Kong and Macao compatriots' capital. By so doing, the special zones will be able to make quicker progress than other areas in their socialist construction. At present opinions on and evaluation of the trial establishment of the special economic zones differ widely and people's understanding of the significance and role of these zones also differs.

In evaluating the role of the special economic zones, we can usually sum up the following five advantages: first, utilizing foreign capital and introducing advanced technology; second, introducing the scientific administrative and management methods from abroad as reference; third, earning more foreign exchange for the state; fourth, providing more job opportunities; and fifth, training technical and management personnel.

Some people would say that since we can achieve the above-mentioned five points by carrying out various forms of external economic cooperation outside the special economic zones, why should we establish the special economic zones? This is a question worth considering and answering. My opinion is that the trial establishment of the special economic zones is of strategic significance and we should understand this by taking into account their impact on the whole situation of the four modernizations of our country. Only when we understand the significance and role of the special economic zones that we have established on a trial basis from the aspect of their strategic significance will we be able to unite our thinking, heighten our confidence and, at the same time, remain sober-minded. Thus we will be able to steadfastly carry out the CCP Central Committee's policy decision and do a good job of establishing the special economic zones. Judging from our national conditions, the establishment of the special economic zones is of strategic significance in at least the following three respects:

First, we can use these areas to concentrate our efforts on more quickly attracting a greater amount of foreign investment and earning more foreign exchange. These zones will serve as bridges in intensively introducing advanced technology and as classrooms for training sophisticated technical personnel and learning scientific administrative and managerial methods.

The special economic zones in our country have merely been initially established. Foreign businessmen have just begun to invest in these zones and many enterprises are still under construction and have not been put into operation. However, during the period from 1979 to the end of 1981 the special economic zone in Shenzhen municipality alone drew in 85.2 percent of the total HK$1.2 billion foreign investment that the municipality drew in. The special economic zone there increased its income of foreign exchange in 1981 by 44.5 percent over 1978. About 16 percent of this foreign exchange was earned from its foreign trade and about 84 percent of the income of foreign exchange came from nontrade sources (including processing charges, wages and lease of land). The foreign exchange earned from tourism in 1981 was 4.8 times that in 1979. Judging from the initial situation of investment in the Shekou industrial zone, more than HK$400 million of foreign capital has been drawn in. This means that every acre of land has drawn in $345,000, on the average. From the simple figures of our initial statistics, we can see the future trend of the development of the special economic zones and the great capacity of the special economic zones in drawing in foreign capital and earning foreign exchange.

Second, the special economic zones will contribute to the whole country through making experiments in the overall reform of the system (including the reform of the system of economic management and the reform of the administrative structure) and in learning modern management techniques.

As the special economic zones have many special features of their own, the central authorities have granted these zones greater decisionmaking power and is allowing them to be free from the fetters of many regulations and conventions. This has enabled them to be independent from the existing system and to break away from the force of habit. Thus these zones are in a better position to open up new paths for the system reform of the whole country under the premise of adhering to the four basic principles.

As the special economic zones in our country have merely been initially established, the above-mentioned tasks can only be regarded as the strategic goals that we should strive to achieve in the future. However, in building up the special zones and in formulating the administrative and managerial methods of some of the enterprises that have already been put into operation, a series of methods have been invented to break away from the old set of management systems, and these methods have already brought about remarkable results. Take the construction of the Shekou industrial zone, for example; it has been carried out quickly, and good results have been achieved with the cooperation of foreign investment. Some of the experiences that we have gained in these zones are valuable reference for us.

Since they have handed down their power to the department for introducing commerce, they have set up as management organs a general office, the office of the chief engineer, the office of the chief accountant and 13 specialized corporations. Each of these corporations has its independent accounting system and is responsible of its own profits and losses. The matters related to the transactions of these corporations are decided by the boards of directors and the managers employed by the boards in these corporations. With such a system, they have broken away from the practice of inflating their office structure by employing excessive numbers of redundant personnel and the practice of shifting responsibility from one to another that is a common occurrence elsewhere in our country. Thus they have greatly raised their work efficiency.

They have acted in accordance with economic laws and have adopted economic means and scientific methods to carry out their construction and manage their economy. They have eliminated the system of the "iron rice bowl" and the system of "eating out of a big pot." They have conducted experiments in recruiting cadres by public examinations and selecting staff and workers according to the results of their study when they were students. They have also been experimenting in employing staff and workers on contracts and have reformed their wage system in order to gradually transform their wage system into the system of fixing wages according to the nature of the positions of the staff and workers.

In carrying out their construction, they first formulated a general plan for the whole zone and then began implementing the general plan by carrying out the fundamental projects (that is, starting the construction by roads, water supply facilities, electric power installations, a sewage system and telecommunications system and leveling land for construction). Thus they have created favorable conditions for foreign businessmen to invest there. They have formulated and promulgated various kinds of decrees and regulations and preferential treatment to safeguard the legitimate interests of foreign capital. In dealing with foreign businessmen, they respect contracts and have paid attention to keeping their promises. They have energetically drawn in foreign capital and introduced the advanced technology that is suited to our needs. The above is called the "Shekou-type" of experience. In fact, this provides us with an epitome of the future construction of the whole Shenzhen Special Economic Zone.

Third, these special zones will serve as an experiment under the socialist system with a special kind of modern city, in which diversified economic factors coexist. This experiment will play a positive role in winning over Taiwan to return to the motherland. Judging by the nature of the various enterprises there, the special economic zones in our country, especially the comprehensive special economic zones like Shenzhen, are cities where diversified economic factors coexist. Moreover, these cities will be the modern cities that will be built up with very little investment by the state and chiefly by relying on foreign investment and the local revenue of these zones. Judging by the experiences that we have gained in the past 3 years, in order to build up these modern cities, we must take the state-run economy of a socialist nature as the mainstay and use various economic levers to exercise our leadership over the market in our special economic zones. Moreover, the state-run banks in the special economic zones will play an important guiding role. We may allow foreign banks to operate in the special economic zones, but the state-run banks must maintain their leadership over the banking activities there.

As the construction of the special economic zones relies mainly on drawing in foreign capital, in these zones there will be a large proportion of joint venture enterprises of Chinese and foreign capital (including the corporations with joint-share capital and the joint venture enterprises that have been set up with contracts for cooperation) and a fairly large proportion of enterprises that are solely owned by foreign businessmen (including Overseas Chinese, and Hong Kong and Macao businessmen). The joint venture enterprises with Chinese and foreign capital are national capitalist in nature. The enterprises that are solely owned by foreign businessmen are themselves capitalist enterprises by nature. But these enterprises are different from typical capitalist enterprises, for they exist under a proletarian state power; they have to accept the management of the government of the special economic zones, and though their legitimate interests will be protected, their scope of operation should be governed by the government of our country. In this sense, they are special kinds of capitalist enterprises that are governed and managed by the proletarian state and are to a certain extent national capitalist in nature. Inside the special economic zones, we should also allow collective and individual enterprises to engage in commerce and service trade.

Thus each special economic zone will become a special kind of modern city where diversified economic factors coexist under the administration of the socialist sovereign state. Success in building up this kind of modern city will play an important role in winning Taiwan back to the motherland. Therefore, we must do a good job of building up cities in special economic zones.

HENAN PARTY SECRETARY ON NEED TO STUDY MARXISM

HK070717 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] The No 2, 1982 issue of the journal ZHENGZHOU carried an article by Comrade Han Jingcao, secretary of the Henan Provincial CCP Committee, entitled "We Must Attach a High Degree of Importance to Study of Marxism." In his article, Comrade Han Jingcao said: "We are living in a great new historic era. The building of socialist modernization demands us to give priority to study of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, so as to improve the party's understanding of Marxism-Leninism. We must note that the remnants of feudalism still exist in society (also inside the party), that we have not thoroughly overcome bourgeois ideology and liberalization tendencies, and that the influence of petit bourgeois ideology still exists. We have not completely eliminated unhealthy practices such as bureaucratism, seeking personal privileges and "entering by the back door." Some cadres still have a muddled idea of ideological theory and the existing principles and policies of the party. Thus, the task of ideological and political education is still very arduous. Therefore, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, we must build socialist material and spiritual civilization. Only by taking Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought as a guiding principle and by unifying the thinking of the whole party, the army and the people of all nationalities can we march triumphantly along the socialist track wholeheartedly and spare no effort.

Comrade Han Jingcao pointed out in his article that the building of socialist modernization is an extremely great and arduous cause, particularly in a big country like ours where the population is large, the situation is complicated and the economy and culture is relatively backward. Thus, we must proceed from the actual situation of our country and open up a way for the building of a Chinese-style socialist modernization. This is by no means an easy task. In front of us is a large realm of necessity which we have not explored and a large number of new situations and new problems that we are required to study and solve under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought. As a matter of fact, the saying that science and technology is a key to realizing the modernization of industry, agriculture, national defense, and science and technology and that education is the foundation is absolutely correct. However, only by adopting a Marxist stand to study the specific situation can we stipulate some practical policies and principles that are derived from the actual situation in accordance with the objective law of the development of things. If we make mistakes in this regard and deviate from the correct orientation, we can do practically nothing. As regards the building of socialist spiritual civilization, the guidance of Marxist-Leninist theories is even more necessary.

The key to socialist spiritual civilization is communism. Therefore, the basic task in the building of socialist spiritual civilization is to educate people with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

To conclude, Comrade Han Jingcao said: "In short, in the new historical era, the whole party must attach importance to theoretical work, strengthen cadres' theoretical study and use Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought to train thousands and millions of cadres who are both Red and expert. This is an important matter of strategic significance. We must adopt a series of effective measures to mobilize and organize the broad masses of cadres to bring forward the practice of integrating theory with practice, and arduously study Marxist philosophy, political economy, and scientific socialism. We must also study history, particularly modern Chinese history, and the important documents of the party and unfold a new upsurge in studies. Let us have a study competition in the whole party, see who has really learned something, who has studied well and who has made more contributions to the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization.

HUNAN DISCUSSES URBAN WORK, ADMINISTRATION

Work Conference Ends

HK031436 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Summary] The Hunan provincial conference on urban work which lasted 6 days concluded in Changsha yesterday. The conference put forth that it is necessary to mobilize the forces of all quarters to improve social order, morality, the general mood of society, traffic order, urban appearance and sanitation and the quality of service in all urban areas throughout the province within the next several years. This conference was sponsored by the provincial people's government. At the conference, the representatives studied the important written instructions and comments of leading comrades of the central authorities, discussed and revised the instructions of the provincial CCP committee and the provincial government on strengthening urban management and examined the situation of implementing last year's instructions of the provincial CCP committee and the provincial government on strengthening the building of small urban areas. Representatives from Xiangtan municipality and the Yueyang administrative commissioner's office introduced their experiences. Responsible comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee and the provincial government, including Sun Guozhi, Liu Fusheng, Cao Wenju and Kong Anmin, attended the conference and delivered important speeches.

The conference pointed out: "The key to administering urban areas well lies in leadership. Leaders at all levels must fully understand the importance and urgency of strengthening urban management. We must greatly change the guiding ideology in urban work. We must change 'attaching less importance to administration but more to construction' into 'grasping construction on the one hand and grasping administration on the other.'" The conference stressed: "To do well in urban management, we must persist in the principle of linking centralization and unification with administration at each government level, allocate manpower, financial resources, powers and duties to districts and neighborhoods and give full play to the active role of districts, neighborhoods and neighborhood committees in urban management."

The conference held: "Striving to improve urban public facilities is a material condition for doing well in urban management, Leaders at all levels must grasp the most salient problems which affect urban management and solve them one by one by stages and in groups." The conference also pointed out: "To do well in urban management, it is necessary to fully mobilize and rely on the masses and have a strong and vigorous specialized management force. It is essential to reinforce and enhance the strength of this force, enhance its social status and strengthen its training. Universally conducting education in social morality and the legal system and tidying up social order is a long-term and important task of urban management. We must conduct education in communist morality for the people and penetratingly and persistently launch the 'five stresses and four beauties' campaign. When the masses' ideology and awareness is heightened and they spontaneously uphold and observe social order, a guarantee for urban management will be realized."

Commentary on Urban Management

HK031450 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 2 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "Make the Greatest Efforts To Administer Urban Areas Well"]

[Excerpts] An urban area is the political, cultural and economic center of a given area. As early as the eve of the liberation of the whole country, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out that it is necessary to make the greatest efforts to learn to administer and build urban areas. For a long time, under the leftist influence, the tendency of attaching more importance to production but less to livelihood and more to construction but less to management existed in urban work in our province, resulting in a serious imbalance between flesh and blood. Environmental sanitation was poor, social order was chaotic and the quality of service was poor. Over the last few years, although we have begun to pay attention to grasping urban management, we have not done this work sufficiently. At present, the CCP Central Committee has called on us to penetratingly and persistently embark on the building of socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization. If urban management work is still not done sufficiently, the building of the two civilizations will be only empty talk. Therefore, strengthening urban management has become an urgent task which confronts us and must be grasped.

The key to doing well in urban management lies in leadership and in the understanding and determination of leaders. CCP committees and governments at all levels, particularly urban CCP committees and governments, must correctly handle the relationship between production and construction and urban management. Developing production and enlivening the economy is the central task of an urban area. However, we cannot attach importance only to production in disregard of management, even to the extent that we grasp only production and not management. Production and construction and urban management supplement each other. Construction is the foundation of management and conversely, management consolidates and develops the results of construction.

We must see that the masses have a very strong desire for urban management. If we do not seriously grasp it, we will certainly be divorced from the masses and it will affect the prestige of the party and the government. Therefore, leaders at all levels must make great changes in the guiding ideology. They must change attaching more importance to construction but less to management into grasping construction on the one hand and management on the other. To do well in urban management, we must have a certain material foundation and have the necessary urban road facilities and equipment. At present, our country's financial resources are limited and it cannot appropriate more money to embark on urban construction. We cannot solve all problems in a short period. However, we must recognize that we have not done what can be done and we have spent on other work the funds which should have been spent on urban public facilities. If this situation is not changed, our work apparently cannot be done well. We hope that leading comrades at all levels will go to all major streets and small lanes to have a look, have a talk with grassroots cadres and seek the masses' views and demands. As long as leaders at all levels are determined to grasp this work, they will certainly find all kinds of effective methods. Urban management is the affair of thousands and thousands of people. People must be relied on to administer the people's urban areas.

BEIJING HOLDS SEVENTH MUNICIPAL CYL CONGRESS

[Text] Beijing, 9 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Beijing Municipal CYL Congress opened on 9 June. Jiao Ruoyu, second secretary of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee, stressed at the congress that the Communist Youth League must forever hold aloft the banner of communism, valiantly stand at the forefront of the era and form a courageous shock brigade to build the socialist motherland.

Attending the congress were 931 delegates. The congress will earnestly sum up the work of the league in the whole city, put forward the future task, and elect the 7th municipal CYL committee and the deputies who will attend the 11th national CYL congress.

Jiao Ruoyu greeted the delegates attending the congress on behalf of the Beijing Municipal CYL Committee. In his speech, he pointed out: The most fundamental task before the people in the city is to concentrate efforts in earnestly carrying out the four-point instruction issued by the CCP Central Committee Secretariat on building the capital and in accordance with the plans of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee, and to strive to turn Beijing into a first class world city and build China in a highly democratic and civilized, modern and powerful, strong socialist nation. This is also the glorious task for all the CYL members and the young people in Beijing.

Jiao Ruoyu said: To fulfill this task, it is necessary to adhere to a firm and correct political orientation, foster the lofty ideals of communism, uphold the four basic principles in a clear-cut manner, combat bourgeois ideas, feudalist remnants and the bourgeois lifestyle, and steadfastly march forward along the socialist road. He expressed his relief that the young people in the capital would definitely live up to the expectations of the party and people and score fresh achievements in developing material and spirtual civilization in the capital.

Attending today's opening ceremony were First Secretary Han Ying and Secretary Liu Weiming of the CYL Central Committee; and leading comrades of the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee Duan Junyi, Jia Tingsan, Zhao Pengfei, Chen Xitong, Ye Lin, Wang Chun, Liu Daosheng and others.

BEIJING MEETING ON IDEOLOGICAL WORK FOR GRADUATES

HK100914 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 3 Jun 82

[Text] Institutions of higher learning in Beijing have strengthened ideological education by various means for graduates who were admitted in 1978. A recent survey conducted by some of them shows that more students this year expressed their willingness to answer the party's call and accept the state's assignments than in the previous year.

This year, more than 28,900 students will graduate from 68 institutions of higher learning in Beijing. In light of the ideological characteristics of the graduates and on the basis of summing up the ideological work for graduates last year, the institutions of higher learning started early to grasp ideological education for students who were admitted in 1978. Beijing university invited (Li Yanjie), a lecturer of Beijing Normal College, to deliver a report to the graduates, instructing them to adopt a revolutionary attitude toward life and happiness. Excellent results have been achieved. Through visits or letters to the graduates' parents, the institutions of higher learning convinced the parents to do ideological work for the graduates. Some of them invited revolutionary forerunners to make reports on revolutionary traditions, thereby achieving remarkable results in educating the graduates. According to a recent survey in some institutions of higher learning conducted by a department concerned, the overwhelming majority of the graduates expressed their willingness to accept the jobs assigned to them.

The meeting on ideological work for graduates of institutions of higher learning in Beijing which concluded 2 June further discussed and studied the ideological conditions of the graduates. The meeting stressed: It is necessary to continuously strengthen ideological work for graduates, so that they will correctly establish the idea of "three orientations," which means going to the forefront of production, going to the rural basic-level units and going to the border areas. The meeting also specially stressed: In doing the work of assigning jobs to graduates, it is necessary to handle matters impartially, to refrain from practicing favoritism and to resolutely prevent and resist the unhealthy tendencies of securing advantages through pull or influence and showing concern by deviating from the principle.

Vice Mayor Bai Yiefu attended the meeting on 2 June and spoke, calling on all institutions of higher learning to mobilize the graduates to take up posts in middle and primary schools so as to reinforce the ranks of middle and primary school teachers.

BEIJING WANGBAO ON CONCERN FOR OPERA COMPOSERS

HK090745 Beijing WANGBAO in Chinese 18 May 82 p 3

[Article by Wei Lanbo [7614 5695 3134]: "Be Concerned for Opera Librettists"]

[Text] Recently, I was informed by friends in the field of opera that while some opera troupes are experiencing a "shortage of librettos", other librettists have changed their profession to writing novels and reporting literature. Such a contradictory situation deserves our attention.

As a comprehensive art, opera is watched and appreciated by the audience through the performance of the actors. As far as readability is concerned, opera librettos are quite different from other literary works. The audience usually value an opera directly through their feeling for the performance. The actors are first of all praised when the audience is moved. With such a tradition for many years, there exist in this field the so-called "renowned actors" and "factions of performing arts." Often the audience is deeply impressed by the vivid characters of the cast in the opera after watching the performance. No attention is given to the librettists. It is, therefore, a usual phenomenon that when an opera becomes more popular and actors more famous the librettist still remains unknown to the public. Especially with those operas which have been adapted and rearranged, it is more difficult for people to know the names of the original librettists. Take the modern opera "The Plaint of Yang Sanjie" as an example, which has been on stage for quite a long time. Few opera fans do not know this drama and few of them do not appreciate the performance of Zhao Lirong and Gu Wenyue. Nevertheless, few of them would know the original librettist Chen Shaochai. Very often there appears in the title page of many published operas the honorary labels of famous actors: "Repertoire of so-and-so". As for the names of the librettists, unfortunately, they are usually omitted or forgotten. That means when an opera becomes popular and is rewarded with a prize for its merits, the librettist usually receives no share in the success; whereas when an opera is criticized for its faults, the librettist inevitably becomes the first target of criticism and repudiation. Does such an unfair treatment lead to a passive effect? I think it does.

Besides, the librettists have several other things to worry about. One is the difficulty in getting the opera published as there are few opera magazines. The other is that it is still difficult for an opera to be performed on the stage and watched by the audience. The "doctrine of connections" is still playing its role in some performing units. Many good operas are neglected due to the lack of the right connections.

As far as this field is concerned, the film scriptwriter and stage scriptwriter are better rewarded than opera librettists. The reward of an opera librettist is usually lower than that of a film or stage scriptwriter.

All this reflects some inconsistencies in the "relationship" of opera production, thus weakening to some extent the consolidation and stability of opera personnel, and harming the prosperity of opera creation. Naturally, many aspects are involved when improvements are to be made and it is impossible for them to be accomplished all at once. Nevertheless, we are bound to find some easier ones to start with. For instance, some commemorative activities have been held in recent years in memory of the performing artists. Can we hold some commemorative activities as well for those famous librettists so as to extol their merits and draw the attention of the society to their hard work?

IMPROVEMENT OF QINHUANGDAO PORT PROMOTED

[By staff reporter]

[Text] Improvements have brought Qinhuangdao port the third greatest volume of traffic in the country, after Shanghai and Dalian, Sun Guozu of the harbour administration told CHINA DAILY.

This port on the Bohai Sea offers a larger capacity for taking in and discharging cargo than the railway. Last year 26.5 million tons of cargo passed through the port.

Gu Mu, former vice premier and now state councillor, has visited the port three times to help speed renovation work, and now Qinhuangdao handles more coal exports than any other ports in China. It handles 15 million tons of out going coal a year, 83.3 percent is for export, mainly to Japan. The rest goes to south and East China.

Japan is now investing in the building of two more berths and will be repaid with coal. As a natural good harbour, it can handle 40,000-ton vessels and will be able to admit vessels of more than 50,000 tons by the end of 1984 when the first stage building project is completed. This will increase by 10 million tons, Sun said. Two new berths for 50,000-ton coal freighters are under construction as the second stage of the project begins.

The port was once named Kailun, because it served mainly to transport the coal from Tangshan's Kailuan collieries in Hebei Province. Now it has been changed into a comprehensive port with 10,000 dockers and 12 large berths, and is known as the estuary for sending out Chinese energy resources. Its oil wharf extends a [word indistinct]. Each of its three mechanized wharves has a loading capacity of 20,000 tons of coal per ship in less than four hours.

Qinhuangdao, a peninsula named after the first emperor of the Qin Dynasty (221 B.C.), extends 10 kilometres eastward from its starting point at the Great Wall, Shanhaiguan. Its neighbour to the west is the famous summer resort, Beidaihe. The port was built in 1903 by the British to exploit Chinese coal resources. It loaded and unloaded 230,000 tons of coal a year. Sun expects railway electrication soon to satisfy the port's growing requirements.

SHANXI'S HUO SHILIAN ON MOUNTAIN AREA PRODUCTION

HK110421 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jun 82 p 1

[Report: "Comrade Huo Shilian Discusses Great Schemes With Cadres at all Levels in Mountainous Southwestern Shanxi for Promoting Production and Speeding Up Economic Development in Mountain Areas"]

[Text] Shanxi Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Huo Shilian recently went to mountainous southwestern Shanxi to conduct investigation and study. He discussed great schemes with cadres at the county, commune, brigade and team levels for promoting construction in the mountain areas and improving economic results in order to help the mountain areas speed up the pace of developing production.

In his current investigation, Comrade Huo Shilian visited 13 counties in mountainous southwestern Shanxi, such as Jiaokou, Yonghe, Liulin and Xiangning and inspected some production teams, forestry centers and grazing lands. Gullies crisscross these counties where the hills and mountains are bare. There is drought for 9 out of 10 years. The loss of water and soil is serious and every year an enormous amount of silt pours into the Huang River. Since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, these counties have scored significant achievements in production and have succeeded in solving the food problem, which had not been solved for many years in the past. However, the problem of adequate grain production has not been solved yet and the income of the masses is still rather low. Comrade Huo Shilin pointed out to the various county CCP committees and cadres at the grassroots level: in building the mountain areas, it is necessary to put the problem of soil in the first place, tackle the problems concerning soil, water and forests in a comprehensive way and combine long-term construction with the current production. At present it is also necessary to engage in capital construction of water conservancy works, pay close attention to agriculture, do a good job of grain production and, at the same time, vigorously develop forestry and animal husbandry. In water conservancy works, it is necessary to draw on the previous lessons, rely on our own efforts, adjust measures to the local conditions, utilize little springs and streams and develop small water conservancy work at very low cost but with very good effect. In farmland capital construction, efforts should be concentrated on repairing ditches, building embankments and planting crops to preserve the fertility of the soil and its capacity for conserving water. We must achieve the target of building 2 mu of land with high and stable yields for each person. The per capita grain production should be raised to 800 jin, including grain ration, seeds and fodder. With the prerequisite of improved grain production, efforts should be made to give up the cultivated lands on the mountain slopes and grow trees and grass on them in order to develop forestry and animal husbandry and to shift the focal point of production to the state where forestry and animal husbandry play the primary role.

Since the founding of the PRC, considerable developments have been made in forestry in mountainous southwestern Shanxi, but the income from forestry is still very low, accounting for only a few percent of the total agricultural income. Comrade Huo Shilian said to the cadres in various counties: "In afforestation we should pay attention to the percentage of forest cover and economic value. That is to say, it is necessary not only to expand the size of forest cover, improve the ecological environment, regulate weather and conserve water and soil but also to reap economic benefit and greatly increase the economic income of the masses in a short time." He pointed out: At present, the most important task is to go in for growing seedlings in a big way in order to supply sufficient quantities, great varieties and excellent breeds of seedlings. In afforestation, it is necessary to achieve the following: First, planting trees on barren hills should go hand in hand with planting trees along roads and rivers and around villages and houses. The natural conditions along roads and rivers and around villages and houses are relatively good. Planting trees in these places needs little investment and the trees planted grow easily and quickly.

It is first of all necessary to afforest the places along roads and rivers and around villages and houses. Second, the medium-, short- and long-term plans for growing trees should go hand in hand. It is necessary to grow trees that take several decades to reap profit, to grow trees that take more than 10 years to reap profit and to grow trees that take only a few years to reap profit, supporting the long-term plan with the short-term one. Third, growing trees should go hand in hand with growing shurbs. On the dry hillsides where trees cannot grow easily, we can plant shrubs such as Ningtiao [2899 2742] and Culiu [6818 2692] in order to conserve water and soil and then gradually plant trees among the shrubs. This not only can speed up the pace of afforestation but can also provide wicker for weaving purposes in 3-4 years. This is favorable to the development of sideline occupations and also to the development of animal husbandry for it can provide a certain amount of leaves as fodder for cattle and sheep.

In Xi County, Comrade Huo Shilian inspected the beef cattle farm of Wucheng production brigade in Wucheng commune. Last year the farm had an income of more than 9,000 yuan by selling to the state 19 excellent breed beef cattle raised for only 1 and 1/2 years, an average of 500 yuan a head. He pointed out: In developing animal husbandry, it is necessary to actively grow top-quality grass, mass-produce highly nutritious fodder and raise more grass-eating livestock. At the same time it is also necessary to attach importance to the improvement of breeds, actively develop fine breeds and try hard to obtain more livestock products with the same amount of forage grass and fodder. It is necessary to protect and develop fine local livestock breeds but the old habits that have grown over many years in the past must be changed in order to improve the breeds of cattle, sheep and rabbits, which have high consumption and which supply very few commodities and replace them with imported fine breeds. In raising cattle we should raise draft cattle and a large number of beef cattle. In raising sheep we should raise fine-wool sheep and in raising rabbits we should raise hair-producing rabbits in order to reap profit from wool, hair and meat.

After enquiring into the plans for building the mountain areas and developing the economy of Jiaokou County and other localities, Comrade Huo Shilian said: When working out plans for developing production in the mountain areas, it is necessary to conduct investigation and study, thoroughly understand the overall situation, overcome blindness in action and improve scientific nature in order to effectively exploit and utilize indigenous resources. In dealing with nature, it is necessary to act according to natural laws. Owing to differences in the physical features and general configuration of the earth's surface, there are differences in soil, sunlight, temperature and rainfall. In working out a plan, it is necessary to study and sum up typical experiences but the model example should not be used to represent the overall situation. There are very great differences between the overall situation and the model example. If, in working out a plan for a county or a commune, we go by the various data of the model example, we shall be divorced from reality and act blindly in building the mountain areas, getting half the results with twice the effort. Therefore, in working out a plan, it is necessary to go to every commune, brigade, gully and hilly area to investigate nature and the production of plants including farm crops, forests and grass and grasp the various natural and production data in various areas in order to choose the best plan in the light of the local conditions and arrange in an all-round way the long- and short-term plans for developing the production of agriculture, forestry and animal husbandry. The targets of the plan must be reliable and we must allow for unforeseen circumstances. The measures must be realistic and strong. Once we have a plan we should act according to the plan and strive to attain good results. Even if the leaders have been changed we also should not rashly change our plan.

SHANXI GOVERNOR AT ANTIAIR DEFENSE MEETING

[Report: "Provincial People's Antiair Defense Committee Holds Enlarged Meeting"]

[Text] In order to further implement the spirit of the national antiair defense work conference and in order to analyze the basic conditions in the antiair defense work of our province and preserve and improve the results of antiair defense construction, the provincial people's antiair defense committee held an enlarged meeting in Taiyuan from 23 to 25 May. Second secretary of the provincial CCP committee, governor of the province and chairman of the provincial people's antiair defense committee, Luo Guibo, presided over the meeting and gave a speech.

The meeting was of the opinion that during the past few years the tasks of antiair defense construction in the province have been fulfilled in a fairly satisfactory manner and the quality of the projects that have been completed meets, in the main, the designed requirements. These good results have been achieved because the party committees at all levels have attached importance to and strengthened their leadership over this work and because they have conscientiously implemented the policy of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee on antiair defense and war preparation construction which demands that this construction should be carried out "under unified overall planning and in the manner of focusing on a few key projects, paying attention to the completion of projects that will be able to be used both in war time and in peace time and giving first priority to ensuring the quality of construction." It is also because they have carried out widespread propaganda and education, made necessary preparations to create the financial and material basis for construction and adopted specific measures to strengthen the scientific research work on project designs, to exercise strict quality control and to vigorously pay attention to promoting the progress of all projects by grasping the work of typical projects. Their efforts to enable the projects to be used both in war time and in peace time have already brought about certain economic results and the net profits that have been gained by utilizing these projects have totaled more than 490,000 yuan. The meeting has pointed out that on the whole the antiair defense work in our province has achieved good results, but it has also been confronted with a few problems. The major problems are the unreasonable layout of some projects, the slow progress of the construction of projects that can be used both in war time and in peace time, the insufficient amount of area that we have constructed, the low utilization rate and the lack of competent specialized antiair defense personnel.

On the basis of confirming the achievements, summing up the experiences and finding out where our work has fallen short of requirements, the meeting has made a conscientious study of the long-term plans and specific measures for antiair defense construction in our province. It has pointed out that we should carry on what we have already achieved and continue to carry out in a planned and orderly manner, the construction of the antiair defense projects that can be used both in war time and in peace time and we should consolidate and reform the projects that we have already completed to form them into a well-coordinated antiair defense system so as to be better prepared for war. We should strengthen the antiair defense and war preparation construction in our key cities. We should perfect the command organs of the antiair defense system and carry out widespread propaganda and education in being prepared for war. We should also conscientiously do a good job of antiair defense scientific research, do a good job of taking care of construction materials and goods and do a good job of all other work.

In his speech, Comrade Lu Guibo repeatedly stressed the significance of continuing to do antiair defense and war preparation work satisfactorily. He said that the construction of antiair defense projects is a long-term strategic task of the whole party, the whole country and the whole people. Therefore, we should raise our understanding of its significance, heighten our sense of war preparedness, overcome a false sense of peace and security and laxity in our work and soundly fulfill this task as satisfactorily as we can under the present economic conditions. He has also stressed that we should make full use of the antiair defense projects in peace time and combine the construction of antiair defense projects with our civil construction and economic construction. We should concentrate our limited amount of funds on the projects we are in most urgent need of and focus on key projects. In so doing we should pay special attention to satisfactorily carrying out the construction of the antiair defense projects that can be used both in war time and in peace time in our key cities and strive to maximize the economic effect of these projects. The party committees at all levels should vigorously intensify their work in building up the ranks of cadres that are specialized in antiair defense. The broad ranks of antiair defense cadres should pluck up their spirit, conscientiously fulfill their duties and perform their responsibility, and work hard in order to carry out the antiair defense and war preparation construction in our province more satisfactorily.

HEILONGJIANG'S YANG YICHEN RECEIVES OPERA PERFORMERS

[Excerpts] According to HEILONGJIANG RIBAO, on the evening of 9 June leading comrades of the Provincial CCP committee, including Yang Yichen, Ki Lian, Chen Lei, Chen Junsheng, Zhao Dezun, Wang Yilun, Chen Jianfei, Wang Luming, (Wang Fei), Chen Yuanzhi and Zhao Xingyuan, received at the culture palace of the Harbin Municipal Second Light Industrial Bureau performers in the provincial Longjiang experimental opera troupe. The troupe returned highly praised from the first report-back performances in Beijing.

These leading comrades congratulated the artists on their successful performances and urged them to work to create this new type of local opera as a starting point to enable our literary and art work and performances to have distinctive local features.

Comrade Yang Yichen said: The reason the Longjiang opera is welcomed by the people is that this new drama has a strong local flavor. A leading comrade of the provincial CCP committee said: in the future we should view all new plays and operas, particularly modern drama, created in our province. He also hoped that our province's literary and art works would become prosperous as quickly as possible. Having received the performers, the leading comrades and over 1,000 people in the audience viewed a new historical opera.

JILIN HOLDS CONFERENCE ON COLLECTIVE ECONOMY

[Text] According to our correspondent (Zhang Jingquan), after a 40 day session, a work conference sponsored by the Jilin Provincial CCP Committee and the provincial people's government on developing collective economy to arrange jobs for urban youths awaiting work concluded in Changchun on 8 June.

The conference noted: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the province has arranged jobs for 930,000 urban people, representing 81.4 percent of the jobless throughout the province. This is a remarkable achievement.

The conference noted: the province's future work in arranging jobs for urban jobless people remains heavy. In recent years, the province has annually arranged jobs for about 350,000 urban jobless people. To fulfill this task, a good job should be done in grasping the following four works:

1. It is necessary to widely and penetratingly disseminate and implement the several decisions of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council in regard to opening more production avenues to stimulate the economy and solve urban employment problems. Efforts should be made to foster firm guiding thought that only by developing the economy can we deal with employment problems and adopt active measures to readjust the structure of industries and ownership and to vigorously develop collectively and individually owned business in urban areas.

2. It is necessary to continuously readjust policy in this regard and implement the policy in a down-to-earth manner. Concerned departments should do away as soon as possible with the regulations which are suspected of discriminating against and imposing restrictions on collectively and individually owned business as well as puncturing and gobbling them up. They should draw up policies or measures to guide, encourage and support the development of collectively and individually owned business.

3. It is necessary to reorganize newly established collective firms or enterprises, readjust projects in production and service, improve overall arangement in setting up production and service network and centers and upgrade economic returns by following the principle of permitting voluntary combination, assuming sole responsibility for their profits and losses, conducting distribution according to work and upholding democratic management.

4. It is necessary to strengthen leadership over the work and place the work to develop collective firms or enterprises on the work schedule of departments in charge of economic affairs under the people's governments. These departments should do a good job in administration among newly established collective firms and enterprises as well as they have cared for state enterprises and collective enterprises run by units at or above country and district levels.

CHEN BEICHEN IDENTIFIED AS NEW LIAONING GOVERNOR

[Text] On the morning of 12 June, the CYL Committee under the Liaoning Provincial People's Government level organs sponsored a commendation meeting of advanced units and individuals who had emerged in the all-people decorum and courtesy month campaign and the campaign to learn from Lei Feng. The meeting conferred advanced titles on 28 units including the CYL committee under the provincial public security department and 53 individuals, including (Li Xiaoguang) from the provincial machine building bureau.

Chen Beichen, governor of the province, attended and addressed the meeting. In his speech, he urged the broad masses of youths under the provincial level organs to set examples for youths throughout the province in fostering far-reaching ideals, exerting efforts to study politics and cultural knowledge and doing their work in a down-to-earth manner. Efforts should be made to become new successors full of ideals, morality and cultural knowledge and to abide by discipline.

SHAANXI'S MA WENRUI AT NATIONALITY WORK MEETING

HK111341 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Text] From 4 to 10 June the Shaanxi Provincial Nationalities Affairs Committee held the second enlarged meeting of its members. The meeting stressed: It is necessary to strengthen leadership over nationalities work, and actively support minority nationalities to develop their economy and strengthen the unity of all nationalities. The meeting conveyed the spirit of the second enlarged meeting of the members of the State Nationalities Affairs Commission, reviewed and summed up the situation of the nationalities work in our province and arranged for future work and tasks. It studied and discussed the draft of the revised constitution and announced the namelist of the second provincial nationalities affairs committee.

During the meeting, leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress standing committee and the provincial government, including Ma Wenrui and Yu Mingtao, met all participants in the meeting and had photos taken with all of them.

Our province is an area inhabited here and there by minority nationalities. There are now 42 minority nationalities comprising some 160,000 people. Since the founding of the country, our province has, on the whole, achieved very great results in nationalities work. However, in the 10 years' turmoil, nationalities work was interfered with very greatly. Since the smashing of the gang of four, particularly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, the correct principle and policy of the party on nationalities work have been gradually restored. Under the leadership of CCP committees and governments at all levels, nationalities work in our province has been gradually carried out. Now, minority nationalities' right of equality has been guaranteed, their economy and culture have developed, people's livelihood has improved and the unity among all nationalities has been constantly strengthened. The enthusiasm of the cadres and the masses of minority nationalities has been further inspired, and they have made necessary contributions in all aspects of construction.

Provincial CCP Committee Secretary Zhou Yaguang, provincial people's congress standing committee Vice Chairman Sun Zuobin and Vice Governor Li Lianbi attended and spoke, one after another. In their speech, they stressed: It is essential for leading comrades at every level to enhance their ideological understanding of nationalities work, include nationalities work on their agenda, regularly study and examine this work and promptly solve problems which occur. They emphasized: We must regard supporting minority nationalities to develop their economy as an essential issue of future nationalities work. We must strengthen the unity of all nationalities and resolutely eliminate big-nationality chauvinism and local-nationality chauvinism.

SHAANXI'S MA WENRUI INSPECTS FARMWORK IN XIAN

HK111401 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Summary] "Yesterday afternoon, leading comrades, including provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ma Wenrui, provincial CCP Committee Secretary Xie Huaide, provincial CCP committee standing committee member (Zhu Ping) and Xian municipal CCP Committee Secretary (Shao Wuxuan), went to Yuhua brigade, Yuhua commune, Yanta District in Xian municipality to take a look at the situation of mechanized wheat harvesting and autumn crop sowing. After brigade party general branch Secretary (Guo Shiying) briefly introduced the situation, leading comrades, including Ma Wenrui, carefully watched a Xinjiang 2.5-type grain combine harvester reaping and threshing what on a field and the sitation of mechanized maize sowing. They also inspected the growth of cotton." On the spot of reaping, Ma Wenrui also went up to the combine harvester to inspect its operation in the course of reaping.

Leading comrades of the province and the municipality also encouraged the cadres and the commune members present on the scene, saying: "Your brigade has done well. We hope that you will continue to make efforts to make further improvements."

XINJINANG'S WANG ENMAO SPEAKS TO MINORITY YOUTH

[Summary] A minority youth group from Xinjiang Autonomous Region has recently paid a 2-month visit to Beijing, Shanghai, Nanjing, Suzhou, Hangzhou and other municipalities to broaden their vision. It returned back to Urumzi on 5 June.

On 6 June all members of the minority youth group were met by Wang Enmao, first secretary of the regional CCP committee; Ismail Amat, secretary of the regional CCP committee and chairman of the regional government; Tomur Dawamat, secretary of the regional CCP committee and chairman of the regional people's congress standing committee and other responsible comrades.

During the meeting, Comrade Wang Enmao called on the minority youths to play their part at their posts and work hard to bring the regional economy and culture level with those of the advanced regions of the country.

Comrade Wang Enmao said: The visit you made is a most rewarding one. You have seen and learned a lot from those areas of the country which are greatly developed in the fields of economy and culture. What will you do after your return to your own posts? First of all, you must publicize what you learned during the visit: the unity of all nationalities, the union of the motherland and the excellent situation in the socialist modernization drive. You must publicize that the socialist modernization drive can be ensured of victory only under the leadership of the CCP and with the unity of all natinalities of our country. Secondly, the youth on various fronts must do your own work well and make more contributions to the four modernizations. Thirdly, you must unite as one with the PLA and the Xinjiang production and construction corps so as to do a good job in militia work and build up a joint army-civilian defense force with a view to safeguarding the borders of the motherland.

Comrade Wang Enmao pointed out: "The political and economic situation in the whole country is excellent, as is the situation in our region. But in comparison with the advanced areas of our country, the Xinjiang Autonomous Region still lags behind in some respects. We must learn from these advanced areas their good experiences so as to build our region into a flourishing region." He said: "Most of you are from rural and pastoral areas. Before the Cultural Revolution, I suggested building 'five-good' rural and pastoral areas. Since I took my post again in Xinjiang, I have reiterated my suggestion. The 'five-goods' are to build good paddy fields, good channels, good roads, good shelter belts and good residential estates. Our Xinjiang has its own traits and advantages and we must give full play to our own advantages. We probably couldn't stand a comparison with other interior areas of our country in urban construction. However, if we can make achievements in building the 'five-goods' in the rural and pastoral areas, then these areas will take on a new look and compare favorably with the rural and pastoral areas in the other interior areas of our country. When that time comes, the youth in those areas will probably come to visit our region."

CHEN MUHUA TALKS TO PRESS ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT

[Telephone dispatch from correspondents in Guangzhou: "Chen Muhua Holds Press Conference in Guangzhou"]

[Text] At a press conference today, State Councillor and Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Chen Muhua formally announced that 130 projects, constituting part of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, are being discussed at the China investment promotion meeting. Therefore, regardless of whether they concern investment, materials, transportation or marketing, these projects will have the guarantee of the state plan.

Chen Muhua said: There are two main points in our "Sixth 5-Year" Plan. First is the technical transformation of a portion of nearly 400,000 existing enterprises by stages and in groups, so that their economic benefit can be more fully brought into play. Second is the concentration of fixed financial and material resources for the construction of some new key projects, especially in the fields of energy development, communications and building materials. The 130 projects put forward deal mostly with the technical transformation of the manufacturing industry as well as other industries, such as cement plants in the field of building materials. All these precisely embody the above two main points.

Chen Muhua said: Because we do not have enough funds, we must therefore make use of foreign investment in the Sixth 5-Year Plan. In this respect China is serious as well as careful. China will abide by four principles in the use of foreign investment. First, China must be able to obtain loans, or loans which foreign businessmen are willing to put up on a voluntary basis. Second, the loans must be beneficial to our side, and naturally, also beneficial to the other side. This is based on the principle of equality and mutual benefit. Third, China must be able to make proper use of the funds so that the role of the loans can be brought into play. In other words, the projects must be selected properly to make them produce good economic results. Fourth, China must have the ability to repay. There is a saying: Repayment of a loan will make future loans easier.

Chen Muhua also discussed China's attitude toward the utilization of various forms of foreign investment. She stated that at the present stage China tends to favor direct investment because this form of investment is connected with specific projects. The 130 projects under discussion this time basically all belonged to this category. In this way, more comprehensive consideration will be given by both sides regarding technical, market and repayment conditions. This form will be extensively adopted in the future. There will not be much use for loans of a commercial nature, since the interest rate is too high and we cannot afford it. However, if the condition is advantageous to us, and if the banks are willing and we can afford it, we will also consider their use. At present, friends of the banking circles are very eager to help us and are willing to supply us with credit guarantees. We are very grateful to them. If some of the enterprises need loans in the future and if they are also willing to supply credit guarantees, then the commercial banks can also bring thsir positive role into play.

In discussing how the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade will implement the special policies of the Central Committee regarding the special economic zones, the provinces of Guangdong and Fujian and the provinces and cities along the coast which started ahead of the others in the series of open-door policies, Chen Muhua gave assurances that the policy of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade will only be more beneficial and suitable to them and that the former measures adopted by them will continue in force. The Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade will not interfere with them.

Chen Muhua also said that in order to keep abreast of foreign economic activities, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade must also improve its efficiency. She said that the merger of two ministries and commissions has been completed at present, and that this is a horizontal merger.

With regard to the vertical aspect, the administrative structures will be reduced and a responsibility system will be set up. At present, the restructuring is only being carried out at the ministerial level, but it will also be carried out at the corporate level in the future. Chen Muhua also listed examples to explain how work efficiency has improved following the restructuring of administrative organs. She said that formerly a single matter was administered by four departments and the export of a commodity had to go through two departments. If the matter concerned the import of technology, it required more time to go through the departments. Now, it only has to go through a single department and efficiency is greatly improved. Another example: In the past, the same matter was administered by four departments and coordination often could not be achieved because each department had its own way of looking at a thing. In this way, the matter had to be referred to the vice ministers of the State Council for coordination. This is why there were so many vice premiers and an extraordinary number of meetings. Now, the four departments have been integrated and many matters need no longer go through the State Council for coordination, but can be settled by a meeting of the minister and deputy ministers. Under this kind of situation, the State Council has cut the number of vice premiers from 13 to 2, and efficiency is greatly improved.

TA KUNG PAO REVIEWS USE OF FOREIGN INVESTMENT

[Special feature by Tung Kai: "New Trends in China's Use of Foreign Investment"]

[Text] While carrying out the four modernizations, China makes no attempt to conceal the difficulties of lack of funds and technology. Lack of funds is the first difficulty. If China has funds, it can naturally buy technology and facilities. Therefore, actively using foreign investment is the central link of China's present efforts to carry out economic cooperation with foreign countries. In recent years, China has done a lot in using foreign investment and achieved marked results in this respect. After summing up the experience of the work of using foreign investment in these few years, we have found out not only the gradual progress of the work, but also some trends and peculiarities.

Two Aspects of Use of Foreign Investment

In order to use foreign investment, China has exerted its efforts in the following two aspects: First, procuring loans from foreign countries; second, encouraging foreign businessmen to make direct investments in China. First of all, let us make a simple analysis of China's efforts to procure loans from foreign countries:

Last year China obtained government-to-government loans on favorable terms amounting to $2.4 billion. The Chinese Government signed agreements with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development on two occasions for $200 million loans which were used for development projects involving 26 colleges and universities throughout the country. According to the agreements, the loans were divided into $100 million hard loans and $100 million soft loans. The interest rate of hard loans was 9.6 percent and the time limit for repayment was 20 years, whereas the soft loans were interest free and the time limit for repayment was 50 years. The service charge for soft loans was only 0.75 percent. The generous time limit for both hard and soft loans was 5 and 10 years respectively. The International Fund for Agricultural Development also reached credit agreements with China. It provided China with loans of $35 million for the development of grasslands and animal husbandry in north China. Every year, China has to pay 1 percent commission and 0.5 percent service charges. The International Monetary Fund also reached agreements with the Chinese Government on unsecured loans and trust fund loans totalling $931 million. The interest rates for both loans were 6.2 and 0.5 percent respectively and the time limit for their repayment was 3 years with an option for extending to 5 years.

The Amount of Loans in Past Few Years Totals Over $10 Billion

Last year the Japanese Government provided the Daqing Petrochemical Works and Baoshan Iron and Steel Works in China with loans of $1.33 billion. These loans were granted by the Japanese Overseas Cooperative Fund, the Japanese Export and Import Bank and other nongovernmental Japanese banks. The time limit for repayment of these loans is comparatively long and the interest rate is fairly low.

These were all the main loans that China obtained from foreign countries in 1981. Reviewing the loan history of recent years, we still remember that starting from 1978, China entrusted the Bank of China to sign 19 buyers' credit agreements amounting to $13.48 billion with the banks and financial organizations from 11 countries, namely, England, France, Italy, Canada, Sweden, Australia, Belgium, Norway, Argentina, West Germany and the United States. Together with other credit agreements in various forms, the total amount of loans has reached $17.3 billion. What merits our attention is that in 1981 China only signed credit agreements with three American banks, such as the U.S. Import and Export Bank, and the amount of credit -- $64 million -- was the smallest among those buyer's credit agreements.

Three Trends in Procuring Foreign Loans

From the above situation, it is not difficult for us to discern three trends in China's efforts to procure foreign loans.

1. China has obtained loans from many organizations. Over the past few years, China has persistently exerted its efforts to open up a path for international economic development and initial success has been scored. The Chinese Government has established specific credit business with international financial organizations such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Fund for Agricultural Development, the International Monetary Fund, and others. It has also formed credit relations with Japan, Kuwait, and so forth. It is reported that China is now negotiating with more countries in a bid to establish credit relations. The Bank of China has established a great number of credit relations with foreign banks and financial organizations. It has established buyer's credit relations with more than 10 foreign banks and financial organizations and signed buyer's credit contracts with about 20 similar organizations. This trend will develop as the path for international economic cooperation is continuously expanding.

2. There are many and varied forms of credits. International credits are carried out in many and varied forms. With China's increasing involvement in international economic life and the enrichment of its experience in this respect, there are many and varied credit forms to gradually suit the needs of the changing situation. Since last year in particular, China has procured more government-to-government loans and various kinds of development funds. It has succeeded in its experiments in utilizing petrodollars. It has been decided through consultation with Kuwait that China will utilize the $100 million loans provided by the Arabian Economic Development Fund of Kuwait. The China International Trust and Investment Corporation has also initiated a new form which has never been used before: early this year, it issued private company bonds of 10 billion yen in Japan.

3. China has been more selective in using foreign loans. Since there are more and more organizations providing China with loans and many and varied credit forms have been adopted, China is now able to choose the best form of loans. It can conscientiously study the sources of foreign loans and credit terms and compare them so as to obtain the most favorable credit terms. Judging from the foreign loans which China obtained last year, we know that they were mostly medium- and long-term loans with medium and low interest rates. The number of general commercial credits was limited. The units concerned have made an analysis and comparison of the foreign loans obtained last year and found out that about 61 percent of them were loans on favorable terms.

Marching Toward a Mature Stage

After making an initial analysis of the above situation, we can see the following things very clearly: First, China is adopting a prudent policy for using foreign investment and that it is neither drawing back or retreating. After the changing of the national conditions of closing the country to international intercourse, things have taken on a new aspect in China. China has achieved initial experience and is marching toward a mature stage. Second, China's main method for using foreign capital is to encourage direct investments which have been carried out on an unprecedented scale. New progress has been scored in using foreign capital to develop various enterprises. These are the general trends of economic development.

REN ZHONGYI SAYS ECONOMIC ZONES NEED STUDY

[Special dispatch: "Ren Zhongyi Says Question of Whether Special Zones Can Turn Into Colonies Should Be Studied"]

[Text] Shenzhen, 13 June -- Early this morning, Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi, provincial CCP Committee Secretary and rovincial Special Economic Zone Administrative Committee Director Wu Nansheng and Shenzhen Mayor Liang Xiang called on the homes of the delegates to the symposium on Guangdong provincial special economic zones and had a cordial talk with them. They also stayed for a while at the home of Xu Xuehan, research fellow of the Economic Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

Ren Zhongyi said: "The builders of special economic zones welcome theoretical workers because the building of special zones badly needs theoretical guidance. Some people engaged in practical work have done their work correctly but they are unable to come up with any convincing argument. They are unable to give a clear explanation even when they have made mistakes in their work. This explains the great importance of theory. It is necessary to raise practice to a theoretical plane and combine theory with practice."

Ren Zhongyi said: "If the orientation is correct, the construction can develop with irresistible force. The theoretical workers are welcome to conduct more investigation and study and help approach and expound the important questions which have been raised in the course of practice and which need to be answered. In running special economic zones as an experiment, some people are worried that they will turn into colonies. We should make a conscientious study so that we can run the special zones well without turning them into colonies. We should have this confidence."

Today is the last day of the symposium. Ren Zhongyi asked provincial CCP committee Deputy Secretary-General Zhang Hanqing to extend greetings to all the delegates at the meeting. Ren Zhongyi left Shenzhen for Zhuhai special zone this evening to inspect the work there.

CORRECTION TO WEI YUMING SPEECH ON INVESTMENT

The following correction should be made in the item headlined "Text of Wei Yuming Speech to Investment Meeting," published in the 10 June DAILY REPORT, page W 1:

Paragraph two, from line eight should read: "second, endeavoring to obtain medium- and long-term loans at low or medium interests rates and various exploration and development funds from foreign governments and international financial organizations...."

NONALIGNED MEETING ISSUES FINAL COMMUNIQUE

OW071842 Beijing XINHUA in English 1613 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Text] Havana, June 6 (XINHUA) -- The ministerial meeting of Non-Aligned Countries' Coordinating Bureau issued a final communique here today, reaffirming the original principle and basic nature of the Non-Aligned Movement. The communique, adopted after more than 20 hours of discussion, said the quintessence of the Non-Aligned Movement is "to fight against imperialism, neocolonialism, apartheid, racialism, Zionism, aggression, occupation, dominance, foreign intervention and hegemony, and the policies of powers or groups."

The communique, consisting of 242 articles divided into politics and economics, is designed to establish a basis for discussion at the next summit conference of the Non-Aligned Movement to be held in Baghdad in September.

Concerning politics, the communique reaffirmed that the principle of non-interference in internal affairs of other countries must be adhered to, because this is one of the fundamental principles of the Non-Aligned Movement.

The communique said the ministers attending the meeting are concerned about the continuing external pressure imposed on many Asian, African, European and Latin American countries and interference in their internal affairs.

Referring to the international situation, the communique said that the relaxation of international tension cannot be established on the basis of balanced strength between power groups, division of spheres of influence, antagonistic policies, military alliance, armament expansion or policies for more nuclear weapons. Without the participation of non-aligned countries, the communique said, the relaxation of international tension cannot be fully guaranteed.

The communique called on foreign troops to withdraw from Southeast Asia to ensure respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of the countries in this region, including Kampuchea.

The communique reaffirmed the urgent appeal made by the ministerial meeting in New Delhi in February 1981 for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and a political settlement for this country.

The communique demanded that Israel withdraw totally and unconditionally from the occupied Arab lands and proposed that the U.N. secretary-general make contacts with the conflicting sides, including the Palestine Liberation Organization as soon as possible. It also pointed out that the U.S. support for Israel is a decisive factor causing the Israeli aggression, occupation and colonialism.

The communique condemned South Africa for its aggression against Namibia and political suppression in the country. It called for worldwide and forceful sanctions against South Africa.

The communique called on the delegation of the Non-Aligned Movement to continue mediation efforts for a just, peaceful, and honorable settlement to the Iran-Iraq war.

Referring to the situation on the Malvinas Islands, the communique reaffirmed its support for returning the islands' sovereignty to Argentina and urged a ceasefire between Britain and Argentina.

The communique also called for a just and permanent solution for the conflict between Britain and Argentina in accordance with the relevant resolutions of the U.N. Security Council. It appealed to the United States to stop supplying Britain with military aid and to developed countries to halt the "antagonistic sanctions" imposed on Argentina.

Concerning economics, the communique said that negotiations for an establishment of a new international economic order must be promoted because the economic crises in the developed countries have affected the developing countries. The communique said that more efforts should be made to promote cooperations among the deveoping countries and to promote global negotiations between the developing and developed countries.

The four-day meeting, which began on June 2, was attended by delegations from 92 countries.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS ON NATO SUMMIT MEETING

HK120844 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Jun 82 p 7

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Xu Qingmei [6079 1987 5019] and GUANGMING RIBAO reporter Song Keming [1345 0344 2494]: "NATO Holds Summit Meeting; Issues Bonn Declaration"]

[Text] Bonn, 10 Jun -- A 1-day NATO summit meeting concluded in Bonn, West Germany, on 10 June. The meeting issued three documents, a "Bonn Declaration," "On the Unification of NATO Forces" and "On Arms Control and Disarmament."

The declaration reiterated the role of NATO, stressing that it is "a major instrument in deterring aggressors by powerful defense and strengthening peace by constructive dialogue;" it denounced the Soviet Union for devoting vast resources in the past 10 years to the large-scale strengthening of its armed forces, "in order to support its global long-term military aims." Citing Soviet aggression against Afghanistan, the declaration pointed out: "The Soviet Union will after all use force outside its own borders." West German Chancellor Schmidt said after the meeting that the "Bonn Declaration" was a "positive signal" by NATO "at a crucial moment."

The document "On the Unification of NATO Forces" said: NATO is "particularly concerned over" strengthening its "conventional forces," and "we must make full use of new technology to improve our conventional defenses."

The main theme in the meeting's discussions was that of East-West relations. The document "On Arms Control and Disarmament" which the meeting approved, pointed out that "large-scale, reciprocal and verifiable arms control and disarmament help to strengthen peace," and also expressed unanimous support for the proposal put forth by the United States at the U.S.-Soviet strategic nuclear arms negotiations, which demands that the Soviet Union accept the notion that both sides should greatly reduce their strategic nuclear forces.

People here pointed out that the aim of the NATO summit's documents is to show that the Western alliance is united today, when there is neutralism in Western Europe and isolationism in the United States. The meeting's honorary chairman, Canadian Prime Minister Trudeau, the host, West German Chancellor Schmidt, and NATO Secretary General Luns all stressed NATO unity in their speeches at the opening of the meeting. France raised the level of its representative to the meeting, a fact noted and given importance by the press. Since France withdrew from the NATO military entity in 1966, it has always only sent ministerial-level figures to attend high-level NATO meetings. But this time French President Mitterrand attended the 9 June welcoming dinner for the summit given by West German President Carstens, and Prime Minister Mauroy led the French delegation to the meeting. NATO Secretary General Luns said, this shows that France is strengthening its ties with NATO.

This summit was originally scheduled to be held in Brussels, Belgium, but in February the venue was switched to Bonn at the request of the West German Government. People hold that the gathering of the 16 NATO leaders in Bonn shows that West Germany is a staunch supporter of NATO and also illustrates the Western alliance's clear support for West Germany.

At a press conference, NATO Secretary General Luns stressed that the Bonn meeting marked a "new starting point" in relations in the Western alliance, and opened up a "new era" in East-West relations. However, some Westerners said that the documents approved by the meeting had only reiterated the statements made at meetings held this year by NATO's nuclear planning groups, defense planning committee and ministerial council.

According to information, the drafting of these documents was a very difficult task. When drafting the document "On the Unification of NATO Forces," the United States had stressed that the challenge in the 1980's came from the Soviet Union, and the way of meeting it was inclined toward strengthening military power, while certain West European countries stressed that the method of "detente" should be adopted toward the Soviet Union in politics and economics. The United States had stressed that the "three-in-one" military idea of strategic nuclear arms, theater nuclear arms and conventional arms should be put into effect, while certain West European countries were worried about increasing military expenditures, due to their economic difficulties. Although both sides made concessions and reached a compromise, people held that even if the meeting's documents were implemented smoothly, it would be hard to change quickly NATO's inferiority to the Soviet Union in conventional forces and medium-range weapons.

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Minister of Education He Dongchang met with Mr. Charles Hummel, president of the UNESCO Council of the International Bureau of Education, and Mrs. Hummel here this morning. They had a cordial and friendly talk on ways to promote the exchange in education and to strengthen and develop compulsory primary education and vocational education.

PRC DELEGATE ATTENDS INSURANCE CONGRESS

[Text] Nairobi, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Third World countries should strengthen cooperation in insurance and reinsurance to protect their economic interests, stressed the Third World insurance congress at its third session which ended here today. Delegates from more than 60 countries attended the five-day session, discussing problems facing the insurance enterprises of the Third World countries, with the main theme "inter-regional development through insurance cooperation in the 1980's."

Chinese delegate and deputy director of insurance administration Lin Zhenfeng said that Third World countries share the common desire for developing an independent national insurance industry and have adopted a number of measures to reduce the insurance premium outflow in foreign exchange. To this end, he advocated the exchange of reinsurance of similar class and equal quality among the developing countries, while continuing sensible business exchange with insurance institutions of developed countries.

The session decided to set up a committee to finalize the draft constitution of the congress for adoption at the next session to be held in Morocco in 1984. The first and second sessions were held in Manila and Buenos Aires in 1977 and 1980 respectively.

XINHUA REVIEWS U.S. DIPLOMATIC PROBLEMS, SUMMIT

OW150017 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1136 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Report-commentary by XINHUA reporter Wu Jin: "U.S. Diplomatic Difficulties as Seen From Reagan's West Europe Trip"]

[Text] Washington, 13 Jun -- U.S. President Reagan made a whirlwind visit to West Europe from 2 June to 11 June. During the 10 days, he attended the economic summit conference of seven Western nations in Paris and the NATO summit conference in Bonn and visited France, Italy, Britain and West Germany.

Reagan's trip came at a time when the United States was beset with difficulties in domestic affairs and foreign relations. In the United States, the long economic recession is still lingering. Unemployment is constantly rising. The administration failed in trying to slash the welfare spending, but is being forced to cut back on military spending even though it does not want to. Open and veiled squabblings over domestic and foreign policies constantly exist between the administration and the Congress, among various government departments, between the Republican Party and the Democratic Party and among various factions of the two parties. As the mid-term election nears, Reagan's prestige is dropping significantly. The U.S. press holds that these problems prompted Reagan to arrange an overseas visit in grand style in order to divert people's attention. Nevertheless, this is not necessarily true. In fact, many people at home and abroad criticize him for entangling himself too much with domestic issues and thus overlooking decisive foreign policies since he became president. They criticize him because U.S. foreign relations have remained in a state of "treating the head when the head aches and treating the foot when the foot aches" and for not having a clear, definite and consistent foreign policy.

For example, the difference that arose between the United States and its West European allies over the strategy against the Soviet Union has become the most serious one since the founding of NATO, according to U.S. press opinion. The economic contradictions of various Western nations must be handled soon. These were the primary reasons for Reagan's visit to West Europe.

Since Reagan became President, he has energetically emphasized military buildup and preparation against war to check the Soviet Union's expansion. He even said that for this reason he would not hesitate to fight a "limited nuclear war" in Europe. After Poland declared martial law at the end of 1981, the Reagan administration made every effort to compel its allies to apply sanctions against the Soviet Union. While West European nations welcome the Reagan administration's hard line in some aspects, they also have misgivings and anxieties, fearing that the hard line will cause tension in Europe and endanger their political and economic interests. Judging by Reagan's recent speechs and the results of the NATO Bonn summit conference, the United States has at least appeared to have accepted the demand of West European countries for resuming talks, dialogues and disarmament. The contradictions between them have been alleviated, but actual differences still exist.

On the economic issue, West European countries have complained for the past year and more than the high interest policy adopted by the United States inhibits their economic recovery. They demanded that the United States intervene in the international monetary market to keep a fairly even and stable rate of exchange between the dollar and the currencies of the other Western nations. However, they did not obtain any concrete promises from the United States over these two issues at the Versailles conference.

As a result of the recent Israeli invasion of Lebanon and the war between Iran and Iraq, the Middle East situation is again showing signs of imminent danger as it tends to threaten the stability of the entire Persian Gulf Region. For the past year and more, the Reagan administration has been maintaining an ambiguous and self-contradicting Middle East policy: While wanting to patch up its relations with the Arab countries and to seek "strategic consistency" in confronting Soviet expansion in this region of strategic importance, the Reagan administration is still not willing to change its biased policy toward Israel with which it connives with Israeli aggression and expansion.

As a result, it has long bogged itself down in a passive, awkward situation of attending to one thing and losing sight of another. Furthermore, the contradictions of all descriptions in this region have become more complicated and the situation there is more uncontrollable with the ongoing Iran-Iraq war and the Soviet Union is fishing in troubled waters by taking advantage of the situation.

The war between Britain and Argentina on the question of sovereignty and jurisdiction over the Malvinas Islands has drawn the United Sttates into another whirlpool of troubles. By openly siding with Britain, the Reagan administration has not only destroyed its relations with Argentina but also offended many Latin American countries.

While Reagan called his trip to West Europe a "pilgrimage of peace," he found out by the time he returned to the White House after his trip that the prospects of world peace were not any brighter as a result of his trip and that U.S. diplomacy will have to continue to fumble along a bumpy road beset with difficulties.

GRADUATE STUDENTS TO STUDY PHYSICS IN U.S.

OW290303 Beijing XINHUA in English 0256 GMT 29 May 82

[Text] Beijing, May 29 (XINHUA) -- One hundred and twentyfive Chinese students will enter U.S. universities this fall as postgraduates in physics, according to the Education Bureau of the Chinese Academy of Sciences.

The students were chosen under the 1981 China-U.S. physics examination and application program, sponsored and organized by Professor Tsung-dao Lee at Columbia University of the U.S.A.

After being recommended by the Chinese side, they passed a written exam last autumn and subsequently an oral exam given by two U.S. professors who came to China for that purpose.

Most of the students will study experimental and applied physics at Harvard, Princeton, Stanford, Columbia, Cornell and Yale Universities, the University of California at Berkeley, California Institute of Technology, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Starting in 1982, the China-U.S. physics examination and application program will continue for five years. Recruitment work for 1982 is now under way, said the bureau.

USSR FABRICATION ABOUT AFGHAN GUERRILLAS ALLEGED

["International Jottings" by Bo Yong [3134 3196]: "How Can People Be Spreading Rumors?"]

[Text] Some time ago, Soviet Ambassador to Pakistan Vitaliy Smirnov went to the Pakistani international relations college in Karachi to air a brilliant view. In dead earnest, he declared that "there are 82 centers in Pakistan" specially training Afghan guerrillas. After being trained, they "head for Afghanistan to mobilize armed attacks." Smirnov also claimed that what he said was not a fabrication but something "based on fact."

This accusation made by this Soviet ambassador in a positive tone inevitably aroused shock and indignation in official circles in Pakistan. Touching on this recently, President Ziaul Haq demanded that the Soviet Government "produce evidence to prove the existence of these training camps and give their location." The Soviet side played dumb and kept quiet. It is clear that what Smirnov said was a sheer fabrication and without foundation.

Since this is a fabrication, why should this ambassador want to tell a lie with an open eye. In spreading rumors, Smirnov declared, stern-faced, "If you people do not admit to the existence of these centers, you cannot call for the withdrawal of foreign troops." It has turned out that such is the case! He was seeking an excuse for the Soviet refusal to withdraw troops from Afghanistan. This is really a trick that serves a twofold purpose. If you do not admit the existence of these training centers, you cannot demand the Soviet withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan. If you admit the existence of these training centers, the Soviet Union will have reason to withdraw troops from Afghanistan. But apart from pointing to the outrageous behavior of Soviet hegemonists, what has this clumsy tactic of spreading rumors to show?

USSR CRITICIZES U.S. BID AT VERSAILLES SUMMIT

[Text] The Soviet Union is greatly annoyed at having economic relations between the West and the Soviet Union curbed as decided at the summit consultations of seven Western nations. Over the past several days the Soviet Union has spared no efforts to attack the U.S. proposal that political and security interests be taken into consideration before extending financial aid and exporting strategic materials to the Soviet Union.

TASS carried a commentator's article on 7 June saying that in Versailles the U.S. representatives imposed themselves in the rudest possible manner on their partners, with the United States trying to force its partners to accept a resolution which would undermine the natural and mutually beneficial East-West economic relations while disregarding the fact that Washington's plan would actually damage the Western nations' own interests. The commentary points out: The seven-power summit in Versailles proves that the United States does not intend to be polite to its allies. It will make every effort to get rid of its own economic difficulties at the expense of the interests of other countries, particularly the interests of its European partners.

PRAVDA also carried an article saying that Washington tried to go all out to obstruct the execution of a pipeline-laying project for the sole purpose of undermining detente. The article says: What is more important is that the United States is sparing no efforts to expand energy resources so as to make West Europe dependent on the United States in this regard.

With regard to the differences of views among the Western countries at the seven-power summit on the question of extending loans to the Soviet Union, the Soviet authorities and press have made a big issue of it. They have made every effort to sow discord between the United States on the one hand and West Europe and Japan on the other. A TASS article says: The United States wants to bring the summit into the anti-Soviet orbit and keep its partners tied to Washington's policy aimed at sabotaging East-West relations.

GENG BIAO ARRIVES IN DPRK, MET BY O CHIN-U

[Text] Pyongyang, June 14 (XINHUA) -- A military delegation of the People's Republic of China arrived here this morning on an official goodwill visit to Korea.

The Chinese delegation is headed by Geng Biao, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, member of the Standing Committee of the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, state councillor and minister of national defense. Deputy head of the delegation is Liang Biye, member of the CCP Central Committee, member of the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee and deputy director of the General Political Department of the People's Liberation Army.

Welcoming the delegation at the airport were O. Chin-u, member of the presidium of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers Party of Korea and minister of the People's Armed Forces, and other high ranking party, government and military leaders.

Also present at the airport were charge d'affaires ad interim of the Chinese Embassy here, He Zhangming, military attache of the Chinese Embassy Yu Kezhong, who is also a member of the Chinese delegation.

The Korean newspaper NODONG SINMUN today says in an editorial welcoming the Chinese delegation, "as the U.S. imperialists are further stepping up the policies of aggression and war in South Korea, and instigating the traitor Chon Tu-hwan to provoke a new war, it is of great significance to strengthen the friendship and unity between the Korean and Chinese peoples and armies."

The editorial entitled "Powerful Demonstration of Friendship and Unity Between Korea and Chinese Peoples and Armies" says "the visit of the military delegation of the People's Republic of China to our country will once again demonstrate forcefully the might of the great friendship and unity between the Korean and Chinese peoples and armies, and contribute to defending peace in Asia and the world."

"We deem it a great joy to have as our neighbors such comrades-in-arms who are faithful to revolutionary morality as the Chinese people," it says.

It says in conclusion, "As they were firmly united to defeat two imperialisms in the past, so in the future, too, the Korean and Chinese peoples and armies will always fight shoulder to shoulder as revolutionary comrades-in-arms in the struggle against imperialism and for the victory of socialism and communism."

ZHU XUEFAN MEETS JAPAN TELECOMMUNICATIONS PARTY

OW141732 Beijing XINHUA in English 1517 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Zhu Xuefan, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, met and had a friendly conversation with Toyohiko Mizuhira, Japanese parliamentary vice-minister of posts and telecommunications, and his party at the Great Hall of the People today. Present at the meeting were Wen Minsheng and Cheng Anyu, Chinese minister and vice-minister of posts and telecommunicatins.

The Japanese guests arrived here on June 10 for a visit to China at the invitation of the Chinese Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications.

On June 11, Wen Minsheng and Cheng Anyu met with Toyohiko Mizuhira and his party on separate occasions. They exchanged views on strengthening friendly cooperation between the two countries' posts and telecommunications departments.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SOUTH KOREAN FINANCE SCANDAL

[Article by Zhang Jinfang [1728 6930 2455]: "South Korea's Scandal -- The Case of Chang Yong-cha"]

[Text] Recently, a financial scandal in South Korea has shaken people from all walks of life. The central characters involved are Chang Yong-cha, a relative of the South Korean puppet president, Chon Tu-hwan, and her husband, Yi Chol-hui, former deputy director of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency.

With the help of Yi Chol-hui, Chang Yong-cha coerced six large to middle-size enterprises that were short of funds, including Ilshin Steel and the Kongyung Construction Company into lending her money. [sentence as published] She then used the money to buy promissory notes worth several times that amount and resold the promissory notes for cash, thus making huge profits. At the same time, Chang Yong-cha mobilized several hundred money-lenders into depositing money in banks and also induced the people responsible at these banks into illegally withdrawing the money in the enterprises' names, thus pocketing the money. From February to April of last year, the promissory notes that Chang Yong-cha had obtained by deception and eventually resold at a profit were worth 711 billion yuan (approximately $990 million). She thus made an enormous profit of 180.1 billion yuan (approximately $250 million). By so doing, Chang Yong-cha, this ordinary moneylender with only 2 billion yuan in capital, became a superupstart in South Korea overnight.

The Chang Yong-cha fraud case has led to the bankruptcy of one of South Korea's four biggest steelworks, Ilshin Steel and the near-bankruptcy of one of the few foreign construction contractors, the Kongyung Construction Company. Furthermore, four enterprises sustained serious capital losses, and the South Korean curb-market had to close down, share prices plummeted, inflation soared dramatically, several hundred enterprises halted production or went bankrupt, several thousands of small and medium-size enterprises did not have enough work to do and scores of workers were laid off and so forth. The South Korean press said that this was the biggest fraud case in South Korea's history, "causing the gloomy economy to be hit by a great tornado."

The Chang Yong-cha fraud case has certainly dealt a serious blow to the South Korean economy. What is more important is that it has exposed the seaminess and corruption of the dictatorial rule of Chon Tu-hwan. After the fraud case was made known, there was a public outcry and much uncertainty among the people. The opposition parties and people in all walks of life were deeply shocked. They all demanded a thorough exposure of the facts of the fraud case and pointed the finger of blame at the Chon Tu-hwan ruling clique. According to reports in South Korean newspapers, everyone in South Korea feels that the Chang Yong-cha fraud case involves certain people in power. It has been pointed out by many that this was a classic example of collaboration between financial and political power. A great number of members of the "National Assembly" were of the opinion that, apart from being attributable to defects in the structure of the South Korean economy, the incident was also the result of collaboration between political power and the underground economy.

Right from the start, the South Korean authorities have tried to cover up the Chang Yong-cha affair. At first, the prosecutor's office arrested Chang Yong-cha for "violating the foreign exchange control law." This, however, covered up the main fact that she had defrauded people. It was only afterward that the prosecutor's office, under public pressure, published a so-called "intermediate investigation findings," doing its best to play down Chang Yong-cha's crimes and to deny foreknowledge of them. Government officials repeatedly denied that the case had anything to do with political power.

In fact, Chang Yong-cha's fraud case itself bears sufficient testimony to the involvement of political power. Chang Yong-cha is the sister-in-law of Yi Kyu-kwang, who is president of the Taehan Mining Development Company, former head of the military police and uncle of the wife of Chon Tu-hwan. Chang Yong-cha, Yi Kyu-kwang and Chon Tu-hwan together formed a "black triangle." In the course of her crimes, Chang Yong-cha always relied on the political and economic support of Chon Tu-hwan and Yi Kyu-kwang. After the prosecutor's office published it "intermediate investigation findings," it was pointed out by public opinion and people from all walks of life that it was inconceivable that Chang Yong-cha would have been able to conduct such startling fraudulent activities in such a short space of time without political backing. They demanded an investigation into Chang Yong-cha's backers and "behind-the-scenes connections," as well as the question of certain money which Chang Yong-cha had obtained by deception being used as "political funds" by Chon Tu-hwan's Democratic Justice Party.

In the face of public pressure, Chon Tu-hwan was forced to make minor concessions to safeguard major interests. On 20 and 21 May, he carried out a hasty reshuffle of the leading clique of the ruling Democratic Justice Party and the "Cabinet." Four leading personages in the Democratic Justice Party and 11 members of the "Cabinet" were replaced. Afterward, upon the instructions of Chon Tu-hwan, the prosecutor's office detained and interrogated Yi Kyu-kwang and admitted that Yi Kyu-kwang had given clandestine support to Chang Yong-cha and had benefited financially from so doing. At the same time, a "findings of a comprehensive investigation" was published in the name of the prosecutor's office and it again contained a denial on the involvement of political power.

The Chon Tu-hwan clique hoped that this would quell public dissatisfaction and evade people's questions. However, the South Korean people refused to give up. The Democratic Korea Party, the nationalist party and other opposition parties jointly proposed the holding of a provisional "National Assembly." In addition to sacking the "prime minister," "deputy prime minister," "minister of finance" and so forth, they also demanded the use of the National Assembly's "state power of investigation" [0948 2398 6148 2686 2938] to forestall the authorities carrying out an investigation into the Chang Yong-cha affair. The opposition parties aim at looking thoroughly into the "behind-the-scenes connections" of the case and the sources and uses of "political funds." The chairman of the Democratic Korea Party (Yu Chi-song) said in a speech that: "The Chang woman's case obviously had a backer." "This case is the great culmination of the omnipotence of officials coupled with the corruption that has piled up." He said that the Cabinet reshuffle was merely a cunning maneuver. "Those who should really be responsible have not assumed their responsibility."

At present, although Chon Tu-hwan has used the influence of his Democratic Justice Party over the "National Assembly" to forcibly close the big door of investigations into the Chang Yong-cha fraud case, the aftermath of the affair will act on the South Korean political scene like a live volcano.

REPORT ON DEMOCRATIC KAMPUCHEA 1981-82 BATTLES

[Article by XINHUA reporter Yang Mu [2799 2606] and RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wang Rong Jiu [3769 2837 0036]: "On the Scene of Fierce Fighting"]

[Text] In the 1981-82 dry season, fierce fighting broke out between the Democratic Kampuchean National Army and the invading Vietnamese troops in four places on the Sisophon battlefield south of Highway No 5. Recently, we visited three of these four places -- (Sambo Lun) [0005 0130 0243] Mountain, (Da Si Da) [6671 2448 66712 Mountain and (Duo Zhilei) [1122 5347 7191] village.

In the past, this was a peaceful land where row upon row of cottages stood among luxuriant forests and blooming flowers. Now, there are only felled trees, burnt houses and startling craters. What were once vegetable plots have now been turned into graveyards.

However, when we went deeper into the forests, we found ourselves in a totally different environment. The Democratic Kampuchean Army and people are rebuilding their homes with their own hands on the ruins of war. On this land where fierce battles had taken place, there pervaded a mixed atmosphere of war and peace, destruction and construction, and glorious memory and the joy of victory!

For the Democratic Kampuchean Army and people, who are courageously fighting against the Vietnamese invaders to save the country, the joy of victory means killing a large number of the enemy and crushing the offensives of the invaders. In this command post, (Nikhon) [1441 1481], political commissar of a certain division of the Democratic Kampuchean National Army, told us about the four fierce battles, and then took us to see the battlefields.

We arrived at the western end of the 50 kilometer-long, less than 5 meter-wide (Takong-Veal Veng Huo Mu) [6671 6300 7279 5040 0129 2606] Highway. This is on the (Da Si Da) Mountain battlefield, where the enemy launched the third main offensive in the "mopping-up" operation in the recent dry season. (Nikhon) told us that the offensive had begun on 14 January this year. The Vietnamese mobilized 10,000 soldiers to advance along three routes toward the Sisophon area. This highway on which we were standing was the first route of the enemy's offensive. The spot is 2.5 kilometers from the Kampuchean-Thai border and from Veal Veng. After setbacks in two previous offensives, the Vietnamese troops launched a fiercer third main offensive.

Following (Nikhon) on the highway, we found, just as we expected, temporary bunkers built by the Vietnamese troops every 3 or 4 meters as we walked along. We could even see cannon and machinegun emplacements directed to the west under giant trees, and some shell fragments, shell casings and military supplies left on the road by the Vietnamese troops. When we arrived at the junction of the highway and the mountain path we saw three completely destroyed tanks resting in an area less than 150 meters in diameter. The commander of a certain regiment of the Democratic Kampuchean National Army had been waiting for us there for a long time. Pointing at the tank wreckages, he said: "I was the commander in charge of this sector. During the third offensive, the enemy sent tanks and infantrymen in repeated assaults toward the Kampuchean-Thai border. We struck back at all their assaults. While retreating in defeat this Soviet-made T-63 model tank hit one of our antitank mines and was blown to pieces!" We saw one of the tank's tracks thrown over 20 meters by the force of the explosion. The regimental commander and all the fighters showed their joy of victory when talking about this antitank battle.

In (Duo Zhi Lei) village, the site of the fourth engagement, the traces of fierce battle were even more obvious. More than 500 Vietnamese soldiers had intruded into Thai territory to attack the Democratic Kampuchean troops from the rear; while tanks and infantrymen moved to carry out a frontal attack under the cover of heavy gun bombardment.

A regiment of the Democratic Kampuchean Army which was holding fast to its position in trenches and bunkers in the forest faced the attacks from both flanks, under the enemy's heavy crossfire and while being bombarded with gas shells. But, the national army steadfastly stood its ground. For 3 days, from 2 to 5 April, the commander stayed awake and the fighters were deafened by explosions. The members of women's transport teams in that village and other neighboring villages also stayed awake for 2 or 3 days, carrying ammunition to the battlefront under heavy fire. A 24-year-old woman, (Boer) [3134 3643], and her 12 teammates were assaulted by the enemy while carrying ammunition to the front. One of them was injured. However, they kept moving while striking back at the enemy, and thus eventually fulfilled their task. Relying on such an indomitable and courageous spirit and on the assistance of other units, the national army, despite certain casualties, finally managed to smash the enemy's fourth offensive and inflicted heavy losses on it. The Vietnamese troops were forced to retreat in defeat from the whole front in mid-April.

Heroes and heroines are constantly emerging. In January and February this year, when the Vietnamese troops were laying siege to (Chakrei) Mountain, five Democratic Kampuchean fighters were left on the mountain top. Trying to rescue them from the siege, the national army heavily bombarded the enemy's position. However, while breaking out of the encirclement, two of them were seriously injured when they hit mines. To avoid being captured by the enemy, they heroically committed suicide. In memory of these brave martyrs, the masses erected a low mat shelter over their tombs and planted some "never dying" flowers to symbolize their everlasting spirit.

And now this everlasting spirit seems to have turned into the phoenix which has been revived in the raging fire. Yes, this is true. After returning to their home villages, the villagers cleared away all the mines buried under the foundations of their houses and rebuilt new villages in 2 weeks time. The garrison troops spent only 3 days to build barracks.

Just before the rainy season came, the villagers sowed corn seeds and planted sugarcane saplings in the field which was now free of mines. When we passed by a village, we saw stalks of corn growing up to one foot or even taller, and we could smell the light fragrance of green bamboo and grass. Several little gods raised their heads and barked at us when seeing "strangers" pass by. In front of a new house, a flock of newly hatched chicks was skipping with joy around their mother. Smiling, Division Political Commissar (Nikhon) told us that 50 young couples had got married in several villages within a month or so after the end of the fierce battles; and as babies were being born almost every day, the number of births far exceeded the number of deaths on the battlefront. A young woman called (Laer) [2139 3643], standing by the door with a baby in arms, was looking at us with a smile. She told us that when her daughter was born, an enemy bomb exploded less than 30 meters in front of her house. Truly, this was a baby born in gunfire. And now, she was already able to smile.

As the image of the smiling baby was still on our minds, we heard whistling in the woods along the path -- the students of the military institute were playing volleyball. The national army was making use of the rainy season to rest, study, and carry out reorganization and military training. They have summed up experience obtained in the anti-mopping-up operation battles in the last dry season, and thus improved their political understanding and combat tactics. In the days to come, whether in the rainy or dry season, what the enemy is going to face will absolutely not be good wine but traps and guns!

CHEN MUHUA MEETS EEC VICE PRESIDENT DAVIGNON

OW141740 Beijing XINHUA in English 1553 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, met with Etienne Davignon, vice-president of the commission of the European Economic Community, and his party here this evening.

Reviewing the development of China's trade with E.E.C. countries in recent years, Chen Muhua said China is willing to develop this relationship with them.

She pointed out that there are bright prospects for economic cooperation and trade between China and the E.E.C. so long as the two sides increase contacts and deepen understanding.

Davignon said the E.E.C. commission expects further growth of its cooperation with China. He stressed that the best cooperation is based on mutual interests. Only thus can the cooperation last long.

After the meeting, Chen Muhua hosted a banquet for the guests. Belgian Ambassador to China Roger Denorme and envoys of other E.E.C. countries to China were present.

Also present were Jia Shi, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, Zhang Wenjin, vice-minister of foreign affairs, Yang Jun, vice-minister of the state scientific and technological commission, and Zheng Weizhi, Chinese ambassador to Belgium.

This morning, Jia Shi held talks with Etienne Davignon.

RENMIN RIBAO CONDEMNS INVASION BY ISRAEL

HK111153 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jun 82 p 6

[Commentator's article: "Strongly Condemn Israel's Invasion of Lebanon"]

[Text] The Begin authorities in Israel have brazenly ignored the UN Security Council resolution urging it to stop its invasion of Lebanon. It has continued to command its aggressor troops to carry out a large-scale attack on Lebanon. The Israeli aggressor troops have now pushed close to the Lebanese capital of Beirut and this brought about an extremely serious situation.

The savage Israeli aggression has not only inflicted heavy loss of life and property on the Lebanese and Palestinian people, but also grossly violated the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Lebanon and sharply aggravated the situation in the Middle East region.

The Israeli invasion is a long-premediated action. For months, the Israeli authorities have been preparing opinion for the invasion, clamoring that in order to ensure "Israel's peace and survival," it is necessary to expand the "scope of its secure borders" and to "wipe out as much as possible of the military and political structure of the Palestine Liberation Organization." Meanwhile, it has actively carried out deployments for aggression and military exercises, waiting for the opportunity to act. With the attention of the international community drawn to the Anglo-Argentine conflict and the Iran-Iraq war, the Begin authorities seized the opportunity to launch massive aggression, using the attempted assassination of the Israeli ambassador in London as a pretext.

Through this invasion the Israeli authorities vainly hope to wipe out the PLO bases in Lebanon and eliminate or weaken the PLO armed forces so as to smother the Palestinian people's struggle for the right to national self-determination and perpetuate the Israeli occupation of the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. In an attempt to concentrate its forces on striking at the Palestine Liberation Organization, Israel has resorted to the tactic of wholesale destruction in its invasion. But the scheme of the Israeli expansionists has fallen flat. At present, the Lebanese Government troops, the Syrian peace-keeping force in Lebanon and the PLO Armed Forces are united as one and fighting shoulder to shoulder against the invaders. Other Arab states have joined in condemning the Israeli aggression in solidarity with and support of the Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization. The savage Israeli invasion has served to enhance the unity of the Arab states and people against the common enemy.

Israel's gross violation of the principles of international law and its defiance of the international community have aroused indignation all over the world. But it continues to have U.S. connivance. The U.S. veto of the UN Security Council resolution condemning Israel's refusal to withdraw its troops is further evidence of the U.S. bias toward Israel. Such stupidity on the part of the United States naturally drew heavy fire from all countries and people upholding justice.

The Chinese people strongly condemn Israel's aggression and firmly support the Palestinian and Arab people in their struggle against Israeli aggression and expansion, and for a just and reasonable solution to the Middle East problem. Israel, under the aegis of the United States, may indulge in aggression for a time, but indulgence in evil courts destruction. Its policy of aggression and expansion is doomed to utter defeat.

Fete in Beijing

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Ngapoi Ngawang Jigme, vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, gave a banquet Friday evening for Gustavo Dager Chadid, president of the Colombian Senate.

The vice-chairman said: "The friendly contacts between Third World peoples are not only a demonstration of mutual trust and support, but also a display of unity. "With the tense and turbulent, complicated and changing international situation, such mutual trust, support and unity are of vital importance," he said.

He praised Colombia's perseverance in supporting the right of self-determination for people of various countries, opposing outside interference and strengthening unity and cooperation between Latin American countries. He said: "We have always understood, sympathized with and supported the Latin American people's struggle for safeguarding national independence, developing their national economy and striving for social progress."

Referring to Sino-Colombian friendship, he said: "Although the time since establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Colombia is not long, the development of bilateral relations is satisfactory." He said Dager's visit would make new contributions to the friendship between the two countries.

In his speech, Dager said: "This visit enables m to acquaint myself with China's history and culture, and to experience the friendship between the two countries," he said.

"Colombia and China established diplomatic relations only two years ago, but their development has been fine. The developing economic relations and trade between the two countries form an indispensable basis for strengthening and consolidating China-Colombia relations," he said.

"We also have shared identical views on international affairs. We all respect the right of self-determination of the people of various countries and oppose foreign interference. We both persist in this principle," he said. He praised the Chinese people for their wisdom and progress, and wished them great success in the construction of their country.

Ricardo Samper, charge d'affaires and interim of the Colombian Embassy in China was among the guests. Also present were Kong Yuan and Liu Danian, deputy secretary-general and member of the N.P.C. Standing Committee, and Han Xu, vice-minister of foreign affairs.

YAO YILIN GIVES TELEVISED SPEECH ON CENSUS

["Let the People of All Nationalities Throughout the Country Actively Take Part in the Census" -- television and radio speech on 13 June by Yao Yilin, vice premier of the State Council]

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- Comrades: The third nationwide census will begin registration on 1 July this year.

Now, entrusted by Premier Zhao Ziyang and on behalf of the State Council, I call on the people of all nationalities throughout the country, all Communist Party members, CYL members and cadres at all levels to enthusiastically go into action and take part in the historic third nationwide census.

Why is it necessary to conduct the third nationwide census? As everyone knows, to carry out socialist economic construction, we must proceed from our country's conditions. What are our country's conditions? Population conditions are our country's most basic condition. Ours is a socialist country, and the masses of the people are the country's masters. Our purpose in production is to satisfy the constantly growing material and cultural needs of the masses of the people on the basis of continuous technical improvement and production increase. A census is an investigation of many aspects of the population conditions of the country. Therefore, in a certain sense, a census is a large-scale investigation of national conditions. The forthcoming census will cover 19 demographic items. The work will be arduous, the quality requirement is high, and considerable time and effort will be spent. However, as long as we work conscientiously and diligently, we will be rewarded with fruitful results. Through this census, we will obtain materials on the country's total population, the population's geographic distribution, sexes, ages, nationalities, educational levels, trades, occupations, marital status, women's child-bearing condition and so forth and, on the basis of these materials, make cross-comparisons and calculations and obtain a great deal of data. These data will be of very great significance for us to understand our national, provincial and county conditions. A simple example: Through the census, we can obtain information on how many children will become 1 year old at zero hour on 1 July 1982; and then we can also forecast after a certain number of years how many children will go to primary schools, middle schools and colleges, find jobs, get married, have children and so forth. Based on these materials, government departments concerned can consider how to rationally set up various kinds of schools, properly arrange employment and so forth. In short, the population materials obtained from the census will be very valuable. They can provide an important basis for us to proceed from our national conditions, readjust the national economy and carry out socialist modernization in a planned way, properly arrange the people's material and cultural life and correctly formulate our population policy and plans. The forthcoming census is a major event for the people of all nationalities throughout the country. Also, the world population conference held by the United Nations in 1974 proposed that all countries conduct a new census between 1975 and 1985. Our country is a member of the United Nations, and our population accounts for nearly a quarter of the world's population. Therefore, this census is not only a major concern of the Chinese people but a major event watched by people the world over.

The party Central Committee and the State Council attach great importance to the census and have made decisions and issued instructions on comprehensive planning for census work. Resolutely implementing the guidelines of the central decisions and instructions, leading party and government organizations in the localities and census organs at various levels have done much meticulous preparatory work for the census. They have set up census organizations at each level, carried out experimental censuses at the central, provincial, prefectural, county and municipal levels, trained key census workers, consolidated residence records, and installed and tested 29 electronic computers to be used in the census. Through training and processing of experimental data, computer technicians have basically mastered the technique in using electronic computers to process census data. All this has prepared good conditions for the census taking.

Here, on behalf of the State Council, I express thanks to the leading cadres at various levels and all the census work personnel and the masses of the people who have worked hard and contributed to the preparations for the third nationwide census.

Our country conducted its first census in 1953 and a second census in 1964 and achieved very great successes each time. The third nationwide census which will begin on 1 July this year will be on a larger scale and cover more items than the two previous censuses. It is also the first time computers will be used. Precisely because this census will be more difficult, the demands strict and the tasks arduous, the party Central Committee and the State Council call for efforts to carry out the census with high quality. Now, I shall make the following demands on behalf of the State Council:

People's governments at various levels must strengthen leadership over the census work and place it on their agenda of important matters. Especially during the 15 days or so of the registration period, the census should be regarded as a major task. Proper arrangements should be made for both the census and production so that neither the census nor production will suffer and so that both the census and production will achieve good results.

Census organizations at various levels and the several million census workers must love census work and act strictly according to census procedures, making sure that entries are not duplicated or omitted and that all parts of the census are accurate. I hope that you will vie with each other to be outstanding census workers and contribute to the success of the third nationwide census.

The month of June is the census publicity month. All propaganda departments, cultural departments, workers, youth and women's mass organizations and other units and departments should actively coordinate with the census organizations, carry out thoroughgoing and painstaking publicity activities for the census, make it known to every household and win support among the people, and mobilize the workers and staff members of each unit and the masses of the people to actively take part in the census.

It is the glorious duty of every citizen to actively take part in the census and truthfully report every item. The energetic support of the people of all nationalities throughout the country is the fundamental guarantee for the success of the census. The people of all nationalities in our country are highly conscious people. We ardently hope that our people of all nationalities will actively take part in the census and realistically report the items included in the census in accordance with the census procedures and regulations. The stipulations of some items in the census are somewhat different from those of present policies, but the census will not affect the implementation of present policies, nor will it affect citizens' rights and obligations. It is hoped that the reporter of each family is familiar with the conditions of every family member so as to help the census worker to accurately record every census item.

Comrades! Conducting a census in the great People's Republic of China, which accounts for nearly a quarter of the world's population, is a great and also an arduous task. I firmly believe that under the leadership of the party Central Committee and the State Council and through the joint effort of the cadres and masses, the tasks of the coming census assuredly will be successfully fulfilled. I wish the third nationwide census complete success! Thank you, comrades. Goodbye.

RENMIN RIBAO ON THIRD CENSUS, STATISTICAL WORK

[Article by Li Chengrui [2621 2052 3843]: "The Third Census and Modernization of the Statistical Work of Our Country"]

[Text] Population statistics constitute an extremely important branch of statistics and also have a long history. Our country was one of the earliest in the world to conduct investigations on population statistics. It is also one of the countries which in ancient times had the richest collection of population statistical materials.

However, be it in China or abroad, during periods under the slave system or the feudal system, it was impossible to collect encompassing and accurate statistics on the status of the population.

Since the rise of the capitalist system, the countries of the capitalist class have stepped up their demands for population statistics. They have possessed the necessary conditions for the realization of these demands. Modern census taking commenced with the 1790 census in the United States. Census taking in this period has gradually evolved the following basic characteristics: 1) an encompassing survey -- covering the population of the whole country; 2) individual survey -- separate person-by-person investigation; 3) survey of the population status at a designated time period; 4) survey of uniformly classified items of identical contents; 5) systematically arranging and publishing census data in unified forms. This form of modern census taking originated in a small number of capitalist countries and gradually extended to a majority of countries in the world.

Since World War II, following the development of the social economy and of science and technology and based on the above-mentioned basic special features, census taking has evolved a new trend of development as follows: 1) a vast increase in the items under survey; 2) more strict and detailed classification standards, particularly a more detailed classification of trades and occupations; 3) a combination of general survey and sampling; and 4) arrival of the use of the electronic computer. This has greatly increased the capacity for collecting and handling the materials, reinforced the accuracy and shortened the time consumed in processing and handling. Postwar census taking which possesses these special features is also known as modernized census taking.

In our country a census has been taken twice, once in 1953 and again in 1964. In both cases the census possessed the basic features of a modern census. Presently, preparations for taking the third census are underway. It may be said to be a comparatively more modernized census as seen by the following:

1. The census contents are relatively richer, more extensive and more systematic. Based on the demands of the construction of the four modernizations and on general feasibility, the number of items covered has increased from 9 in the second census to 19 at present. The new census includes a number of important new targets with a bearing on the special features of the economy, the special features of the social structure and the motherhood status of women. This has practically transformed this census taking into a large-scale survey of national conditions.

2. The new census embodies very detailed classification standards. In particular, with regard to trade classification, it has 9 large categories, 62 intermediate categories and 222 minor categories; while for occupation, it has 8 large categories, 64 intermediate categories and 301 minor categories. The designing of the classification standards is based on the Marxist theory of demarcation between material production and nonmaterial production. It emanates from our own actual conditions and at the same time due consideration is given to its compatibility with Western classification standards.

3. General survey and sampling are combined together. Examination of the quality of the census registration and the preliminary summing up of the census materials are both done by the sampling method.

4. Electronic computers will be used to sum up and to make the necessary adjustments. All the statistical data on 1 billion people will be entered into the computer system and on that basis detailed computations and tabulations will be made of the entire population classified according to geographic distribution, sex, nationality, cultural level, trade, occupation, marital status, child-bearing situation of women and so on. A rich compilation of several tens of thousands of pages of statistical data is thus in the making.

5. A series of relatively detailed and precise documentation has been prepared. These clearly explain the problems concerning the census such as its tasks, contents, standards, procedures, methodology, techniques, logistics and so on. This helps in bringing the through nature of the census organization work and the accuracy of the collected materials to a new and higher level.

Population statistics constitute an important constituent part of the entire statistical structure. To a certain degree, the development history of population statistics also reflects the development history of the entire statistical structure. The modernization of statistical work promotes the modernization of population statistics. Conversely, the modernization of population statistics helps in modernizing statistical work.

The socialist statisical work of our country was established after the founding of the PRC and has since developed gradually. We have set up special lines of statistics covering the following: industry, agriculture, communications, construction, finance and currency, commerce, commodity prices, foreign trade, material resources, population, labor, science, culture, education and hygiene. We have initially set up a system of statistics on the overall balance of the economy in order to supply a large quantity of statistical data for the planned socialist construction of our country. Our country is a socialist country. The means of production are publicly owned and all the economic activities are covered by the plan. The statistical work of our country has its special points and superior features. In certain respects, such as the unified character of our entire statistical system, the timely nature of the overall reports, and the extensive popular basis of our statistical work, the capitalist countries can hardly compare. Nevertheless, we still are behind in economic development. Our statistical work still has certain deficiencies such as the incomplete state of our statistical targets, the lack of coordination and uniformity in the statistical classification standards among the various departments, the relative simplicity of the statistical methods, the late start in the employment of modern computerization techniques, and so on. Raising the standard of our statistical work to a higher level and orienting its development to modernization are the objective demands that must be made of it. The third census represents an important step by our statistical work in the direction of modernization. It will play a definite role in promoting the advance of our entire statistical work toward modernization.

The Third Census Will Adopt Our Country's Experiences as a Basis and Absorb Foreign Experiences

The methodology employed in the third census takes as its basis the experiences of the previous two censuses but will be developed and formed according to the new conditions. One basic experience derived from the last two censuses was placing major reliance on the unified leadership of the CCP committees and people's governments at various levels. On account of this unified leadership, the relevant departments, the various basic-level units and the various mass organizations can work together, collaborate with each other, and, at the crucial point of the census taking, take it as their central task and organize its progress. This is entirely different from the method of placing sole reliance on the specialized census personnel to handle the work singlehandedly. Another basic experience was the adoption of the extensive mass line. This meant that on the basis of the unanimity of the basic interests of census taking and of the masses, and through extensive propaganda and education work, the active support and cooperation of the masses were obtained and tens of millions of activists were mobilized to help the census personnel to complete their registration and rechecking work. It may be said that the party's leadership and the mass line constitute the most important conditions for ensuring the good quality of our country's census data. The third important experience was the "level-by-level" trial points. First, the whole country was taken as a trial point, then the provinces, districts and counties were successively made the trial points. By means of the trial points, the census methodology could be examined, experiences from actual practices could be gathered and a large number of cadres be put into training to prepare good conditions for the general survey to start in an all-round manner.

The fourth experience was to effect, in a relatively short period of time, the organization and training of a census-taking contingent. This had to depend on the firm leadership of the party committees at various levels and the government, and also on support from the various departments, to make it possible to speedily mobilize (according to regulations) from among the government organs, civil bodies, enterprises, communes and production brigades, a large contingent of personnel to swiftly enter into the battle. This would be subject to these personnel having gone through the necessary training and passed the requisite tests. The size of the contingent taking part in the census will be over 4 million workers, 1 million census overseers (working for over half a month), about 100,000 registration workers (working for 2 months) and some 4,000 people employed in the computer system (working for 1 and 1/2 years). Such large-scale organizing and training work has seldom been seen in the world. The fifth experience was that the advantageous basis offered by the household control system (household adjustment work preceded actual census taking) and the general population statistics was utilized without being subjected to the limitations of household registration. The third census provides certain special regulations concerning household registration in order to ensure that people whose names are not seen in the household registration book are entitled, just the same, to register for the general survey.

All these Chinese experiences vividly reflect the superior characteristics of the socialist system of our country. They also reflect our party's traditionally superior style of work and demonstrate the special features of the census-taking work in our country.

The third census also absorbs the beneficial experiences of foreign countries. For example, it has formulated relatively strict working rules based on our country's actual conditions and made use of the theory of "systematic engineering" and the methodology of the science of overall planning. The entire survey is divided into 3 stages, 24 jobs and 91 items. Charts have been drawn, including a "progress chart of census taking," "chart showing the overall plan for the census," and "flow diagram of the principal segments of the census-taking work." The purpose of these charts is to familiarize the staff with the general work procedure so that the work could proceed smoothly and in an orderly manner. Furthermore, this time, aside from the main summary tables (those on population totals, total number of males and females, nationalities, and cultural level) being manually prepared, all the other data is computerized. In addition, special attention has been given to the special features and requirements for computer processing, starting from initial planning and designing of the census registration forms and tables up to work organization and training and arrangement of the personnel. In foreign countries, when computers are used to process census data, central computing is generally resorted to. In our country, due to the large population and the vast expanse of the territories, the decentralized computing method has been adopted. This is to say, the data is first processed in the computer stations of the provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions, following which totals on a national scale are made. For this reason, using the computers which we have purchased and those supplied by the United Nations, we have set up 28 provincial, municipal and autonomous regional computer stations (Xizang has deferred establishing one). Another example is that, in the census work, not only is a quality survey carried out upon the completion of a job but also quality control is effected at each and every stage and the responsibility system is applied to each and every grade. In this way the high quality of the collected data is ensured. All these come from absorbing foreign experiences though not copying them in toto. In fact, the experiences learned have to go through repeated tests and they are "remade" or "converted" or "developed" to conform to the actual conditions of the country.

At present, intense preparations are in progress on the third census. Its fruition still depends on more efforts to be made from now on. The results cannot be evaluated until the whole job has been completed. But judging from the experimental work on the general survey over the past 2 years and from the series of documentation formulated, the general outline and special points of this general survey can be seen.

Some cadres engaged in statistical work who took part in the experimentation and preparation for this general survey, saw for themselves the prospects for the modernization of China's statistical work and had their confidence strengthened. They exclaimed: "If each and every statistical survey is organized in such a precise manner as the experimental points, then the level of our entire statistical work can be elevated even higher."

Strive for the Gradual Modernization of Our Country's Statistical Work

As for the road leading to the modernization of statistics in our country, it must be explored and deliberated on by everybody. Here we venture to offer several concrete objectives:

1. Improvement of the statistical contents. We must strengthen the special statistical work of the various economic departments in accordance with the needs of socialist modernization in our country and using the accounting system for the overall balance of the national economy as the center. Additionally, we must set up and perfect a system of population and social statistics.

2. Unification of the statistical standards. We must further standardize statistical classification and the statistical system as a whole and achieve coordination between statistical accounting, cost accounting and business accounting.

3. Improvement of the statistical methods. We should take as our basis the reliance on, and motivation of, the populace. Concurrently with doing a good job of preparing the periodic and overall reports, we should turn our attention to the use of pivotal points, study of typical cases, and so on, so that more statistical data may be gathered with the minimum consumption of labor and financial power. Furthermore, in order to save labor power, we should improve the accuracy of the statistical figures and avoid the random issuance of questionnaires and investigation forms.

4. More extensive use of the electronic computer for the processing of the statistical data. We should use modern mathematical methods in doing statistical analysis and forecasting work.

5. Strengthen the rule by law in the field of statistics. We must put statistical legislation on a healthy basis and clearly specify the statistical rights and obligations of statistical organs, enterprise units and the rank and file people. Legal measures must be taken to ensure the smooth progress of statistical work and the truthfulness of the statistical figures.

6. Strengthen the statistical organs and the statistical ranks. We must set up and improve the centralized and unified statistical systems, including the statistical departments of government organs, the various specialized statistical deparments, the statistical organs of basic-level units, and the statistical personnel. Statistical scientific research must be actively pursued. There must be extensive training of statistical cadres. The political level and professional level of the statistical staff must be elevated.

The realization of statistical modernization will take a long time. We must proceed cautiously and in accordance with actual needs and feasibility. The third national census may provide us with certain important experiences, but, after all, it constitutes only one item in the broad field of statistics. Many complex problems in the whole economy and in social statistics have yet to be gradually studied and solved. Our statistical cadres must study political economy, sociology and statistics and acquire the knowhow to use the electronic computer. We must sum up our own experiences, but must also absorb the latest world contributions to the science of statistics. These constitute the necessary conditions for the elevation of the level of statistical work.

Our statistical work was seriously disrupted in the course of the "Great Cultural Revolution." After the smashing of the "gang of four" and especially since the 3rd Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, statistical work has been restored and has developed.

In the last few years, new steps have begun to be taken to enrich the statistical contents, improve the statistical system and statistical methods, strengthen and improving the statistical organs, and so on. The census taking this time is one of the important steps taken. If it is acknowledged that through this census population statistics of our country will be elevated to a new level, then it is conceivable that from now on, based on actual needs and feasibility and in combination with the current statistical annual reporting system, we shall proceed periodically with the following general surveys: on industry, construction, agriculture, commerce, and nonmaterial production. By means of such work, we can further clarify our basic national strength and elevate the statistical work on industry, construction, agriculture and the social structure to a new and higher level.

The illustrious job of conducting a census on a population of 1 billion people is a stupendous task in the history of statistics in our country. It is our firm belief that under the leadership of the party Central Committee and the State Council and through the efforts of the extensive masses of cadres and people, this mission can certainly be accomplished.

WU XIUQUAN'S ARTICLE ON LIFE OF WANG JIAXIANG

[Article by Wu Xiuquan [0124 0208 2938]: "Classmate, Comrade in Arms and Mentor -- in Memory of Comrade Wang Jiaxiang"]

[Text] Comrade Wang Jaixiang and I were schoolmates in my younger days. Later on in life, we worked together for a long time and fought side by side. When he was persecuted during the 10 years of internal disorder, we were also together. I shared a revolutionary friendship with him for nearly half a century. His life of glorious achievements and his lofty moral character could not but arouse in me a sincere respect and fond memories.

In 1925 a group of young Chinese revolutionaries traveled from Shanghai to Vladivostok by ship and then took the train to the Sun Yatsen University in Moscow. I had the good fortune to be on the same ship and train with Comrade Jiaxiang and was with him during this long journey. I was 17 and 1/2 at that time and had just reached the second year of junior middle school. Comrade Jiaxiang was only about 20, but he was already quite well educated and also had a better foundation in English. Therefore, after arriving at the Sun Yat-sen University, he was placed in an English class and received his lessons in a foreign language. In spite of this, he was still very diligent in his studies. He was exceptionally quiet and loved to read. At that time, the condition of our hostel was not very good. Many small tables were placed in the corridor for all of us to use for private study. After returning to the hostel at night, Comrade Jiaxiang would spend at least 2 extra hours studying at his table, which happened to be just outside my bedroom. Almost every night I could see him bending over that small table seriously reading theoretical works in English or Russian. His assiduous study and persevering spirit greatly inspired me and influenced my thinking. As a result of his diligent and unremitting efforts, Comrade Jiaxiang made outstanding achievements in his scholastic record, and in the second term, he became the official English and Russian translator of our class and helped us a great deal in our studies.

We studied strenuously at the Sun Yat-sen University from November 1925 to August 1927. At that time, we received news from China of the successive betrayal of the revolution by Chiang Kai-shek and Wang Ching-wei and the failure of the great Chinese revolution. In light of this condition, apart from some of the comrades among our Chinese students who returned to China to participate in the struggle, the rest of the comrades stayed in Moscow. In accordance with the instruction of our party Central Committee, some of the comrades and I who had not sat for the exam entered the Moscow infantry school to study military affairs. Several of the comrades including Jiaxiang, Zhang Wentian and Shen Tsemin, after passing a stiff entrance exam, entered the Red Professors' School, the highest Soviet institution of learning for the training of Marxist theoretical cadres, to study advanced theory. At that time, we separated and left for our respective study stations.

Later, we again went our own ways to carry out the different tasks assigned us by the party. While at the Sun Yat-sen University the impression Comrade Jianxiang left on me was not only that of a diligent student but also that of a scholar with a firm and stable demeanor.

In June 1931 I returned to China from the Soviet Union and made contact with the party Central Committee in Shanghai. At that time, Comrades Jiaxiang and Zhang Wentian had already returned to the country, but I was not able to meet them. I only read many articles under the byline of "Jiase" and "Jiaqiang" in party journals and documents. In SHIHUA BAO [1395 6114 1032], Jiaxiang published several articles of a theoretical nature which most profoundly criticized such erroneous tendencies as the Li Lisan line. That summer I was wounded in a battle not long after entering the Fujian-Guangdong-Jiangxi soviet area and was sent to the hospital of Comrade Fu Liangzhang in Tingzhou for treatment. After I had fully recovered from my wounds, I was ordered to accompany some personnel of the General Political Department of the Military Commission from Tingzhou to Ruijin. The leader of the group happened to be Comrade Jiaxiang. He was at that time already the director of the General Political Department and obviously even more mature than before.

After my arrival in Ruijin, I was assigned to work in the newly built Red Army School. Although I had no direct connection with the work of Comrade Jiaxiang, we still met frequently. In October 1939 Lide [2621 1795], military adviser of the Communist International, came to Ruijin and I was assigned to be his interpreter and had more contact with Comrade Jiaxiang. At that time, the fifth antiencirclement and suppression campaign of the soviet area was staged. Comrade Jiaxiang was also the vice chairman of the Military Commission and had to attend various important military meetings. Comrade Jiaxiang was entrusted by the Military Commission to draft documents for the major operations of the Central Red Army, the political mobilization carried out before battle and all similar political mobilizations.

Comrade Jiaxiang was very responsible as well as circumspect and farsighted by nature, and he always tried to his utmost to fulfill the tasks assigned to him by the party. However, he gradually adopted a different view on the erroneous leadership of the Central Committee at that time and particularly the erroneous command of Lide. He often adopted a reserved attitude toward their actions and advocations and also began to purposely keep Lide at arm's length. At some important meetings of the Central Committee or the Military Commission, Comrade Jiaxiang had on several occasions put forward views distinctly opposed to those of Bogu [0590 0657] and Lide, supported the correct advocations of such comrades as Mao Zedong and also did everything within his power to protect some of the comrades attacked by the erroneous line. For example, Comrade Xiao Jingguang was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment on the instructions of Bogu and Lide, and the verdict had to be signed by Comrade Jiaxiang before it became effective. Comrade Jiaxiang refused to sign because he did not agree with the decision, and, at the intervention of such comrades as Mao Zedong, this erroneous sentence as in the end not carried out.

Comrade Jiaxiang had made important contributions. His activities during the Long March, and particularly before and after the Junyi conference, had a bearing on the destiny of our party and our army.

When the Long March began, because Comrade Jiaxiang was sick and wounded, he had to travel on a litter. At that time, Comrade Mao Zedong also had to travel on a litter because of illness and they were often together. When they stopped at night to rest, they often talked together and discussed many problems concerning the future of the party and the army. Comrade Jiaxiang frankly expressed to Comrade Mao Zedong his own anxiety about the situation. He held that this situation could not continue and they should "boot" such people as Lide from power. Comrade Mao Zedong greatly admired his view, and in the light of the actual situation, discussed the principle of integrating the universal truth of Marxism-Leninism with the practice of the Chinese revolution. This greatly enlightened Comrade Jiaxiang and also strengthened his resolution to support Comrade Mao Zedong. At that time, they also discussed calling a meeting of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee to solve the serious problems they faced. After their discussion, Jiaxiang first looked up Comrade Zhang Wentian and told him about Comrade Mao Zedong's advocation and his own view.

He held that they should remove Bogu and Lide and replace them with Comrade Mao Zedong. Comrade Jiaxiang also made use of various opportunities to exchange views with other responsible comrades and obtained their support. Comrade Nie Rongzhen, who was also traveling on a litter because of his leg wound, after hearing the view of Comrade Jiaxiang, also agreed with his view. Such comrades as Zhou Enlai and Zhu De also supported Comrade Jiaxiang's view without the slightest hesitation. Because this was the general trend and popular feeling and because of the amount of work carried out by Comrade Mao Zedong and Comrade Wang Jiaxiang, the Zunyi conference was promptly held.

At the Zunyi conference, after the speech made by Comrade Mao Zedong, Comrade Wang Jiaxiang immediately made a speech. He supported Comrade Mao Zedong's view with a clear-cut stand, severely criticized the military mistakes of Lide and Bogu and supported assigning the command of the Red Army to Comrade Mao Zedong. The meeting reorganized the leadership of the party and the army and Comrade Jiaxiang became a member of the new three-member Military Command Group. While in this group, he helped Comrade Mao Zedong and Comrade Zhou Enlai in commanding the military actions of the whole army, which enabled the Red Army to pull through the crisis and achieve victory in the Long March. Later, Comrade Mao Zedong time and again said that Comrade Wang Jiaxiang's vote of confidence at the Zunyi conference was a "vote of crucial importance" which had brought merits to him.

After the Long March, Comrade Jiaxiang was sent to the Soviet Union to report on the work to the Third International and to cure his disease and wounds. He worked in Moscow for some time as our party's representative to the Third International. He discussed the situation in China with Georgi M. Dimitrov and other leaders of the Third International and vigorously upheld the policy of the Chinese Communist Party led by Comrade Mao Zedong on forming an anti-Japanese national united front with the Chinese Kuomintang. Comrade Wang Jiaxiang once said that the CCP at that time would not repeat the right opportunist mistakes that Chen Duxiu committed during the period of the first CCP-Kuomintang cooperation because Comrade Mao Zedong persisted in maintaining the independence of the CCP. In 1938 Comrade Jiaxiang returned from the Soviet Union and relayed the important and correct directives of the Third International to the CCP Central Committee. At the same time we resolutely fought against Wang Ming's mistakes.

In 1941, I returned to Yanan from Lanzhou and met Comrade Jiaxiang again. It was because of the joint recommendation by Comrade Ye Jianying and him that I was appointed director of the First Bureau (the military operation bureau) of the General Office of the Military Commission. At that time Comrade Jiaxiang was in charge of the routine work of the CCP Central Committee Military Commission, so I began to work with him again. At that time, he drafted the work plan of the Military Commission. Later the CCP Central Committee assigned him to be chiefly in charge of the work of editing the documents related to the two-line struggle that had been published since the "Sixth CCP National Congress." In the years of hard struggle on the enemy's rear flanks during the war of resistance against Japan, Comrade Jiaxiang vigorously took part in the work of preparing for the Seventh CCP National Congress. During the Yanan period, he drafted for the CCP Central Committee dozens of guiding documents, and among them were such important documents as the CCP Central Committee's "Decision on Heightening Party Spirit" and "Decision on Unifying the Leadership of the Party in the Anti-Japanese Areas and Readjusting the Relationships Between Various Organizations." Thus he made new contributions to the struggle to achieve the victory in the war of resistance against Japan.

In 1943 in order to commeorate the 22d anniversary of the founding of the CCP and the 6th anniversary of the war of resistance against Japan, Comrade Wang Jiaxiang published an article entitled "The CCP and the Path of China's National Liberation" in JIEFANG RIBAO. In this article, he clearly put forth the concept of Mao Zedong Thought. In this article, he said: "Throughout the course of China's national liberation -- whether in the past, at present or in the future -- the correct path is Comrade Mao Zedong's thinking, that is, the path that has been pointed out by Comrade Mao Zedong in his works and in practice. Mao Zedong Thought is China's Marxism-Leninism, China's Bolshevism and China's communism."

"Mao Zedong Thought and the CCP's correct path to achieve national liberation has taken shape, developed and become mature in the struggle against the enemy at home and abroad and at that same time in the struggle against the erronesous ideas within the CCP.... Mao Zedong Thought has developed from Marxism-Leninism and it is China's communism and China's Bolshevism."

What makes us admire him even more today is that in his exposition on the role of Mao Zedong Thought in our party and in the revolution of China, he did not treat Mao Zedong Thought as being static. He pointed out: "Furthermore, this theory is being continuously developed."

In the same year, the Central Propaganda Committee was set up and Comrade Mao Zedong and Comrade Wang Jiaxiang were appointed secretary and deputy secretary, respectively, of the committee. Directly under Wang's leadership, Comrade Deng Tuo took charge of the work of editing and publishing the earliest versions of "Selected Works of Mao Zedong" in our country. This made significant contributions to sorting out and propagating comrade Mao Zedong's works.

When the war of resistance against Japan ended in the autumn of 1945, I was sent to northeastern China and assigned a post in Northeast China Bureau. Soon, Comrade Jiaxiang was also sent to northeastern China and was appointed director of the Urban work department of the Northeast China Bureau. At that time, our party occupied only a few cities in northeastern China that were larger than medium-sized cities. We lacked experience in running cities. However, through making investigations and study, Comrade Jiaxiang put forth a series of correct policies on how to deal with businessmen and industrialists in urban areas, which were approved by the CCP Central Committee. As a result, we had to a great extent put an end to the erroneous practice of copying the methods we had adopted in carrying out land reform in the rural areas. We also facilitated the development of industry and commerce in liberated urban areas and gained experience in preventing and reducing confusion in our urban work. These policies played a substantial role in guiding the work in other liberated areas and in our later urban work.

When new China was founded in 1949, Comrade Jiaxiang acted as vice minister of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the PRC, helping Premier Zhou Enlai, who was concurrently minister of foreign affairs, to take care of our foreign affairs. When new China established diplomatic relations with more than 20 countries, including the Soviet Union and several East European countries, Chairman Mao personally recommended Comrade Jiaxiang to be our first ambassador to the Soviet Union. I also subsequently joined the Ministry of Foreign Affairs as director of the Soviet Union and East European Affairs Department, and thus again worked with Comrade Jiaxiang. He went to Moscow in November the same year to assume his post. Not long afterward, Chairman Mao and Premier Zhou successively visited the Soviet Union. As ambassador to the Soviet Union, Comrade Jiaxiang did a large amount of work concerning talks between the leaders of China and the Soviet Union and between the two governments, helping with the successful conclusion of the Sino-Soviet treaty of friendship, alliance and mutual aid. During this period, I also accompanied Premier Zhou to Moscow. On the one hand, I helped Premier Zhou handle concrete matters in preparation for the talks. On the other hand, I often went to the embassy to discharge certain tasks that Comrade Jiaxiang had entrusted to me. In my contacts with Comrade Jiaxiang during this period, I again observed his fine work style. Comrade Jiaxiang had undoubtedly devoted a great amount of effort to everything from the wording of the draft of the Sino-Soviet treaty to the organization of celebration parties. Comrade Jiaxiang made a great contribution toward the establishment and development of our friendly relations with foreign countries. He had an outstanding work record.

In 1952 Comrade Jiaxiang returned to the country from the Soviet Union. Chairman Mao personally appointed him director of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee and concurrently first vice minister of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. At this time, I was also vice minister of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. I was in close touch with him as we worked side by side. In May 1955 I was our country's first ambassador to Yugoslavia. I maintained constant contact with Comrade Jiaxiang in my work. In September 1956 I returned to the country to join him in attending the Eighth CCP National Congress. Along with him, I was elected to the CCP Central Committee.

In the autumn of 1956, Comrade Jiaxiang and Premier Shou went together to Hungary and Poland to participate in talks on the Hungarian incident and the Polish incident.

At the Wuchang conference of the CCP Central Committee in 1958, Comrade Jiaxiang submitted to the party Central Committee the correct view of not favoring the tendency to effect the transition to communism prematurely in the countryside. He displayed the fine quality of one who dares to put forth to the party his own different views.

In May 1958, I was recalled to the country because my thinking on Yugoslavia did not accord with the then prevailing view at home. I was subjected to criticism at a party meeting. Just when something weighed on my mind ideologically, Comrade Jiaxiang energetically recommended me to work with the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee. In October 1958, I was deputy director of the International Liaison Department led by Comrade Jiaxiang.

From 1958 to the beginning of the "Great Cultural Revolution" in 1966, I worked for 8 years in the International Liaison Department. It was the longest period of time I worked directly with Comrade Jiaxiang. During this period, we worked in a very orderly manner. Relations between comrades were very cordial. Comrade Jiaxiang also joined me in attending the congresses of several brotherly parties.

In taking charge of the work of the International Liaison Department, Comrade Jiaxiang was always on guard against Kang Sheng. He once said that Kang Sheng should not be allowed to get involved in the party's international liaison work. At first, some of our comrades did not quite understand this. Subsequent facts proved him right. He was sharp-sighted and full of fight. For this very reason, he aroused the hatred of Kang Sheng and company and was victimized. It was Kang Sheng that concocted many shocking accusations against Comrade Jiaxiang, one of them being "sanhe yishao" (the liquidation of struggle in the country's relations with imperialism, the reactionaries and modern revisionism and reduction of assistance and support to the revolutionary struggle of other peoples). Pressure was brought to bear on Comrade Jiaxiang to make him plead guilty. Comrade Jiaxiang made strict demands on himself. He first made a self-review and then told Chairman Mao that he was willing to make a self-criticism at the plenary session of the CCP Central Committee. Chairman Mao told him there was no need to make a self-review at the plenary session of the CCP Central Committee. All he needed to do was to strengthen his own awareness. Only after the downfall of the "gang of four" was a new conclusion reached on this historical case. And only then was the verdict on Comrade Jiaxiang reversed and the true story restored to history.

At the early stage of the "Great Cultural Revolution," Kang Sheng became directly involved in the movement of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee, maliciously instigating "concentration on criticizing 'sanhe yishao'" and purposely shifting the blame onto Comrade Jiaxiang. The leading comrades of the CCP Central Committee discovered this problem. When I attended the 11th Plenary Session of the 8th CCP Central Committee, Chairman Mao told me through Premier Zhao that Comrade Jiaxiang had rendered meritorious services in the history of the party and that I should speak for him, as I had a clear understanding of the matter. The next day, at a meeting of cadres at and above the 17th grade in the department, I conveyed this spirit in my private role. But Kang Sheng and his king continued to ruthlessly persecute Comrade Jiaxiang. The also granded me as "Wang Jiaxiang's black general," made various shocking charges against me, and confined me to "a cowshed" for 8 years. During the period when I was in confinement, Comrade Jiaxiang himself was also in an extermely difficult plight. But he comforted my children on many occasions and gave them economic help.

Chairman Mao's assessment of Comrade Jiaxiang had always been positive. He once said: Jiaxiang voted in support of my many policy decisions on operations during the civil war. He played an important role in the Zunyi conference. He was the first to support me in regard to dogmatism and factionism.

Therefore, during the seventh national party congress, Chairman Mao keenly recommended Comrade Jiaxiang to join the CCP Central Committee. After the founding of the PRC, chairman Mao also recommended Comrade Jiaxiang to be the first ambassador to the Soviet Union and to assume such important posts as secretary of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee, and so forth, and supported his work in various important posts. Up to the 10th national party congress, Chairman Mao still tried to eliminate interference from the "gang of four," continuously recommending Comrade Jiaxiang as a member of the CCP Central Committee.

Comrade Jiaxiang originally could have done more work for the party. But given serious injuries suffered in the war, an excessive workload, and a long period of indisposition, coupled with ruthless persecution and terrible suffering at the hands of Lin Biao, the "gang of four" and Kang Sheng and company, he was in the grip of a deep mental depression and at last left us prematurely. Comrade Jiaxiang died in January 1974 at the age of 68. As I was then still in confinement, I could not attend the memorial service held for Comrade Jiaxiang. I have regretted this throughout my life. As I now recall the past, I can picture Comrade Jiaxiang as my schoolmate in my youth and later as my fellow fighter for many years and especially as my teacher. I wish his spirit and his character will always live in memory.

ARTICLE ON CASE OF FRAUD BY CADRES' CHILDREN

[Feature article by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Zhang Pingli [1728 1627 0500]: "Why Were They Able To Do This? -- Analysis of Economic Fraud Perpetrated by Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng"]

[Text] SUMMARY: THERE ARE THE FOLLOWING THREE REASONS WHY THE TWO CRIMINALS ZHONG JIALUN AND REN QINGSHENG WERE ABLE TO SWINDLE MILLIONS OF YUAN OF STATE FUNDS AND PROPERTY: FIRST, THEY WERE "CHILDREN OF SENIOR OFFICIALS:" SECOND, BY MEANS OF GIVING DINNERS AND PRESENTS AND BRIBES, THEY CORRUPTED A NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO WERE MUDDLED BY GREED FOR MONETARY GAIN; AND THIRD, THEY TOOK ADVANTAGE OF THE BUREAUCRATIC PRACTICES OF SOME LEADING CADRES AND THE LOOPHOLES CAUSED BY THE WEAK POINTS IN SOME OF OUR REGULATIONS AND SYSTEMS AND THE CONFUSION IN OUR FINANCIAL MANAGEMENT. [end of summary -- published in boldface]

Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng who once gained considerable fame in Beijing and their so-called "Beihuang Enterprise Service Company (called "Beihuang" for short) have been exposed and their true colors as economic criminals have been disclosed. Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng have already been arrested for swindling nearly 3 million yuan of state funds. (See the first page of our 17 April issue.) Naturally, some people will ask: Why were Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng able to swindle such a huge sum of state funds?

I

In June 1980, Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng were dismissed by Dongfeng farm in Beijing for their speculative activities. At that time they had neither funds nor material supplies to do business. Moreover, they were up to their ears in debt. However, they still wanted to conduct speculative activities and gain unlawful profits. They went for help to the deputy director of a neighborhood associated cooperative at Zuojiaghuang subdistrict, Chaoyang district, Beijing. As soon as this deputy director heard that Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng were "children of senior officials," she thought that they were "very reliable," and that "they would not do anything suspicious politically or economically." She ordered the relevant units under her management to receive these two swindlers, provided the two with the current bank account and chop of the Zuojiazhuang production associated cooperatives and told the two to use the account and the chop at will. One comrade told this deputy director that Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng had committed illegal offenses before, and later Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng had gradually betrayed themselves through their economic criminal activities, but all this failed to make this deputy director a little sober-minded.

When Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng conducted their first transaction -- swindling 220,000 yuan out of the Ministry of Chemical Industry, they also took advantage of people's blind faith in them because of their backgrounds as children of senior officials. In order to swindle money, they told the lie to the people in the material supply bureau of the Ministry of Chemical Industry that they would be able to supply 10,000 cubic meters of timber within the period of a little more than 1 year. This was a lie that any man of good sense could easily see through, since graded timber is a kind of material over which there is a state monopoly. How was Zhong Jialun, a man without any official rank, able to supply such a large amount of graded timber? Because in an interview he and Ren Qingsheng had casually disclosed their family backgrounds, a staff member in the material supply bureau of the Ministry of Chemical Industry regarded them as being "extremely resourceful" and "reliable." He spared no efforts to obtain loans for them. When facts proved that Zhond and Ren were not able to fulfill the contract and that they had done something completely fraudulent, the staff member still thought that "they were people we could rely upon and that they would not cheat us." It was precisely through this family background that Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng made many people act as go-betweens for them. Thus they were able to go where other people were not allowed to go and to have contacts and connections with the people and departments that other people were not able to have.... These successes muddled their minds and made them act wantonly till they were finally caught by the net of the law.

The "umbrella" of privilege has become a lever for the economic criminals today. The exposition of Zhong Jialun's and Ren Qingsheng's case of fraud and speculation must once more arouse people's vigilance.

II

When Beihuang had just been established, Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng set up a special account called "special expenditures" to be used for giving dinners, presents and bribes. When they sent people to northeastern China to illegally buy up timber, they allowed these people to spend more than 1,500 yuan in giving presents to high- and low-ranking officials in a period of less than 2 months. When they brought an automobile from the Hainan materials supply bureau, they bribed the person who handled this transaction with more than 1,700 yuan. During the period from 1980 to 1981, Zhong and Ren disbursed 7,820 yuan in "travel expenses" to the staff, workers and cadres of the state who helped them to build up connections. Those they bribed included cadres, staff and workers of the state, and CCP and CYL members. In these people, Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng found weak points where they could make a breakthrough with money.

These people formed a "connection net" around Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng. Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng saw that these people were greedy for money and had blind faith in foreign things. They lent these people some high-class consumer goods, such as motorcycles and tape recorders, and sometimes they even bribed these people with cash. As a result, some of these people acted as go-betweens to help Zhong and Ren commit fraud. Others bought up for them the materials and goods over which there was a state monopoly, and still others gave advice or stirred up public opinion in their favor. When Zhong and Ren's criminal activities began to be brought to light, some of these people even divulged to Zhong and Ren the "inside information" that they got by means of their power of office and told Zhong and Ren to be "on their guard beforehand." From the nearly 3 million yuan of state funds that Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng swindled, Zhong and Ren used 210,000 yuan to lure and bribe these people who keenly sought monetary gain. By so doing they enlarged the scope of their fraudulent and speculative activities.

The unhealthy practices in the operation of some units and departments also provided Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng with an opening. Last July, Zhong and Ren heard that a unit could change its money into foreign exchange by applying to a certain ministry. They went to the deputy director of the head office of the Beijing production cooperative and urged him to use foreign exchange to import and sell motorcycles at tremendous profits.

They instigated the deputy director to apply for foreign exchange quota to the ministry in the name of the head office of the production cooperative. This deputy director originally planned to purchase some means of production to develop commercial and service undertakings in the city. After he heard Zhong's, Ren's and others' "suggestions," he thought this was a way to make money. He gave up his original plan and quickly signed an application form for foreign exchange quota. As he was so keen to make money, he managed to get a sum of foreign exchange from another source and transferred the huge quota of foreign exchange he got from the ministry to "Beihuang." This quota became Zhong's and Ren's capital for carrying out fraudulent and speculative activities.

In some places, we cannot say there are no regulations. However, those who are responsible for enforcing the regulations were corrupted by bribes, and the regulations, therefore, did not work. This was a common occurrence in Zhong's and Ren's case of fraud and speculation. For example, in the above-mentioned incident, there was a clear and definite provision in the relevant regulations of the state that only if there is a proper aim for using the foreign exchange and only when the application is initiated by the units at the subdepartment or bureau level, is anyone allowed to apply for foreign exchange quota. However, lured by Zhong and Ren, the deputy director of the head office of the Beijing municipal production cooperative fabricated the excuse that "in order to provide employment for the job-awaiting youths and in order to develop teritiary industry they need foreign exchange quota in the name of the head office of the municipal production cooperative. Though the relevant regulations of the state definitely provide that the party who applies for foreign exchange is not allowed to transfer foreign exchange to a third party on whatever grounds, that deputy director transferred the huge quota of foreign exchange to Zhong and Ren just the same. What was more, in order to achieve certain gains, some units even disregarded the relevant financial management regulations of the state and colluded with Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng by signing false contracts with them to cheat the bank. Thus they handed over hundreds of thousands of yuan of state funds to Zhong Jialun and Ren Qingsheng.

III

During the past few years, there have always been people who exposed Zhong and Ren's criminal activities to the relevant departments and there have also been quite a few comrades who have stepped forward to resolutely defend the solemnity of the law. Since June 1980, Zhong Jialun and his ilk have changed the name of their enterprise four times and applied to register their business six times under the banner of "enlivening the economy and providing employment to job-awaiting youths." However, the industry and commerce administration bureau at Chaoyang district has always persisted in refusing to issue them a business permit. When Zhong and Ren conducted illegal transactions and gained a windfall profit, the financial and tax bureau at Chaoyang district levied a heavy tax on them according to the relevant law of the state. This bureau has also time and again curbed their illegal activities. When those who are in charge of "Beihuang" management treated the property of the enterprise as their private property and squandered and wasted the enterprise's funds in an increasingly serious manner, the Chaoyang district government organized relevant departments to overhaul the finances, reorganize the enterprise and strive to bring "Beihuang" back onto a correct path. All these measures have, to a certain degree, checked Zhong's and Ren's criminal economic activities, but they have failed to achieve the aim of completely putting an end to these criminal activities. Why? Let us have a look at the following facts:

-- In October 1980, the CCP committee of the Dongfeng farm in Beijing handed in a report to the upper level to expose Zhong Jialun's and Ren Qingsheng's illegal activities and requested the relevant department at a higher level to investigate their case. However, this report disappeared until 1 year later when it was found in the locked drawer of a cadre in a certain unit.

-- In July 1981, in the "Internal Reference Publication" of a certain newspaper, a report was published on the "investigation" of Zhong's and Ren's enterprise solely on the basis of some one-sided story about the enterprise. This report said that Zhong's and Ren's illegal economic activities were a "beneficial exploration."

If we make a more careful study, we will find more things of a similar nature. Some people did not inquire into how things truly stood but sat in their offices and wrote comments and endorsed documents. Some comrades took no heed of what has happening in the departments they were responsible for. When an evil activity was exposed, they did not even know where it originated. All this shows that the bureaucratic work style facilitated criminal economic activities.

Closely related with bureaucracy are the weak points in some of our regulations and the confusion in our financial management. This also facilitated criminal economic activities. In some units and departments, there was no one to check or supervise the authorization of financial activities. As a result disposal of funds was often decided by a single individual. When the material supply bureau of the Ministry of Chemical Industry paid Zhong and Ren 220,000 yuan in advance, it was completely decided on and done by one person. This person made a "timber transference note" when the timber goods had not yet been delivered and drew money for the payment of the timber. What he had done was unknown to anybody else in his office. Last December, Zhong Kialun and Ren Qingsheng became acquainted with an official in the Beijing Electronics Equipment Import Branch Corporation through the introduction of a Hong Kong businessman. This official decided on his own to sell 250 TV sets that were worth 105,000 yuan to Zhong and Ren and allowed them to pay by check. As a result, this corporation could not get payment for these TV sets. Evidence we have already inquired into shows that more than 80 percent of the huge sum that Zhong Kialun and Ren Qingsheng swindled was gained through private relationships. When sums of tens or hundreds of thousands of yuan were "privately" transferred to Zhong and Ren, the relevant departments seldom checked or stopped these transfers. After Zhong's and Ren's activities were exposed, one of the defrauded comrades said: "The criminals have taken advantage of the weak points of our regulations and system. It is time for us to make great efforts to overhaul our financial management system." It is not too late to mend the fence after some of the sheep have been lost. In my opinion, it is necessary for many departments and units to do this work in order to adapt our financial management system to the need in enlivening the economy, the need for building up the four modernizations and the need for preventing criminal economic activities.

OFFICIALS NOTE PEASANTS' PURCHASING POWER

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The rising purchasing power of China's peasants and the wide range of goods they want to buy caught officials of the industrial and commercial departments unawares, according to the Ministry of Light Industry.

In an interview with XINHUA, ministry officials based this statement on results of a seven-day national fair held in Changsha city, central China, in April, at which 1,000 million yuan worth of transactions were concluded. The transactions were made between enterprises under the Ministry of Light Industry and the supply and marketing cooperatives responsible for distributing commodities in the rural areas. Consumer items in heavy demand ranged from ready-made clothing and leather shoes to bicycles, sewing machines and other industrial durables.

"We have to take a fresh look at the rural market which is so vast and diversified," one ministry official said.

One hundred million yuan worth of ready-made clothing and shoes were purchased at the fair, including polyester-cotton shirts, Western style garments for women, down garments and cotton padded overcoats for winter wear and leather shoes, particularly those made of pigskin.

Representatives of the rural supply and marketing cooperatives said that the peasants have started to abandon the tradition of wearing home and hand-made clothing and shoes, now preferring ready-made clothes and shoes which they feel are better in appearance.

Based on the rural buying trend, rural supply and marketing cooperatives wanted to place orders for 7.25 million bicycles and 5.2 million sewing machines, but the industrial departments at the fair could supply less than 5 percent of the demand.

There was also a big demand for wrist watches of well-known brands and those selling for under 50 yuan each. A total of 507,000 watches were sold, and all those priced under 50 yuan available at the fair were sold out.

Washing machines and electric fans also found their way into the rural market. More than 50,000 washing machines and about the same number of electric fans were transacted at the fair, yet the needs of the cooperatives were not satisfied. According to the ministry officials, most of these products were sold to high income rural areas where cash crops are grown or where the grain yields are high.

Small items such as pans, cauldrons, bowls, chopsticks, straw and palm fiber products sold well. About 125,000 plastic casings and basketry made by Suzhou factories, valued at more than 200,000 yuan, were sold at the fair.

While there is a big demand for children's clothing, shoes and hats, the demand for toys is relatively low in the rural areas. Altogether, orders for 1.26 million toys were signed, most of which were for simple ones selling for under two yuan each.

Officials say that supply and marketing cooperatives, the grassroots sales organizations in the rural areas, have to go through too many procedures before they can place orders with state commercial departments. They suggest that rural commercial services be improved to cater to the growing demand.

SCIENTIFIC JOURNAL -- Beijing, 11 Jun (XINHUA) -- The China Institute of Scientific and Technical Information has published 26 journals indexing the nation's scientific achievements and papers since 1978. China reports more than 50,000 scientific achievements each year, including several thousand major breakthroughs. Since there were no comprehensive journals on domestic scientific achievements before, it was difficult for researchers to check and fully utilize the data of these achievements, which were carried initially in various magazines. Now, the institute has published THE BULLETIN OF CHINESE SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL ACHIEVEMENTS, THE BULLETIN OF PAPERS OF DOMESTIC ACADEMIC CONFERENCES, THE BULLETIN OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL BOOKS AND MAGAZINES PUBLISHED IN TAIWAN, THE COLLECTION OF CHINESE MEDICAL SCIENCE, THE AGRICULTURE DIGEST and 21 other scientific journals. NINGXIA RIBAO ON MINORITY NATIONALITY AUTONOMY

[Article by Ma Qingnian [7456 7230 1628]: "The Draft of the Revised PRC Constitution Has Expanded the Autonomy of Minority Nationality Regions"]

[Text] The draft of the revised constitution of the PRC has helped strengthen the autonomy and expand the autonomy powers of minority nationality regions. Within this constitution there is a legal guarantee for stepping up the development of both the economy and culture of the minority nationality regions in our country, and it has made the people of minority nationalities in various parts of our country full of confidence and strength.

Ours is a country with unified minority nationalities. In addition to the Han nationality, there are more than 50 minority nationalities in the vast areas of our country. It is the consistent policy of our party to practice autonomy in the regions where a minority nationality community exists. This policy is the basic principle for the party and state in solving minority nationality problems, and it also represents the common desire and interest of the people of various minority nationalities under the specific conditions of our country. The history over the past three decades and more proved that as long as we are able to resolutely implement this major principle and conscientiously implement this system, we will be able to fully mobilize the initiative of the people of various nationalities, give consideration to nationality features and regional features of minority nationality regions and further the rights and equality by which the people of minority nationalities become the masters of their own fate and manage their own local affairs so as to further consolidate and develop the unity of various nationalities and the unification of the country.

The draft of the revised constitution has strengthened the autonomy and expanded the autonomy powers of the minority nationality regions. In the 1954 Constitution there are six clauses about the autonomy of minority nationality regions but there is only one clause in the 1975 Constitution and three clauses in the 1978 Constitution. In the draft of the revised constitution now proclaimed there are 11 clauses. Not only have the clauses increased, but the contents have also been enriched. First of all, the draft of the revised constitution restored the autonomy powers of the minority nationality regions which were defined in the 1954 Constitution. That is to say, according to law, this draft defined the autonomy of the minority nationality regions to manage local finance and the autonomy to work out general regulations and specific regulations according to the political, economic and cultural features of each minority nationality and to form public security forces to protect social order according to the state military system and local needs and with approval from the State Council. On this basis, the draft of the revised constitution expanded the autonomy powers of the minority nationality regions by defining that the posts of chairmen of autonomous regions, heads of autonomous zones and heads of autonomous prefectures must be held by the minority nationality of the related regions, zones and prefectures. It also defined that the autonomous regions of various minority nationalities have the right to implement state laws and policies according to their own specific conditions; that under the guidance of state planning, the autonomous regions have the right to manage local economic construction and that such organs have the right to manage local education, science, culture, health and sports, to protect and compile nationality cultural heritage and develop excellent nationality culture. The draft has also defined in detail such matters as training cadres, specialized talent and technicians from among minority nationality people and helping minority nationality regions to step up their economic and cultural construction.

The strengthening and expansion of the autonomy of minority nationality regions serves to show that the party and state fully trust and respect the people of various minority nationalities. It also fully shows that the party and state have paid very much attention to and are very much concerned with the economic and cultural construction in minority nationality regions to fully accord with the common desire and interest of the people of minority nationality. This situation shows that the system of minority nationality regional autonomy has been perfected and developed. All these measures are of far-reaching significance to mobilizing the people of various nationalities to work together for the realization of the modernization program and promoting their great unity on the basis of socialism. Marx said: "In order to make the people of various nationalities truly unite it is imperative for them to have a common interest." The strengthening and expansion of the autonomy powers of minority nationality regions that are defined in the draft of the revised constitution reflected and represent the common desire and interest of the people of various nationalities.

But during the 10 turbulent years, the state laws became empty words and so did the situation of the consistent party and state policy with regard to the autonomy of minority nationality regions. All the questions on nationality were considered as class struggle. People were deprived of their freedom of religion and belief and all normal religious activities were banned. Healthy customs and habits of the people of minority nationalities were trampled upon. The united front, which is one of the "three magic weapons" of the party, was belittled as a capitulationist line. As a result of all these calamities, the people of various nationalities were unprecedentedly humiliated.

In order to correctly implement the autonomy of minority nationality regions, we must clearly understand that the autonomy belongs to the great and unified family of our motherland under the premise of persisting in the four basic principles and particularly under the unified leadership of the CCP Central Committee. Autonomy does not mean to depart from the four basic principles and party's policies, nor does it mean "nationality alliance" or "nationality sovereignty." Our nationality autonomy is regional autonomy that is based on the regions where the community of minority nationality people exists; it is not purely "nationality autonomy" that departs from certain regions. In order to correctly implement the autonomy of minority nationality regions, it is imperative to do a good job in uniting the people of various nationalities, do a good job in uniting the people of various nationalities with the Han nationality and in uniting the people within the minority nationalities.

The key question in correctly implementing the autonomy of minority nationality regions is to train the ranks of the cadres from among minority nationality people in a big way and to gradually enable the number of such cadres to accord with the population of minority nationality. There cannot just be several representatives. On the one hand, it is necessary to step up training the existing cadres by providing them opportunities for theoretical study, improving their professional knowledge and furthering their education. On the other hand, what is more important is that we pay attention to training the nationality cadres that are resolved to implement the party's policies and principles, maintain close contact with the masses, be good at considering problems, carrying out study and investigations and solving problems and that have certain cultural and scientific knowledge and professional advantages. It is also imperative to guarantee these excellent young cadres who have certain organizational capability, good moral and good style of work and who are loved by the masses; in other words, it is imperative to put these excellent young cadres of minority nationality with revolutionary ideology, certain education and specialized knowledge in leading posts at various levels and they must be given the right conditions so that they will be able to carry out their responsibility well.

They must in no way "just have the keys but cannot open the doors." They must be educated so that when they are "officials" they can also work as ordinary people; as "officials," they will be able to make decisions in the interests of people and as ordinary people they will be able to share the burdens of the country. It is only in this way that we will be able to shoulder our responsibility and live up to the expectations of the party and the people, and it is only in this way that the people of minority nationalities will be able to become the masters of their own fate and exercise the autonomy powers of the minority nationality regions.

The key point in correctly exercising the autonomy powers of minority nationality regions is to spare no effort to develop economic and cultural construction in minority nationality regions. Owing to the rule by reactionary classes in history, the people of minority nationalities in our country were once in the abyss of exploitation and oppression and therefore economically and culturally backward. In addition, owing to interference and sabotage by "leftist" mistakes during the 10 turbulent years, the development of nationality economy and culture consequently slowed down. Therefore, the politics, economy and culture of minority nationality regions have their own specific features. The draft of the revised constitution gave consideration to these features and consequently it was defined in the draft that financial, materialistic and technical assistance should be given to help the people of minority nationality step up their economic and cultural construction. Since the founding of the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region in 1958 the proportion of the financial subsidy given by the state to our region is much higher than the total financial revenues of the region. Without such tremendous assistance and support it would not be possible for our autonomous region to develop construction as fast and tremendous as it is today. But we of the minority nationality regions cannot rely just on state help. We must spare no effort in relying on our own efforts, combine state help with self-reliance and do a good job in our own business so that economic construction in our region can be developed more rapidly. We must display the spirit of hard work, strive to accumulate construction funds and lessen the burden of the state. Such undertakings as education, culture, health and sports in most minority nationality regions are still very backward. The party and state have paid very much attention to these problems, but we comrades from minority nationality regions often do not pay enough attention to these problems. Therefore, from now on, we must take particular measures to promote culture and education throughout the region and particularly in southern mountain areas of the Hui community. At present it is imperative to do a good job in popularizing primary education and do a good job in secondary education.

I am confident that following nationwide discussion, and particularly following the discussion by the people of minority nationalities, the part about the autonomy of minority nationality regions in the draft of the revised constitution will be perfected. Following formal approval by the NPC, this draft will have a realistic significance and far-reaching historical importance in guaranteeing the equal rights of the people of various nationalities, promoting great unity among the people, promoting the politics, economy and culture in autonomous regions of minority nationality and promoting the happiness of the people.

QINGHAI ISSUES PROVISION ON BIRTH CONTROL

SK061116 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 4 Jun 82

[Text] According to our sources, the provincial people's government recently issued a temporary provision on birth control, effective 5 June.

In compliance with the actual situation in the province, the provision stipulates that it is demanded of all state worker and urban couples and is urged of all commune member couples to have only one child. If some people really have problems and need to have a second child, they may apply for approval from the provincial people's government to have their second child in a planned way. Minority people in pastoral areas should also carry out family planning. Each autonomous prefecture is supposed to work out its own concrete family-planning measures and submit them to the provincial people's government for approval. The provision states: Each family with an only-child certificate will be given 5 yuan as a monthly health subsidy for 14 years following the issuance of the certificate. When entering nurseries, kindergartens and schools and receiving medical care, only-children will be given priority and be exempt from payment. When arranging jobs and enrolling students, only-children will be given priority over those who have the same qualifications. When distributing houses and residential lands, families having only one child will be given first priority. Housing distribution, allocation of privately owned lands, trees and livestock, contracting farmlands under the responsibility system and reducing production quotas should be based on the limit of having two children.

The provision states that families having more than the allowed number of children are subject to economic sanctions and administrative disciplines. The concrete measures are as follows:

If a couple having an only-child certificate gives birth to a second child, their certificate will be confiscated and they will be deprived of the privileges and rewards they have enjoyed. Besides, they will have to pay fines for having more than the allowed number of children. They should pay a fine for 7 years following the month they have their second child. If the parents are both state workers, 10 percent of each parent's base pay will be retained as a fine. If one parent is a worker and the other is unemployed or a commune member, 17 percent of the worker's pay will be retained by his or her unit as a fine. If both parents are unemployed, a 300 yuan lump-sum payment is required. If both parents are commune members, 10 percent of each parent's annual income from collective distribution will be retained. If the parents work under the responsibility system of assigning production quotas to households, either one parent will lose his or her share of contracted farmland and the other be assigned higher production quotas, or they will have to pay a fine of 200 to 300 yuan.

Regardless of whether one lives in an urban or rural area, the fine stated above will be increased by 5 percent for having another child and the fine should be paid for 10 years.

The provision also states that women having more than one child will not be granted paid maternity leave and they will have to pay the expenses for prenatal examination and delivery room charges. Besides, they will not receive any bonus for 1 year following the child's birth. Difficulties in living caused by having many children will not be subsidized. Children who are not only-children will not be distributed farmland under the responsibility system and will not be given private plots. When distributing houses and residential lands, they will not be considered. If a couple working for state organs or state-owned enterprises and establishments has too many children, they will be given not only economic sanctions but also necessary disciplinary and administrative sanctions with the approval of units at and above county and regiment levels.

The provision includes some pertinent regulations urging efforts to commend and encourage units and individuals who have made outstanding achievements in family planning work. As for units refusing to implement family planning principles, policies or regulations, investigation should be conducted to find out which leader is responsible. Those who use their position to engage in malpractices for selfish ends, who spread rumors, who insult, beat and frame family planning workers and activists, who persecute and abuse women and children must be handled seriously. If they commit serious crimes, they should be strictly punished according to the law.

XINHUA CITES LETTER TO U.S. PAPER ON TAIWAN ARMS

[Text] Washington, Jun 10 (XINHUA) -- A reader's letter published by Chicago TRIBUNE today voiced objection to the sale of arms to Taiwan by the U.S. Government. It criticized the TRIBUNE that its recent "editorials about China's response to proposed U.S. arms sales to Taiwan reveal a total disregard for the principles which govern international relations".

In the letter, Valentine Kass said, "the TRIBUNE proclaims that the U.S. has the right to interfere in China's internal affairs and proposes that our government violates the agreements which are the foundation of U.S.-China relations."

"That Taiwan is a part of China and that there is only one China was a principle agreed upon a decade ago when the U.S. and China signed the Shanghai Communique. With the establishment of diplomatic relations on Jan. 1, 1979, the U.S. went even further and agreed that the United States of America recognizes the Government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China," said the letter. The U.S. also agreed to terminate its mutual defense treaty with Taiwan."

The letter said, "The arms sales to Taiwan that the Reagan administration is advocating and the TRIBUNE endorses is a blatant attempt to overturn the principles of this joint agreement by bringing the mutual defense treaty in through the back door. This is not a "minor side issue" as the TRIBUNE calls it, but a gross violation of China's sovereignty."

The letter continued, the TRIBUNE states, "never have we (the TRIBUNE) embraced the diplomatic notion advanced under the Nixon administration and confirmed by the Carter administration that Peking also represents Taiwan." This 'notion', however, is upheld not only by our own government but also by over 100 countries around the world.

"Thus, without a diplomatic leg to stand on, the TRIBUNE argues that the Chinese will just have to accept U.S. violation of joint agreements because, with the Soviet Union threatening its northern border, China needs the U.S. This bully mentality reflects an astounding ignorance of China's unwavering stand on Taiwan as well as her consistent opposition to Soviet expansionism since the 1960's regardless of the state of U.S.-China relations."

The letter concluded: "It is in the interest of all the American people, indeed of the people of the world, to see that friendly relations between the U.S. and China continue to develop."

RENMIN RIBAO ATTACKS GOLDWATER'S TAIWAN REMARKS

[Article by Xiao Xi [5135 6007]: "The Origin of The 'Unsinkable Aircraft Carrier' Theory"]

[Text] U.S. Senator Goldwater recently paid a visit to Taiwan. During this visit, apart from brazenly preaching "two Chinas," he also vigorously harped on the old tune of Taiwan being "the world's largest aircraft carrier." He said, in the tone of a strategist: Taiwan is "the most important piece of land" for the United States because "it is in the center of a ring composed of many strategically important countries" and "is the pivot linking Northeast with Southeast Asia."

Actually, there is nothing at all new about Goldwater's theory. At the beginning of the 1950's, Macarthur, then commander in chief of the "UN Forces," was the first to compare Taiwan to an "unsinkable aircraft carrier." At that time the United States had just launched its war of aggression against Korea and also occupied Taiwan -- China's territory -- by armed force. In order to defend the U.S. policy of aggression, Macarthur in a speech on 28 August 1950 exerted himself in stressing the strategic importance of Taiwan and the necessity of U.S. occupation of Taiwan. He said that since World War II, U.S. strategic boundaries had expanded to "the entire Pacific," and Taiwan was in the center of an arc from the Aleutians in the north, passing through Hawaii, Midway and Guam and stretching on to the Philippines. He stressed: Taiwan "can be compared to an unsinkable aircraft carrier," and "if it is used by a militarily powerful nation hostile to the United States, then the strategic importance of the center and the southern flank of the U.S. frontline will be offset or entirely annihilated." Hence, he clamored that the United States must not shrink from paying any price to hold onto his important "fortress" in its Pacific strategy.

A comparison between Goldwater's utterances of today and MacArthur's words at that time reveals amazing similarities. This is because they both stress: 1) Taiwan is of major strategic advantage to the United States and a major U.S. Pacific base and bridgehead, which must not be abandoned under any circumstances. 2) They both advocate that Taiwan should be detached from China. In MacArthur's words, Taiwan should not fall into the hands of a "hostile" country (that is, People's China); in Goldwater's words, China should not become a "subordinate province" of China.

Thirty years have passed since MacArthur invented the "unsinkable aircraft carrier" theory. Earth-shaking changes have taken place in the situation in the world and Asia during these 30 years, and China and the United States also have normalized their relations. MacArthur's theory has long been bankrupt. However, it is regrettable that Goldwater is still dreaming MacArthur's shattered dream of 30 years ago.

DENG YINGCHAO MEETS TAIWAN PROFESSOR MA BI

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Deng Yingchao, vice-chairman of the standing committee of the National People's Congress, met and had a conversation here today with Professor Ma Bi (Maa Bih), who returned from Taiwan to settle on the mainland last November. They had luncheon together. Liao Chengzhi and Wang Feng were present on the occasion.

TA KUNG PAO INTERVIEWS CHEN MUHUA IN GUANGZHOU

HK091408 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 9 Jun 82 pp 1, 2

[Dispatch from correspondent Chang Ka-chao in Guangzhou: "Chen Muhua Is Interviewed by TA KUNG PAO Correspondent"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 8 Jun -- During an interview with this paper's correspondent today, Chen Muhua, state councillor and minister of foreign economic relations and trade, pointed out that in the future, China will adopt the form of attracting direct foreign investment as the main channel to utilize foreign capital. She pointed out that of the more than 100 investment projects put forth during the investment promotion meeting, the majority are in the form of direct investment. All of them conform to the work focus of the country's 5-year plan.

When asked whether or not China will speed up technical transformation of the enterprises in the future by means of commercial loans, Chen Muhua said that due to the current high interest rate of commercial bank loans, our country will not make use of commercial loans for the time being. She hoped that the banks could play an active role in providing credit guarantees.

Chen Muhua also answered certain questions which people are concerned about. The questions and answers follow:

Question: What do you anticipate concerning this meeting? What important role will this meeting play in our country's course of absorbing foreign capital? Are the more than 100 projects included as a part of the 5-year plan?

Answer: This investment promotion meeting is an attempt to promote international cooperation and absorb foreign capital. We hope that by means of such a forum, our enterprises and interested investors will come into direct contact with each other. Thus, we can speed up the negotiations, and this is conducive to absorbing foreign capital.

The 100 Or More Investment Projects Conform to the Focus of the 5-Year Plan

The 100 or more investment projects put forth by this meeting are largely projects of technical transformation. Only a small number are new projects. The proposal of these projects conforms to the focus of our 5-year plan. There are mainly two work focuses of our country's new 5-year plan: First, carry out technical transformation in the several hundred thousand existing enterprises, enabling them to yield better economic results. Second, concentrate financial resources and material supply on the building of key projects. The key projects mainly involve energy, transportation, construction materials and so forth.

The Progress of the Four Modernizations Drive Demands the Import of Advanced Technology and Equipment

Of the more than 100 projects put forth during the meeting, the establishment of the Guangdong Hua County cement plant is a key project in construction material production. The other projects mainly involve the manufacturing industry, and their technical transformation is included in our country's 5-year plan.

The reason we take utilization of foreign capital as a remedy for insufficient capital in the course of carrying out economic construction is because China is a developing country whose population is dense and economic and technical level rather low. Our accumulation is far from sufficient to fulfill our demand of speeding up the four modernizations drive. Therefore, we must absorb foreign capital.

On the other hand, as I said in the opening address to the meeting, all countries should help supply each other's needs. Under such a guiding ideology, we should develop economic relations with foreign countries. We should help supply each other's needs on the basis of the principle of equality and mutual benefit, absorb foreign capital, import advanced technology and equipment which can be used in our country and import useful managerial experience. This is what development of foreign economic relations means in the course of building the four modernizations and is the objective in conducting this meeting.

Question: What are the prospects for absorbing foreign capital? In the future, the most favorable form of absorbing foreign investment is the form of direct investment, and foreign banks are concerned about whether our country will rely more on commercial loans. What is your view on this?

Answer: We adopt a very cautious and solemn attitude in absorbing foreign capital, and there are four principles guiding our doing so. First, before we ask for credits, we must make sure that others are willing to invest in our country. Second, we must uphold the principle of equality and mutual benefit. Third, the loans must be used properly so that they will bring good economic results. Fourth, we must be able to repay the loans. As soon as we ask for a loan, we must plan for its repayment. We always say that it is easy to ask for new loans when you have paid your old debts.

At present, there are three main forms of investment: First, direct investment, including joint ventures, co-production and compensatory trade items; second, loans extended by certain state governments, or international monetary funds or organizations; and third, commercial loans.

Our objective in promoting investimet projects is to link capital with the projects. The form of direct investment serves the purpose well. That is why we say that direct investment is a better form. The 100 or more projects put forth during this meeting fall within the first form of investment. The form of direct investment will be used often in the future.

We also have a limited amount in loans extended by foreign governments. Generally speaking, these government loans are usually linked with the investment projects, and are not allocated by us at random. For example, the loan of 100 million French francs extended to us by the Danish Government has been used in promoting four investment projects.

We only have a very small amount in commercial loans. The interest rate on the commercial loans is usually higher than we can afford. For instance, many of our enterprises cannot afford an interest rate of 17 or 18 percent. Therefore, we are unable to take out commercial loans until a later stage when they are more advantageous to us.

Currently, the people of the banking circles are very enthusiastic and wish to participate in all these activities by providing guarantees. We very much welcome this because some enterprises also invest in our country by making bank loans. If the banks are willing to provide guarantees, I believe the banks can play a more active role and participate in these activities in the future in this way.

Question: Has the utilization of loans from commercial banks been reduced recently? Is this due to high interests rates?

Answer: Our country did not utilize commercial loans very much in the first place. With the exception of the loans related to the 22 imported big projects in the past, we have not taken out many loans recently. Excessively high interest rates are also one of the reasons.

Question: At what interest rate level will China utilize commercial loans?

Answer: The interest rate of the loans we have obtained is 7.25 percent, but owing to the high interest rate policy being pursued by the United States, we cannot afford to utilize loans at the high rates of 17 to 18 percent.

Question: How will the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade further reduce overlapping and simplify procedures in order to adapt itself to the daily growing foreign economic contacts?

Answer: The Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade was formed as a merger of the Administrative Commission on Import and Export Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Trade, Ministry of Economic Relations With Foreign Countries and Foreign Investment Control Commission. Our general principle for organizational reforms is to merge departments identical in nature and related in work. All the four above units dealt with foreign economic relations and trade, and were therefore merged together.

The aim of merger is to reduce overlapping, improve efficiency and overcome bureaucratism. Has the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade improved efficiency? Improving efficiency is a very long process, but we can cite two examples to illustrate the situation after the merger. For example, in the past, several departments would be in charge of the same work. To accomplish a task, it was necessary to go through several departments. When concluding a commodity transaction, it was necessary to go through the Administrative Commission on Import and Export and the Ministry of Foreign Trade. The additional import of technology involved many departments. Now, after the merger, it is necessary to go through only one department. Another example is: In the past when the four departments were in charge, they often failed to coordinate among themselves. At every move they turned to the vice premiers of the State Council for Coordination. Now, after the merger, it is not necessary to go to the State Council to coordinate matters.

However, we have not finished our work yet. Take the Ministry of Foreign Relations and Trade for example. We have not started setting up our corporations. We must do this in groups and carry the streamlining work through to the end.

Question: In what respect has the United Nations Industrial Development Organization [UNIDO] provided help to us?

Answer: Our cooperation with UNIDO has been very good. Our country joined UNIDO in 1973 or 1974 and it began to furnish assistance to us in 1979. In developing our mutual relations, we and UNIDO have adopted the principle of give and take. That is to say, we contribute money to them and we also receive the assistance the organization furnishes to the developing countries. The current conference jointly sponsored by us and the United Nations also shows the cordial relationship between us.

Question: Can the products of the joint-venture enterprises with Chinese and foreign investment be sold in the country? What is the proportion?

Answer: There are different circumstances in this case. The products of some enterprises are chiefly for export and so, with the exception of the unqualified products to be left in the country, all other products that conform to the export standards should be exported. There are also some enterprises whose products are to be sold in greater proportions in the country. The circumstances are not entirely the same and we cannot sum them up in a few words. It is necessary to decide the matter according to the circumstances of the various projects and the various products.

However, there is a point which merits our attention. Since the foreign funds absorbed by an enterprise should be repaid by it in the future, it is necessary for this enterprise to have foreign exchange. It cannot do this without foreign exchange. For this reason, these enterprises should export a certain proportion of their products in order to obtain foreign exchange for repayment. This also constitutes a guarantee to the investors.

Question: Is China stepping up its control over imports and strictly implementing the system of import license?

Answer: As a socialist country, China conducts everything according to plans. That is why our import and export trades should be conducted according to the state unified planning.

On the other hand, we also classify our goods and materials into three different categories. The third category is goods and materials comparatively less in quantity but fairly great in variety. Specific arrangements for these goods and materials are made by the various corporations and localities themselves. We adopt the system of administration in different levels. The state controls the commodities of the first category while the commodities of the second category can be coordinated through consultations.

CHEN MUHUA INSPECTS SHENZHEN SPECIAL ZONE

[Phoned dispatch from correspondent Kuang YU: "Chen Muhua Inspected Shenzhen Special Zone Yesterday"]

[Text] Shenzhen, 11 Jun -- State Councillor and Minister of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Chen Muhua arrived at the Shenzhen special zone for an inspection today, accompanied by Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee First Secretary Ren Zhongyi. She was given a warm welcome by provincial and municipal leaders concerned in Shenzhen.

Chen Muhua arrived in Shenzhen at 9 a.m. today, after attending the China investment promotion meeting in Guangzhou. She proceeded to inspect the Shenzhen Jiulong Customs and Border Defense Checkpoint, the Luohu Bridge, Wenjindu, the Shenzhen Reservoir and the friendship store, and in the afternoon she visited Shatoujiao, the Jiale furniture plant, the Wushi stone quarry (a Sino-Australian joint venture), and the Liantang production brigade.

Minister Chen was interviewed by this correspondent during her visit. Speaking on her impressions of the special zone, she said the construction of the zone had made a very good impression on her. She said a visit to the special zone is a chance to learn. Chen Muhua also visited the Shatoujiao home of resident Wu Laifu and asked about his working and living conditions, wages, and home environment.

After inspecting the special zone, Chen Muhua and her party will go on to the Zhuhai special zone. Also accompanying her on this visit were Wei Yuming, vice minister of foreign economic relations and trade; Yong Longgui, a member of the State Planning Commission; and Wang Yiping, a section chief of the same commission. Also present were Wu Nansheng, Liang Xiang, Zhou Ding, Zhou Erkang, and Yan Xipei.

OFFICIALS EVALUATE SPECIAL ZONES AT CONFERENCE

[Special dispatch from Shenzhen: "Symposium on Guangdong Special Economic Zones Concluded Yesterday"]

[Text] After 8 days of discussions, visits and exchange of experiences, the "symposium on Guangdong special economic zones" came to a successful end yesterday. Zhenzhen Municipal CCP Committee Standing Committee member Lin Jiang presided over the meeting yesterday during which Sun Ru, vice president of the Guangdong Provincial Academy of Social Sciences, made the closing speech.

Guangdong Provincial Special Economic Zones Administrative Committee Director Wu Nansheng also spoke at the meeting. We pointed out that running special zones well is not purely aimed at making some profit. Rather, running the special zones is also aimed at learning advanced technology and scientific management experiences from Hong Kong and abroad in order to promote the development of the "four modernizations" in the hinterland. Running special economic zones as an experiment is also an attempt to experiment on system reforms. We can sum up experiences and then popularize them. He also held that in order to absorb advanced technology, science and management methods, it is necessary to create a good investment environment for businessmen, which includes, among other things, water and land communications and, particularly, telecommunications.

In his closing address, Sun Ru also pointed out that running economic special zones is a newly emerging thing. The birth and growth of anything new will inevitably be followed by a lot of new problems that need to be studied and solved. The birth and growth of the special zones is no exception. Different views on certain questions during the discussions are also normal.

He also indicated that we should set forth subjects for study in the light of the actual situation in building special economic zones and conscientiously probe into them so that theory can really proceed from the actual situation and in turn play a guiding role in practice. In brief, holding discussions in a down to earth manner and stimulating contention between different opinions on various problems concerning the building of special economic zones is precisely an effective means to develop social sciences.

Sun Ru pointed out that the participants in the symposium were quite unanimous in evaluating the positive role of special economic zones. They held that running special zones enables us to more quickly absorb foreign funds, obtain foreign exchange, import advanced technology and train management and technical personnel; enables us to go ahead of the rest in instituting economic management and system reforms in order to set an example and make contributions; and is of great significance in reassuring the public in Hong Kong and Macao and in striving for the return of Taiwan to the mainland.

The relevant departments of the party and government organs, the institutes of higher learning and scientific research units in Guangdong Province as well as the relevant departments of the special economic zones of Shenzhen, Zhuhai and Shantou attended the symposium. Experts and scholars from Beijing, Shanghai, Fujian and Hong Kong were also invited to the symposium.

Present at the meeting yesterday were Shenzhen Municipal CCP Committee Secretary and Mayor Liang Xiang and others.

WEN WEI PO ASKS CHIANG CHING-KUO TO ALTER GOAL

[Editorial: "Why Not Change Course and Respond To the Call for Peaceful Unification? -- Commenting on Chiang Ching-kuo's 3 June Speech"]

[Text] After being hospitalized twice, Chiang Ching-kuo personally attended the meeting of the Standing Committee of the KMT Central Committee in Taiwan on 3 June and delivered a speech entitled "Unite and Fight To Create a Bright Future." For a few days afterward, the Taipei CHUNGYANG JINPAO and other newspapers carried editorials extolling his speech, calling it the "target" and "program" for the KMT's government work in the future and asking the Taiwan people to "dedicate themselves" to achieving this target and program.

We want to use the first paragraph of the 3 June editorial of the Taipei LIEN HO PAO to comment on the background to Chiang Ching-kuo's delivery of this speech: "In the face of the worrisome trends reflected by the U.S. policy toward China which is influenced by the CCP's united front work and in the face of the slow economic recovery under the impact of the world economic depression, fellow countrymen are laden with anxiety and have been thinking about an effective way to reverse the trends."

U.S. President Ronald Reagan's assumption of office and certain speeches of his afterward stirred up the illusions of the Taiwan authorities, who thought that by keeping close to the United States, they could break through the diplomatic isolation and open up a new vista. Contrary to their expectation, Reagan, after weighing up the advantages and disadvantages, handed three letters to the Beijing leaders, expressing his persistence in the "one China" policy and his favor of the peaceful unification of China. This caused confusion and fear among the KMT members.

Taiwan suffered a setback externally and was in confusion internally. Hard hit by the continued depression of the world economy, Taiwan's economy, which used to depend on the world market, was in a recession, reflected by the reluctance of investors, a standstill in production and the continuous decrease in foreign trade. The myth of an "economic take-off" was shattered by the harsh facts. At the same time, driven by patriotism, many far-sighted people in Taiwan responded to the call for the peaceful unification of the motherland. This was why Chiang Ching-kuo said in his speech: "A very small number of people among us do not understand completely the current situation of our 'state' and have consciously or unconsciously acted as an instrument for splitting our ranks from within."

In short, a situation of being beset with difficulties at home and abroad was the reason Chiang Ching-kuo delivered the speech. However, what prescription has Chiang Ching-kuo concocted to create "a bright future" for Taiwan?

Chiang Ching-kuo's speech covered the economic, military, diplomatic, political and social aspects. Besides talking about his wishes, he could not put forth anything substantial. Ultimately, he could only resort to "spirit," saying that "we fight to make creations amid great storms by dint of our will, determination and spirit."

It is true that a nation or an individual needs some will and spirit. The question is whether such will and spirit are in step with the trend of the times. Reagan's letters to Beijing can be regarded as a reflection of the spirit of the times. Under the impact of practical politics, Reagan, who takes anticommunism as his lifework, has no alternative but to say that he recognizes "one China" and favors the peaceful unification of China, and he dares not and is unwilling to publicly antagonize the Chinese people. Even if the Taiwan authorities, who are now in a tight corner, launch a war at Chiang Ching-kuo's request, can they stop the advance of the Chinese people (including the Taiwan people) from unifying their motherland? The realities of Taiwan run counter to Chiang Ching-kuo's wish; the "will, determination and spirit" requested by Chiang Ching-kuo are vanishing continuously, while the demands for early realization of peaceful unification of the motherland are becoming increasingly stronger and more and more pressing with each passing day. We can therefore say with certainty that the "target" and "program" mentioned by Chiang Ching-kuo in his speech will only vanish into thin air. The more stubbornly he insists on going his own way, the more he will be detested by the people.

Chiang Ching-kuo is not only old and weak, but also ill. At such a moment, he still says time and again that he is concerned about "China's future." Why does he not conform to the trend of the times and the demands of the Chinese nation and write the last page of his life by working for the peaceful unification of the motherland? If he really can do so, he will live up to the expectations of his ancestors. It is hoped that Mr Chiang Ching-kuo will think about this carefully!

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS U.S., EUROPEAN RELATIONS

[Article by Zhai Xiangqian [5049 6272 0051]: "From Versailles to Bonn"]

[Text] Summary: The acute contradictions between Europe and the United States have been mitigated for the time being and the solidarity of the Western allies has been upheld as a result of certain concessions made by both sides at the seven-nation summit held in Versailles and at the NATO summit. However, the question has not yet been basically resolved. End of summary.

After more than 2 days of meetings at Versailles, the seven-nation summit of Western countries approved a joint statement and an appendix: a pledge regarding international currencies. Economic squabbles are the major reasons for the contradictions between Europe and the United States at present. The contradictions of high U.S. interest rates and international trade problems were particularly acute prior to the Versailles meeting. However, at this meeting, Western Europe, Canada and Japan all adopted the attitude of exercising greater restraint. Before the meeting, Japan had also voluntarily adopted such measures as lowering its tariff rate and opening up its market. Therefore, a compromise was finally reached at this meeting and the joint statement merely expressed the need for "pursuing a cautious monetary policy" and "controlling budget deficits" in order to strive for a lower interest rate, "resisting the pressure of protectionism" and "trying to further open up the market."

The third day after the closing of the Versailles meeting, the heads of state again rushed to Bonn for the 16-nation NATO summit, and discussed the question of East-West relations. After the first day of meetings they approved the "Bonn Declaration" and two appendixes and expressed the need for "strengthening defense preparations and military capabilities" to defend the North Atlantic area, and at the same time, to seek a "safe and reliable East-West relationship aimed at achieving genuine detente" and "use positive dialogue to strengthen peace." The emphasis on the "dual" strategy of attaching equal importance to defense and dialogue shows that the United States has readjusted its policy toward the Soviet Union and has made concessions on its stand toward the West European countries.

From the Versailles meeting to the Bonn meeting, certain interesting new changes have taken place in U.S.-European relations. Because both the United States and the West European countries have made compromises on certain controversial major economic and strategic questions, the once tense U.S.-European relations have been mitigated to a certain extent, and factors favorable to safeguarding the unity of the Western alliance have appeared.

The reason for the appearance of these subtle changes is very complicated. They are the products of the turbulent international situation in recent years and the daily deepening of the political and economic crisis in the capitalist world.

First, following the sinking of the West into an inextricable economic crisis, the contradictions between Europe and the United States have daily become more acute. The policy of reducing taxes and financial deficits adopted by the United States has caused bank interest rates to increase to as high as 17 percent. This has strengthened the U.S. dollar, triggered an outflow of capital from Western Europe, affected the stability of the European monetary system and hampered the economic recovery of Western Europe. The West European countries have long threatened to form "a united front" against the United States. The international trade war between the United States, Europe and Japan has also intensified the friction, and a senior official of the EEC said that since the war, there has never been a trade war of global nature so near to being touched off as that at present between the United States and Europe.

Second, over the past 16 months since assuming power, the Reagan administration has advocated greatly strengthening defense and implemented a hardline policy of resisting the Soviet Union. This has caused uneasiness among the West European countries. Proceeding from their strategic positions and political and economic interests, West European countries hold that while maintaining their military strength to a certain extent, they should continue to carry on a dialogue with the Soviet Union and implement a moderate policy toward it. Over the past year, the United States has bitterly quarreled with Europe on strategy toward the Soviet Union and East-West political and economic relations. There is a widening rift in the Western alliance.

Third, the peace campaign in the West is surging forward. Due to the increasingly strained East-West relations, demonstrations have been staged frequently in various West European countries aimed at opposing the deployment of U.S. nuclear guided missiles in West Europe and calling for disarmament and other demands. The anti-nuclear campaign in the United States is also developing. All this has forced the United States to consider the feelings of the masses.

Fourth, the Soviet Union is strengthening its peace offensive and has sowed discord between the United States and Europe. The United States has increasingly realized that the deepening of the contradictions between the United States and West Europe will inevitably tilt the strategic foundation of the Western alliance toward the Soviet Union. West European countries realize that in the face of the Soviet threat of expansion, it is impossible for them to abandon the protective umbrella of the United States. Therefore, the West European countries are unwilling to excessively strain their relations with the United States.

In this situation, it is necessary for both the United States and Europe to compromise and make concessions so as to iron out their differences and keep in step. The United States has raised the flag for talks and disarmament to cater to the stand of West Europe, cope with the peace campaign in West Europe and the United States itself and create conditions for bringing the views of the United States and Europe a step closer. At the recent Versailles and Bonn meetings, the United States and Europe reached a further compromise on economic problems and strategy toward the Soviet Union.

Although the two summit meetings of the Western countries adopted a united stand, the fundamental differences between the United States and Europe have not been and cannot be solved. They have not reached agreement on the problem of the U.S. high interest rates -- the focal point of the economic contradictions between the United States and Europe. The United States has not made any specific promise to lower the interest rates. With regard to the problems of strategy and moderate policy, the basic contradictions between the United States and Europe still exist. The United States has paid more attention to strengthening actual strength and forcing the Soviet Union to make concessions through trade restriction and arms "relaxation" [illegible] solving the present economic crisis.

Public opinion in the West holds that although the two summit meetings reached certain agreements, whether the countries concerned would "abide by these agreements can only be proved by time." Although the relations between Europe and the United States have been temporarily relaxed because of these two meetings, their contradictions still exist and have not been completely solved. In the future they will continue to occur, at times in an acute form and at other times in a relaxed form.

CHINA DAILY ON PROGRESS IN DISARMAMENT ATTITUDES

[By CHINA DAILY commentator]

[Text] The second special session of the United Nations General Assembly on disarmament, scheduled to last for a month, began meeting last week. Delegate after delegate took the rostrum stressing the urgency in checking the arms race between the two superpowers.

Meanwhile, a mammoth peace demonstration -- hundreds of thousands of people from many parts of the globe -- converged Saturday on UN Headquarters in New York. And many more people elsewhere in the world have been demonstrating to underscore the worldwide demand for disarmament. World peace and security is very much on the minds of the people everywhere.

Two salient signs of progress mark the present session in comparison with the first four years ago. One is that a growing number of people have pinpointed the Soviet Union and the United States as the two culprits responsible for the feverish arms race jeopardizing world peace.

Superpowers

According to some sources, there are about 50,000 nuclear warheads in the world today with a total explosive power of no less than one million atom bombs as big as the one that levelled Hiroshima. The combined nuclear arsenals of both superpowers account for 97 percent of the world's warheads, and their military expenditures make up three-fifths of the world's total. First and foremost, therefore, the world struggle for disarmament should be to get the two superpowers to reduce their armaments.

The other noticeable change is the increasing understanding that disarmament should not solely involve nuclear weapons, but should also include conventional weapons. It is becoming more and more evident that while vying with each other in stockpiling nuclear warheads, the two superpowers attach greater importance to conventional war. More than three-fourths of their military expenditures go for conventional weaponry. It was with conventional units and weapons that the Soviet Union opted for in its military intervention in other countries and invasion and occupation of Afghanistan.

Since the very purpose of disarmament is to oppose world war and maintain world peace, any disarmament talks are useless if they ignore the reality of the current international situation, i.e., aggression, wars and violations of peace.

Many formulae for achieving disarmament have been suggested and different approaches for solving the problem have been put forward. China's proposal presented to the UN by Foreign Minister Huang Hua on June 11 deserves attention.

The basic ideas of the proposal are first, that all nuclear powers should reach agreement committing themselves not to use nuclear weapons. Prior to this, these powers should pledge unconditionally not to use nuclear weapons against nonnuclear countries and regions, nor would they be the first to use them against one another in any circumstances. Second, the Soviet Union and the United States should stop the testing, improvement and production of nuclear weapons and each should reduce its nuclear stockpile and carrier-missiles by 50 percent. Following this, all other nuclear powers should do likewise and reduce their nuclear arsenals according to proportions agreed upon.

Finally, conventional weapon arsenals should also be reduced and weapons of mass destruction prohibited. Every country should pledge not to use conventional military forces for armed intervention, aggression and occupation of other countries.

Tortuous

The world has learned over the years that the road to disarmament is long and tortuous and one shouldn't be so naive as to believe that world disarmament can be achieved overnight. It is sad to recall that the first UN resolution ever adopted was the one against nuclear war. Yet, 37 years later, instead of seeing any actual reduction of arms, the world watches an ever fiercer arms race between the two superpowers and an ever growing nuclear and conventional arsenal.

The Chinese proposal may not be perfect. But it is practical under present condition and it is realistic in the sense that it represents a minimum requirement to start the ball rolling. Nevertheless, it would still mean persistent struggle on the part of the Third World and other peaceloving nations to make the superpowers do something concrete rather than paying lipservice by high-sounding rhetoric and diplomatic jugglery.

PRC OFFICIAL ADDRESSES WHO REGIONAL SEMINAR

[Text] Jinan, June 14 (XINHUA) — Experience in primary health care in Yexian, a slightly better than average county in China, has been introduced by Guo Ziheng, vice-minister of public health, in an address at an inter-regional seminar on primary health care held in Yexian today.

He listed the experience in six aspects, namely, the government stress on the rural areas in medical and health work; the setting up of grassroot public health organizations; self-reliance including the dividing of the finances between the state and one collective, and the training of large numbers of barefoot doctors; flexible methods used according to local conditions; urban support to the rural areas; and finally mass line.

Yexian, being a typical Chinese county, is an epitome of rural China's basic approaches to developing primary health care, he noted. He said he was happy that China could provide an example on which experiences could be drawn and shortcomings corrected.

The seminar opened here yesterday and will be closed on June 26. It was sponsored by World Health Organization (WHO), United Nations Development Program (UNDP), United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and World Bank, with support of Chinese Ministry of Public Health.

Health ministers and planning and senior health administrators from 15 developing countries in six WHO regions of Africa, Americas, Eastern Mediterranean, Europe, Southeast Asia and Western Pacific, as well as officials from four sponsors, participated. It will explore some aspects of China's experience in primary health care with particular attention to the three-level network of health care system, people's involvement, health manpower development and financing.

Conclusions of general applicability to situations of participating countries and to those of other developing countries will be drawn.

Today's meeting listened to a special message of greeting from Dr. H. Mahler, director general of WHO, in which he hoped more people will benefit from the seminar. The meeting was chaired by Dr. D. Tajada-de-Rivero, assistant director-general of World Health Organization. He said all countries of the world, developing as well as industrialized, have decided unanimously to concentrate their efforts for at least the next 20 years on achieving health for all, and that primary health care is the key to achieving this social goal. He recognized the Chinese experience as "an actual practice".

WASHINGTON TIMES ACCUSED OF 'TWO CHINAS' PLOT

OW151850 Beijing XINHUA In English 1830 GMT 15 Jun 82

["'Times' of the Nineteenth Century -- Commentary by Correspondent Peng Di" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, June 14 (XINHUA) -- A new newspaper called Washington TIMES has been on sale recently on news stands in this capital. Although a month has hardly past since its publication, it has carried a number of editorials and articles, going all-out to oppose and insult China in its plot to create "two Chinas" and interfere in China's internal affairs.

In its June 9 editorial, this paper openly called Taiwan a "loyal ally" of the United States and "a bastion for defending our interests in the Pacific." In another commentary the same day, the paper went so far as to regard Taiwan as a U.S. "aircraft carrier" and oppose "handing over" it to China, saying this "would amount to giving up the equivalent of several aircraft carriers."

It is common knowledge that there is only one China in the world and Taiwan is part of Chinese territory. This stand is shared by all Chinese including the people and authorities in Taiwan. It is also universally accepted by the governments of more than 100 countries of the world including the U.S. Government. However, the Washington TIMES, defying world opinion and openly displaying hostility to the Chinese people, has tried to dismember the territory of China at will, looking on Taiwan Province as their possession and their base. Such arrogance cannot but arouse the indignation of all patriotic Chinese.

Not only does the newspaper oppose China, it is also against the American people's friendship for the Chinese people and U.S. businessmen doing business with mainland China. It even directed its attacks on the successive U.S. administrations in power since the publication of the "Shanghai communique". In addition, the paper carried articles written by its executive editor and others on June 9 and 10, assailing and slandering the "Shanghai communique" and other documents signed by the Chinese and U.S. Governments. They even satirized the recent letters of President Ronald Reagan to Chinese leaders. The articles also abused by name the U.S. officials concerned from former President Jimmy Carter to "the Kissinger-style diplomatists in the Reagan State Department," and from Secretary of State Alexander Haig to national security advisor in the White House Judge Clark. They asserted that these officials' policy on China is nothing but "kowtowing to Peking" and "subservient to Peking." Their attacks came with such a momentum as if they would stop at nothing until all of the documents signed by both governments were torn up and the United States fell out with China.

The Washington TIMES appears to be dizzy with the gun-boat policy of the 19th century. In the eyes of its editors, things can be regarded as normal only when the U.S. superpower can do what it pleases, encroaching upon China's sovereignty and interfering in China's internal affairs at will, and if it makes contacts with China in accordance with the norms governing international relations, that would be a concession and kowtowing to China.

This paper is also trying to spread the idea that other countries cannot survive without the superpowers. They made a great fuss about U.S. aid to China, as if China had no way to modernize its economy, technology and national defense without credits and aid from the United States. Such remarks sound rather grating on the ear of the people of China and other developing countries.

But on the other hand, they can also help the Chinese people to acquire a better understanding of the point that China can have a bright future only by relying on its own efforts, getting united and working hard. China will continue to apply an open policy towards foreign countries. But this policy is based on self-reliance, on our own diligence and arduous struggle.

In a word, the paper has gone to the extreme right. When you read the beginning, you immediately know the conclusion at the end of the article. Such articles are really not worth reading. But since they have appeared on news stands everywhere and are spreading a rotton smell of the 19th century, it is only proper for us to write a few words to refute the rotten ideas and hold down their evil influence.

XINHUA NOTES U.S. INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY MOVES

[Text] Washington, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The United States Monday intervened in international currency exchange markets for the second time since the administration of U.S. President Ronald Reagan took office, the U.S. Treasury announced Monday.

Under-Secretary for the Treasury Beryl Sprinkel announced the decision, which he said was made because of significant movements in European currencies and a surge of the dollar following a readjustment of European exchange rates last weekend. Sprinkel said the dollar Monday rose 5 percent against the French franc, 2 percent against the Belgian franc, 1.5 percent against the Swiss franc, 1.2 percent against the West German mark, some 1 percent against the Japanese yen and 1 percent against the Dutch guilder. The dollar's movement against these currencies was extreme, Sprinkel said.

Secretary of the Treasury Donald Regan said Monday the realignment, of which details were not released, was needed. "Our aim is to calm the market" and the move did not represent a change in policy, he said.

The action came only eight days after seven industrialized nations agreed during a summit in Versailles to the use of intervention, when necessary, in the international currency exchange markets to counter disorderliness. The first intervention by the administration occurred after an assassination attempt on Reagan in March 1981.

However, Western monetary sources said that it is difficult to stabilize money markets if the United States does not lower its high interest rates.

TASS 'SLANDERING' OF DK AT UN SESSION DECRIED

HK140737 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Jun 82 p 6

[Unattributed report: "TASS Shouts Abuse in Public"]

[Text] The Soviet Union has again been shamed into anger by its inability to prevent Democratic Kampuchea from attending a UN meeting -- the special session on disarmament. Venting Moscow's spleen, TASS has loudly abused China and the great majority of countries for "shielding" "criminals."

TASS published a commentary slandering Democratic Kampuchean participation in this session, in its lofty status as a UN member, as "an insult to the Kampuchean people and the world public."

What made TASS particularly "angry" was that "there are frequently people" "continually raising a so-called 'Kampuchea issue,' and making the forum of the United Nations available to criminals. In this 'Kampuchea issue' conspiracy, the most shocking thing is its moral aspect -- it really is the greatest shamelessness that they should despicably shield executioners in this way."

TASS then proceeded to attack "Beijing's stand in protecting the executioners." At the same time, it went so far as to declare that "it is impossible for the consciences of honest men to be at ease now that the forums of the United Nations and other international meetings are made available to the slaughterers and executioners of the Kampuchean people." This was a further cudgeling of all states that uphold justice which have consistently supported Democratic Kampuchea in maintaining its legitimate UN seat. However, TASS has failed to see that its move has in fact proved how isolated the Soviet Union is in the international community.

USSR, OTHER ATHLETES ARRIVE FOR TRACK MEET

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Participants from nine foreign countries that will compete in the 1982 Beijing international track and field invitational meet are all in Beijing with the arrival of the Japanese team this evening. The teams are from Trinidad and Tobago, India, Romania, Thailand, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic, Finland and Japan.

The meet, with 17 men's events and 14 women's events, will be at the Beijing workers' stadium. The Chinese Track and Field Association has selected 25 men and 23 women athletes to participate in the meet. Athletes of some countries who arrived here earlier have been training at the stadium.

GENGBIAO, O CHIN-U SPEAK AT DPRK BANQUET

OW151326 Beijing XINHUA in English 1249 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Pyongyang, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The Military Commission of the Central Commitee of the Workers Party of Korea gave a banquet here this evening in honor of the visiting military delegation of the People's Republic of China headed by Geng Biao, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, member of the Standing Committee of the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, state councillor and minister of national defense. [Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 1739 GMT on 14 June carries a report on this subject in which the preceeding reads: "...Republic of China with Geng Biao as its head and Liang Biye as its deputy head." (omitting Geng Biao's titles and providing new elements)]

O Chin-u, member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party and minister of the People's Armed Forces of Korea, said in a toast: "The Chinese military delegation's visit to our country will further promote the growing friendship between Korea and China."

He stressed: "The friendship between Korea and China is a militant friendship cemented in blood in the flames of arduous revolutionary struggles, an unbreakable revolutionary friendship consolidated in severe tests of history." He said: "We will never forget that during the difficult years of war, the Chinese People's Volunteers, together with the Korean People's Army, fought in the same trench, shared weal and woe and shed their blood in defense of every inch of Korean land. We will carry on their lofty internationalist spirit from generation to generation."

Geng Biao said in his speech: "The Chinese people and the People's Liberation Army deeply treasure the continued consolidation and development of the friendship between China and Korea, and are willing to work unremittingly toward this end. In the future, as in the past, our people and army will closely cooperate with the Korean people and People's Army, support and coordinate with each other and march forward shoulder to shoulder in the struggle for socialist construction in and reunification of their countries in unity with the Third World against the imperialists and hegemonists."

Geng Biao highly praised the achievements gained by the Korean People's Army under the leadership of its great leader Kim Il-song. He said, "The U.S. troops are still hanging on to South Korea and the Chon Tu-hwan clique, under the instigation and backing of the United States, has further intensified its action to set all kinds of obstacles on the road to North-South dialogue and peaceful reunification of Korea. This will reveal more clearly the true features of the U.S. hegemonists and their plot to create 'two Koreas'. The Chinese people and the Chinese People's Liberaton Army resolutely support the Korean people's sacred cause of peaceful and independent reunification of the fatherland and strongly demand that the U.S. withdraw all its troops and equipment from South Korea. We are convinced that the beautiful 3,000-li land will surely be unified in the end and the 50 million people will surely be reunited."

Among those present at the banquet were Korean leading members So chol, O Kuk-yol and Paek Hak-nim.

Earlier today, the Chinese military delegation had called on Gen O Chin-u.

[Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service renders the last two sentences as follows:

[Among those present at the banquet were Korean leading members So Chol, O Kuk-yol and Paek Had-min; He Zhangming, charge d'affairs ad interim of the Chinese Embassy in Korea; Ye Changqu, outgoing Chinese People's Volunteers member of the Korea-China side of the Military Armistice Commission; and Wang Jian, new Chinese People's Volunteers member of the Korea-China side of the Military Armistice Commission.

[Earlier today, the delegation's head Geng Biao and all its members called on Gen O Chin-u. The two sides held talks in a cordial and friendly atmosphere.]

RENMIN RIBAO ON DRY SEASON FIGHTING IN KAMPUCHEA

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Wang Rongjiu [3769 2837 0036] and XINHUA reporter Yang Mu [2799 2606]: "The Dry Season Battle in Sisophon Area Is of Great Significance -- Showing That the Vietnamese Troops Invading Kampuchea Cannot Reverse the Trend of Their Sliding Downhill"]

[Text] Bangkok, 1 Jun -- A campaign launched by the Vietnamese invading troops after 3 months of preparations has ended in their defeat after 3 months of fierce fighting. Thus, the intruding troops, suffering numerous casualties, had to retreat from the battlefield along the same paths they had advanced when they started the campaign. This is a brief description of the "great mopping-up" operation which the Vietnamese invading troops launched against the Democratic Kampuchean Army and people in the Sisophon region to the south of the Highway No 5 during the last dry season (from November 1981 to April this year).

Ths Sisophon region, which includes Phnom Malai Mountain, Phnom Chakrei Mountain and Phnom (Balongtale) [1572 2597 1044 04412]Mountain, was the key target of the four major "mopping-up" operations launched by the Vietnamese troops in the last dry season. The Vietnamese deployed in the campaign an army made up of 5 divisions consisting of more than 10,000 soldiers, nearly 40 tanks, more than 100 cannons, and airplanes, gas shells and a large number of mines. The operations were begun on 14 January this year. Divided into three battle groups, the Vietnamese made a surprise assault on the Democratic Kampuchean rear base and headed for the Kampuchean-Thai border. At that time, they seemed to be in reach of achieving their long-desired strategic goal of driving the Democratic Kampuchean troops in that region into the long and narrow area along the Kampuchean-Thai border and eliminating them at one stroke. Some international media also predicted then that the Democratic Kampuchean forces would face a crushing defeat. However, by smashing the four major offensives of the Vietnamese invading troops and extensively carry out guerrilla warfare, the heroic Democratic Kampuchean Army and people have now regained the initiative. On the other hand, the Vietnamese troops, who bore down menacingly on the Democratic Kampuchean Army and people at the very beginning, nastily retreated in defeat, having sustained numerous casualties with 3,000 soldiers killed or injured, and 19 tanks and a number of military vehicles destroyed. This is really a heavy blow to the morale of the Vietnamese troops.

The Vietnamese troops had the superiority over their rivals in terms of military strength, equipment, means of transport and so on. They had also changed their tactics. Then why did they still lose the battles? The main reasons were:

First of all, the morale and the real combat strength of the Vietnamese troops were declining daily. The tactic of large-scale troop movements can hardly work in tropical forests, since the fighting is carried out between individual soldiers or groups of soldiers who are separated from each other at a distance of around 20 meters. Therefore, fighting in tropical forests needs more courage and wits -- those who fear death always lose the upper hand and are defeated. Let us take the 5th Division which is a main division of the Vietnamese troops, for example. This division used to be engaged in the "mopping-up" operations in the Sisophon area every year. But the morale of its troops has gone from bad to worse. In the dry season this year, when occupying the "shihe" [4258 8109 stone river Chinese] village which is situated 8 kilometers to the south of Phnom Makheun Mountain, a battalion of this division dared not go out to fight at night. Even in daytime, they dared not come out before carefully probing the situation. From 5 to 7 March this year, when fierce fighting was going on between the Vietnamese troops and the Democratic Kampuchean forces in the (Da Si Da) [6671 2448 6671] Mountain area, a Vietnamese commander ordered via walkie-talkie his subordinates to move forward; the subordinate military officer on the other end of the line answered: "There are thorns ahead, our fighters do not want to move!" "Thorns" is the code word for mines. It can be obviously seen from this example how low the morale of the Vietnamese troops was.

Moreover, within the Vietnamese troops, soldiers from the north Vietnam always bully those from the south. Therefore, their internal contradiction is becoming more and more acute, and this has led to a situation that soldiers do not obey orders and regular troops do not coordinate with local troops. This shortcoming of the Vietnamese troops was exposed even more clearly in the recent dry season offensive.

In the second place, the Vietnamese goal was too ambitious to be realized as their strength was insufficient. Advancing in three groups over a primitive forest area of 3,000 square kilometers, the Vietnamese troops had to garrison some forces at several strongholds along the way. This greatly dispersed their forces. Therefore, only 3,000 soldiers or more were actually engaged in a main offensive for which more than 10,000 soldiers were mobilized. As the Vietnamese could press-gang civilians to repair the paths in forests which were destroyed by Democratic Kampuchean Guerrillas, they were forced to send some of their soldiers to do the job. So, the Democratic Kampuchean National Army was able to concentrate its strength on dealing with the dispersed forces of the enemy and cutting off the latter's retreat, thus menacing the enemy effectively. For this reason, the Vietnamese troops' superiority over the Democratic Kampuchean forces in terms of strength was offset.

In the third place, the Vietnamese had some weaknesses, both in their strategy and tactics, which they could not overcome. They attempted to wipe out the effectiveness of the Democratic Kampuchean forces in the Sisophon area within a relatively short period. However, as the latter extensively carried out guerrilla warfare, the Vietnamese were trapped there for 3 months -- from 17 January to 13 March. They tried to realize their strategic goal of a quick, decisive battle by using the tactic of attacking key targets. Nevertheless, they encountered strong counterattacks from the Democratic Kampuchean forces which adopted the tactics of guerrilla warfare, mine warfare and a protracted war of attrition. So their strategy of a quick, decisive battle failed, while their tactic of carrying out mopping-up operations against key target areas was defeated because their troops were separated from their logistic bases and their military strength was insufficient. It was under such circumstances that the Vietnamese troops were forced to retreat. It is absolutely untrue that they retreated ahead of schedule simply because of the early onset of the rainy season.

There is no doubt that the Vietnamese can change their strategy and tactics. Nevertheless, they can by no means reverse the trend of their sliding downhill. The campaign in the Sisophon area is a mirror which reflected the situation of the Vietnamese troops which have fallen into dire straits since they invaded Kampuchea. What one can see in this mirror is not a victory garland but the abyss of failure.

IMELDA MARCOS CONCLUDES VISIT, DEPARTS FOR HOME

[Text] Shanghai, June 11 (XINHUA) -- Imelda Romualdez Marcos, wife of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, minister of human settlements and governor of Metro Manila, left for home this afternoon at the end of her China visit.

Seeing her off were Wang Dachan, Shanghai mayor, Han Nianlong, adviser to the Foreign Ministry, his wife Wang Zhen, Mo Yanzhong, designated Chinese ambassador to the Philippines, and Fortunato U. Abat, Philippine ambassador to China.

Mrs. Marcos said that she found China politically stable and its people united. "The Chinese people are lucky since you have rich material resources and good leadership," she said. "With good leadership it is possible to make use of the material and human resources, bring the people to prosperity and improve their living standards."

She said: "The Philippines and China are friends and good neighbors. I am pleased to see the progress the Chinese people have made. I will remain a friend of the Chinese people forever."

ANTARCTIC RESOURCES CONSULTATIVE MEETING OPENS

OW141746 Beijing XINHUA in English 1602 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Text] Wellington, June 14 (XINHUA) -- A special consultative meeting of the Antarctic treaty nations opened here today to explore ways of exploiting Antarctic mineral resources without touching on the delicate issue of sovereignty over the Antarctic Continent.

Representatives of Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Britain, Chile, France, Japan, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, the Soviet Union, the United States and West Germany attended the meeting.

Addressing the delegations, New Zealand Minister of Foreign Affairs Warren E. Cooper said the consultative parties would draw up precise, effective and enforceable rules for protecting environment and would find ways of bridging the conflicting positions on sovereignty.

Cooper said a commission to be established on Antarctic minerals should not prejudice the interests of all mankind in Antarctic.

Mineral resources are not dealt with in the Antarctic treaty. The 14 treaty nations reportedly hope to establish as soon as possible a commission to regulate exploration and exploitation of Antarctic minerals.

The consultative meeting, not open to public, will end June 25.

HUANG HUA CONTINUES MEETINGS WITH FRG OFFICIALS

President Carstens

OW151906 Beijing XINHUA in English 1856 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Bonn, June 15 (XINHUA) -- President of the Federal Republic of Germany Karl Carstens met the visiting Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Huang Hua and had a warm and friendly conversation with him at the presidential office here today.

Huang Hua said that the Chinese Government and people were looking forward to Carstens' visit to China next October on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations of the two countries. Carstens said that he accepted the invitation with pleasure in the hope to understand China's ancient civilization and its present-day achievements.

Foreign Minister Genscher

[Text] Bonn, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, state councillor and foreign minister of China, and Hans-Dietrich Genscher, vice chancellor and foreign minister of the Federal Republic of Germany, held talks today and yesterday on a wide range of international and bilateral issues including Kampuchea, Afghanistan and the Middle East.

In their two rounds of talks, the two foreign ministers reviewed the drastic changes in the international situation since Genscher's visit to China last October, and exchanged views on the strengthening of bilateral relations.

The two sides noted with satisfaction the steadily developing relations between the two countries.

Speaking at a dinner given in honor of Huang Hua this evening, the FRG foreign minister demanded the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Kampuchea and Afghanistan, strongly condemned the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and urged all parties concerned to find a solution that safeguards the sovereignty and integrity of Lebanon.

Referring to the recent NATO summit in Bonn, Genscher appealed to the Soviets to give serious consideration to the proposal of the West on disarmament and arms control. He pointed out that the cooperation among the non-aligned countries of the Third World is as important factor of stability.

He said China's participation in the Cancun summit and its political and economic commitments are conducive to world stability. He expressed satisfaction with the friendly bilateral relations and the cooperation in science and technology and hoped that this cooperation between the two countries will continue on the basis of mutual benefit and equality.

Huang Hua pointed out in his speech that the current international situation has become still more tense and turbulent, with new problems piling on outstanding old ones and the hegemonists stepping up their expansionist deployments for strategic superiority.

He said: "Although the Federal Republic of Germany is in Europe and China in Asia, we both are concerned about peace and security and have common interests in this respect."

"We frequently exchange views on the international situation and on the further development of our friendly cooperation, this is not only in the interests of our two countries, but also in the interests of world peace and stability," Huang Hua said.

On bilateral relations, he said the direct contacts between the leaders of the two countries and the increasing visits exchanged between professional delegations constitute an important indication of the flourishing relations between China and the FRG. He also expressed satisfaction with the economic, scientific and technological cooperation and the growing exchanges in culture, education and sports between the two countries.

Huang Hua stressed that China will continue steadfastly to oppose hegemonism and safeguard world peace, and give prominence to cooperation with the FRG. He said he is convinced that the relations of cooperation between the two countries have lasting and bright prospects.

FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION RECEIVED IN PARIS

OW150937 Beijing XINHUA in English 0805 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Paris, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The France-China Friendship Society gave a grand reception today in honor of the delegation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries which is here on a visit to mark the 30th anniversary of the establishment of the society.

Among the 200 guests present were the society's Executive Chairman Prof. Louis Bazin, Vice-President Mrs Helene Marchisio, members of the society's presidium, and the noted film workers Jovis Ivens and Marceline Loridan. Chinese Ambassador Yao Guang was also present.

Speaking at the reception, Prof. Bazin said in France, there are sincere and devoted friends of China who are working for the promotion of friendship between the French and Chinese peoples by every means at their disposal and through various forms of expression.

In reply, Xie Bangding, head of the Chinese delegation and vice-president of the Chinese friendship association, thanked the French society for what it did over the past years to promote understanding and friendship between the Chinese and French peoples. The current visit, he said, left the Chinese delegation with a deep impression of the extensive and profound mass basis for the promotion of friendship between the Chinese and French peoples and of the broad prospects of such an undertaking. He presented a silk banner, a documentary film and slides on behalf of his association to the French society.

The Chinese friendship delegation arrived in France on May 26. It has toured Paris, Cote d'Azur, Bordeaux and Lille.

LONG-TERM TRADE AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH NORWAY

OW160859 Beijing XINHUA in English 0750 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Stockholm, June 16 (XINHUA) -- A long-term trade agreement between China and Norway was officially signed in Oslo Tuesday afternoon, according to a report from that city.

The agreement was signed by Zheng Tuobin, first vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Arne Skauge, Norwegian minister of trade and shipping on behalf of their respective governments. Chinese Ambassador to Norway Ding Guoyu was present at the signing ceremony. Zheng Tuobin and his party arrived in Oslo on June 14 for an official visit to Norway and will leave for home on June 19.

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS ISRAEL'S INVASION OF LEBANON

OW151700 Beijing XINHUA in English 1649 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, Jun 15 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government today issued a statement strongly condemning Israel's invasion of Lebanon. The statement reads as follows:

On 4 June Israel flagrantly launched a large-scale military invasion into Lebanon and has since forcibly occupied vast tracts of territory in central and southern Lebanon, bombed and attacked Lebanese cities and towns and the Palestinian refugee camps, thus causing bloodshed and loss of lives to tens of thousands of innocent people. At present, Israel is continuing to expand its acts of aggression under the camouflage of declaring a cease-fire and is pressing towards the urban area of Beirut, the capital of Lebanon.

The Israeli authorities, in brazen violation of the principles of international law, are carrying out naked aggression against a sovereign Arab state in a premeditated attempt to wipe out the resistance forces of the Palestinian people, thus committing another crime against the Arab people and seriously worsening the situation in the Middle East. The Chinese Government and people express utmost indignation at and strongly condemn this Israeli act of aggression.

At a time when Israel's frenzied invasion of Lebanon is being condemned by the people of various countries unanimously, the U.S. Government has openly used its veto power in the United Nations to obstruct the Security Council from adopting a draft resolution condemning Israel for its refusal to withdraw its troops. The United States should be condemned for abetting and supporting Israel in its aggression.

The Chinese Government has always held that Israel must withdraw from the Arab territories occupied since 1967, that the Palestinian people must regain their national rights, including the right to return to their homeland, the right to self-determination and the right to establish a state; and that there must be a comprehensive and just settlement of the Middle East question. We firmly support the Lebanese, Palestinian and Syrian Armed Forces and people in their just struggle to resist Israeli aggression and safeguard their national rights. Israel must abide by the relevant resolutions of the U.N. Security Council, stop its aggression against Lebanon immediately and withdraw all its troops from Lebanon unconditionally.

We sincerely hope that the Arab countries and people will unite closely in a common struggle against the enemy. We call on all the peace-loving and justice-upholding countries and people to join their efforts to stop Israel's aggression, support the just cause of the Arab people and maintain peace in the Middle East.

AFP: FOREIGN STUDENTS MARCH AGAINST ISRAEL, U.S.

OW150808 Hong Kong AFP in English 0734 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (AFP) -- Several hundred foreign students walked in procession through the streets of Beijing today in protest against the entry of Israeli troops into Lebanon, shouting anti-Israeli and anti-American slogans in English, Chinese and Arabic.

The demonstration, in which some 400 people took part, did not give rise to any incidents. A strong police contingent watched it closely from beginning to end, and helped by the organisers, prevented an Arab student from throwing himself at the closed gates of the U.S. Embassy.

Demonstrations are forbidden in China, but the organisers had received permission to march in turn to the U.S. Embassy, the Lebanese Embassy, the United Nations office, and the office of the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO).

In the last two years several similar demonstrations by foreign students have taken place, including one in front of the Soviet Embassy the day after the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan and, last year, in front of the U.S. consulate in Shanghai over the Middle East issue.

The American diplomatic mission, in the part of Beijing reserved for embassies, was surrounded by a strong cordon of soldiers, policemen and plainclothesmen policemen with walkie talkies.

The students handed over two petitions to an embassy official, one signed by students from about 50 countries and the other by Arab students, protesting against "American-Zionist connivance in the continuing strategy of annihilation of the Palestinian and Lebanese people".

The petitions proclaimed the solidarity of the foreign students with their Palestinian colleagues studying in Chinese universities, who have just left China in response to a PLO appeal ordering them to join those fighting the Israelis.

Marching behind the PLO flag and a picture of central Palestine Leader Yasir 'Arafat, to cries of "Yes, yes PLO. Down, down Israel. Down, down U.S.A.", they went next to the Lebanese Embassy where a delegation handed over the text of the petitions to Charge d'Affaires Wajib A.Samat.

The Lebanese diplomat used the opportunity to affirm: "The United States are responsible for the invasion because they support Israel".

The demonstration then moved on to the U.N. office, where they also handed over their petitions to a colleague of the represent tive Nessim Shallon.

The demonstration ended at the PLO office where participants were welcomed by the office head at-Tayyib 'Abd ar-Rahim Mahmud, together with the Libyan Ambassador Abadalla A'. Al-Harari and the Yemen Arab Republic Ambassador Muhammad al-Wadidi.

Mr. Mahmud made a speech denouncing the Israelis' "barbarous and fascist aggression", adding "we shall do in Beirut what the struggle against the Nazi aggressor did in Paris and Stalingrad".

The demonstration attracted a number of curious Chinese spectators, but when at one point some of them got too close to the demonstration, police officers with truncheons at the ready immediately set up a cordon to stop them getting through.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS FATAL SHENYANG RAIL CRASH

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Three passengers died and 147 others, including four crew members were injured in a recent railway accident, about 43 kilometers outside the northeast China industrial city of Shenyang, today's PEOPLE'S DAILY reports. The No. 193 passenger express from Jinan, capital of Shandong Province, en route to Jiamusi in Heilongjiang Province jumped the tracks at Xinglongdian station at 16:05 hours May 28. Extensive damage was done to a locomotive, four passenger cars and a caboose, as well as to a second locomotive, five other cars, another wagon, some tracks and switches, involving a total estimated loss of around 1.7 million yuan. Traffic on the line was cut for almost 20 hours.

Subsequent investigations revealed that the direct cause of the accident was dereliction of duty, that the rail maintenance workers involved violated labor disciplines and operational regulations, the paper says.

Shortly after the incident, the paper adds, leaders of the railway administrations in Jinzhou and Shengyang rushed to the spot to organize rescue efforts and supervise repair work. A suit has already been filed against those who are directly responsible for the accident. In a directive given June 15 on a report submitted by the Ministry of Railways on the incident, the State Council urged the ministry to mobilize all railway workers to do everything possible to prevent future accidents on China's railways. It said that the new leadership of the ministry was right when it asked for disciplinary action. However, it added, no disciplinary action would be taken against it in view of the fact that it had taken over the job for merely a few weeks.

ARTICLE VIEWS PLANNED ENTERPRISE TRANSFORMATION

[Article by Liu Lixin [0491 4409 2946] and Tian Chunsheng [3944 2797 3932]: "Strengthen Planned Guidance Over Renewal and Transformation of Enterprises"]

[Text] By calling for stronger planned guidance over enterprise renewal and transformation, we do not mean that renewal and transformation programs must all be included in state plans. Nor do we mean that depreciation funds and the deducations from enterprise profits must be budgeted and used in a concentrated manner. Instead, under unified plans, their use must be marked with areas of emphasis, must be systematic and planned and not be free and casual.

As far as renewal and transformation funds are concerned, ways of drawing on and using such funds for renewal and transformation are not balanced. First, the depreciation funds drawn on by enterprises must always reach a certain amount before they can be applied to transformation. They assume the form of surplus funds before they are used. Second, for newly commissioned enterprises (or projects), the amount that can be drawn on depreciation funds is bigger than actual expenditures, and is thus excessive. On the other hand, those old enterprises which have used up the amount available from depreciation funds and which now need money, do not have enough to meet their needs. Third, the expenditure for trades and enterprises selected by the state for transformation exceeds the amount available from depreciation funds, while those not in urgent need of transformation find the amount available in excess of their expenditures. These imbalances should be redressed through plans. Such means as financial management and banking should be used to organize funds to meet the needs of all parties concerned.

For many years, apart from the depreciation funds drawn upon by our enterprises for renewal and transformation, the state has also rendered support in the form of financial allocations and bank loans. These allocations and loans are actually also depreciation funds. This represents one way of using funds according to priority, as adopted by the socialist state.

At present, apart from the depreciation funds, there are sources of money for the renewal and transformation of enterprises, such as the production development funds as part of deducations from profits, borrowed foreign capital, converted consumption funds in some cases, and so forth. It is not a bad but a good thing to have many sources of money. But we must make overall arrangements, seek a balance where material resources are conferned, and use such funds in a planned and guided manner. Like capital construction projects, renewal and transformation, especially where key transformation projects for major and medium-sized enterprises are concerned, also call for the study of possibilities, surveying, design and construction. We must first be assured of the necessary manpower, material and financial resources. After these projects are put into operation, we must seek a balance where the supply of energy, raw materials and transportation and the sale of products are concerned. Even for simple equipment installed again or additionally bought, we must arrange production schedules and achieve an appropriate balance in all respects. Therefore, renewal and transformation should be combined with new construction and expansion, so that the whole scale of investment can be brought in line with national resources. In no way can we repeat the previous mistake of excluding renewal and transformation from investment plans and the scale of construction, thus losing control of the front and suffering a drop in economic returns. In light of the needs of the national economy, we must bear the whole situation in mind and distinguish between urgent and less urgent projects. We must take the improvement of socioeconomic yields as a basis and make overall arrangements.

As far as the readjustment of the economic structure is concerned, renewal and transformation should go hand in hand with the readjustment of the structure in a well-coordinated manner. For example, the Shanghai automobile works is a factory in our country chiefly producing sedans. It had designed a new sedan that consumed 30 percent less fuel than the existing version and 47 percent less than the jeep. Several years ago, the need for renewal and transformation was urgently felt. But the enterprise had no money. This called for overall arrangements and a solution in a planned manner. Also, in seeking renewal and transformation, Ningbo municipality first reorganized enterprises. It closed down and converted 68 enterprises (one-fourth of the total) whose products did not sell well, whose consumption of energy and raw materials was high and whose economic yields were poor. On this basis, overall arrangements for rejuvenation and transformation projects were made. Money was concentrated on projects where it was most needed. Relatively satisfactory investment results were achieved. This approach should be promoted.

The composition of investment has a great effect on the economic structure. An irrational economic structure is a problem that calls for gradual solution through readjusting the targets of investment in a planned manner. At present, the state's main targets of rejuvenation and transformation are: reduced consumption, especially that of energy; the development of a variety of products; the development of raw and other materials in short supply; the improvement of railroads, communications, posts and telecommunications; the strengthened technical transformation of the machine-building industry, and the proper handling of the business of comprehensive utilization. The proper handling of these priority items plays a very important role in improving economic returns and readjusting and developing the national economy. It will of course not do to just let various enterprises act spontaneously in solving such problems. Subject to the limitations of their role, enterprises often fail to take a look at the whole situation and to avoid losses arising from blind construction and duplicate construction.

Renewal and transformation also involve a problem of construction as part of a series of projects, or construction in a synchronized manner. Renewal and transformation can mean expanding the scale of production through increasing the productivity of fixed assets. This calls for solving the problem of linking up renewal and transformation construction projects. At present, the problem of construction being taken up not as part of a whole series and not in a synchronized manner is quite universal. The effort to increase the television set production capacity in the past 2 years is a case in point. Some areas had produced the main parts for televisions. But other components were put into production only half a year later. No arrangements had been made for the production of raw materials required for the components. This made it necessary to draw on imported components. Some other areas also arranged for the glass casing production line to go into operation 3 years later than the kinescope production line. Such problems have mainly arisen from poor planning and improper attention to linking things up. These problems have also existed between trades. At present, the management system in our country is irrational. There is a lack of organic links between areas and between trades. Failure to strengthen planned guidance over renewal and transformation will naturally give rise to lots of problems. Three petrochemical industry enterprises in Hunan had their petroleum industry enterprises in Hunan had their petroleum and chemical sections separately supervised by petroleum and chemical industry departments, which each take their own course seeking to "fill up the gaps" and "carry out technical transformation." As a result, the oil and gas resources have not been put to the fullest use, causing a big waste.

The renewal and transformation of enterprises must alsobe linked up with, and is inseparable from, urban construction and urban transformation. There are many lessons in this respect. Through seeking renewal and transformation to develop production, Shanghai Municipality has scored great achievements. But due to lack of unified planning and arrangements, it has often gotten involved in the transformation of a single production link, causing imbalances in various other fields. As far as a department in a given period is concerned, production has gone up. But the imbalance has become ever more serious.

To strengthen planned guidance over renewal and transformation is mainly to strengthen planned guidance as a whole. The state has its unified renewal and transformation plans, a region has its regional plans, trade has its own plans, and an enterprise also has its own plans. We must enable the plans in all fields to link up organically and bring enthusiasm in all fields into full play. Concerning funds, we should allow the state special banks in charge of investment in fixed assets to manage renewal and transformation funds in a unified manner. Various funds to be devoted to renewal and transformation should be kept in the special banks, which will make overall arrangements for their use and exercise proper supervision. Enterprises must first draw on their own funds. Only if they do not have enough will an appropriation or loan be granted to them in light of the actual conditions of the project involved. This not only helps the thorough realization of the renewal and transformation plans but also allows the use of the economic lever of banks to help enterprises enliven the economy. This is a very important link in the effort to strengthen the management of renewal and transformation plans.

IMPROVEMENT OF PRODUCT QUALITY STRESSED

OW160645 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Station commentary: "Improve Quality; Lower Production Costs"]

[Text] A leading comrade of the State Council recently pointed out that the most important task for the enterprises is to improve the quality of products and lower production costs. It is impossible to improve economic results if quality is not given priority.

In the last several years, China has steadily improved the quality of most of its products. However, there are also some products whose quality has deteriorated.

According to statistics of the departments concerned, the quality of one-fourth of China's products produced in the first quarter of 1982 is not as good as that of products produced in the first quarter of 1981. Leading cadres at all levels of the industrial front should seriously ensure good product quality in accordance with the suggestions made by the leading comrades of the State Council.

An important cause for unstable or worsening quality of products is that some departments and enterprises concentrate on quantity alone and overlook quality. In particular, the output of marketable goods is increasing rapidly, but insufficient attention is being paid to their quality. There are some poorly managed enterprises in which the rules and regulations need improvement and the new workers are of low skill level. In order to improve the quality of products, we must make great efforts to change this situation.

First of all, the enterprises should firmly establish the notion of quality first. The quality of products concerns whether an enterprise can survive and develop itself and whether its products have competitive power. It also concerns whether the enterprise is seriously holding itself responsible to the people. Therefore, improving the quality of products is the key to improving the economic results of an enterprise. If an enterprise has grasped this key, it will have high hopes and achieve general progress, because the improvement of the quality of products will lower the rejection rate, thus reducing the production costs and further improving economic results.

Secondly, we should actively and firmly exercise overall quality control, launch campaigns for products of superior quality and strive to develop new products.

Thirdly, we should establish a strict system of rewards and punishment. The enterprises and individuals that produce products of good quality should be commended and rewarded. Those who cause major quality defects, neglect duty or create difficulties for or even beat quality control inspectors should be duly dealt with. Those who violate the law should be punished according to the law.

The question concerning the quality of products is a question concerning all departments. The economic departments at all levels should put it above everything else and work in a down-to-earth way to find and solve problems and make comparatively big improvements in China's products.

JOB PLANS REVEALED FOR 1982 COLLEGE GRADUATES

OW151308 Beijing XINHUA in English 1220 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Jobs will be offered to more than 311,000 college graduates and 6,200 postgraduates due to finish school this year, according to authorities concerned. The number of graduates is the highest since the founding of new China in 1949.

According to the State Planning Commission, the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Labor and Personnel, various central and local departments had asked for 700,000 students, more than double the actual number of graduates.

Especially in demand are students majoring in economics, law, English language, geology, mining, energy, mechanical engineering, construction, light and textile industries, grain, transport and communications. Priority is given to the development of these departments in China's current period of readjustment in the national economy.

Because of economic readjustment in certain fields, there will be a surplus of graduates in a small number of specialties. However, those graduates would be assigned jobs close to their specialities or administrative work and kept in reserve for future development.

To accelerate rural development, graduates from agricultural, forestry, medical and normal colleges should be mainly sent to work in counties and rural people's communes.

It is said that necessary measures will be taken to encourage more graduates to work in the remote and mountainous areas, usually inhabited by minority nationalities.

Chinese colleges are divided into three categories -- those run by local authorities, by the Education Ministry and by other ministries under the State Council. Job assignments are decided in relation to the needs of the three divisions.

LEADERS ATTEND LI YIMIN'S MEMORIAL MEETING

OW150547 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1548 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 14 Jun (XINHUA) -- Li Yimin [2621 6654 3046], fine CCP member, member of the Fifth CPPCC National Committee and adviser to the Political Department of the PLA General Staff Department, passed away in Beijing on 5 June 1982 as a result of illness which failed to respond to medical treatment. He was 78 years old. A memorial meeting for Comrade Li Yimin was held today at the auditorium of the Babaoshan cemetery for revolutionaries.

Comrade Hu Yaobang paid his last respects to Li Yimin's remains and presented a wreath.

Wreaths were also sent by Ye Jianying, Deng Xiaoping, Chen Yun, Nie Rongzhen, Xu Shiyou, Chen Muhua, Su Yu and He Changgong and the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, the CPPCC National Committee, the various PLA general departments and the Zhejiang Provincial CCP Committee.

More than 600 people attended the memorial meeting including Yang Shangkun, Wei Guoqing, Yang Dezhi, Wang Ping, Li Zhimin, Zhang Zhen, Wu Xiuquan, He Zhengwen, Liu Huaqing, Chi Haotian, Gan Weihan, Huang Yukun, Yan Jinsheng, Zhu Yunqian, Shi Jinqian, Hua Nan and representatives of cadres and fighters of organs under the General Staff Department and Comrade Li Yimin's friends.

Yang Dezhi presided over the memorial meeting; Zhang Zhen delivered the memorial speech. Zhang Zhen said: Comrade Li Yimin joined the CCP in September 1925. He was a veteran party member who engaged in the patriotic student movement and revolutionary armed activities during the early period. He was an active participant in the first revolutionary civil war and the Nanchang uprising. He was arrested and thrown into prison by the Kuomingtang reactionary clique in the spring of 1928. Under dangerous conditions of enemy intimidation and inducement, cruel torture, beatings and life imprisonment, he remained filled with revolutionary optimism, convinced of communism, faithful and unyielding, displaying the sublime revolutionary integrity of a communist. During the war of resistance against Japan and the liberation war, he held positions as director of the political department of the third branch of the Chinese People's Anti-Japanese Military and Political College, director of the Propaganda Department of the Political Department under the Hebei-Rehe-Liaoning Military District, and member and concurrently secretary general of the standing committee of the financial and economic planning committee under the Northeast People's Government; he did his share in the liberation cause of the people throughout the country. After the founding of new China, he held posts as deputy director of the political department of the public security units, director of the Political Department directly under the Military Commission, chief editor of JIEFANGJUN BAO and director of the Cultural Department of the General Political Department and made important contributions in propaganda and cultural work in our army. During the 10 years of chaos, Li Yimin showed profound hatred toward the perverse acts of Lin Biao and the gang of four; he sympathized with those comrades who fell victim and supported and helped them in many ways. He resolutely supported the line, principles and policies laid down since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and the resolution of the 6th plenary session, upheld the four fundamental principles and earnestly fulfilled the various tasks assigned by the party. His was a revolutionary and militant life.

CPPCC MEETING DISCUSSES DRAFT CONSTITUTION

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Leaders of democratic parties gave their support today to the draft of revised constitution of the People's Republic of China at a C.P.P.C.C. National Committee meeting.

Ye Duyi, standing committee member of the Central Committee of the China Democratic League, said the draft's preamble, stipulates: "The Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, as an important organizational form of the united front, has played an important historical role in the past, and in the future will continue to play its important role in the political and social life of the country, in the activities for friendship with foreign countries, in socialist modernization and in struggle to uphold national solidarity and unity."

Ye, 70, relating his own experience, reviewed the historical role of the C.P.P.C.C. He participated in drawing up the C.P.P.C.C. Common Program (China's provisional constitution) adopted by the first session of the C.P.P.C.C. in September 1949, the first Constitution in 1954 and the current draft of the revised constitution.

He said that during the initial period after new China was founded, the C.P.P.C.C. functioned as an organ of power in restoring the nationaleconomy and carrying out socialist transformation. After the First Session of the National People's Congress in 1954, the C.P.P.C.C. played a major role in uniting the people, encouraging all to work for realization of national targets and developing international activities, he said.

Sun Xiaocun, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the China Democratic National Construction Association, said the role of the C.P.P.C.C. is to represent the people and its members include representatives of such groups as the Communist Party, democratic parties, non-party persons, people's organizations, minority nationalities and returned Overseas Chinese. He said: "The C.P.P.C.C. can play a distinctive role in political consultation. Since the founding of new China, the Communist Party and the people's government have correctly handled many complicated vital problems through political consultation."

Supervision is another task, Sun said. He said the C.P.P.C.C. is not an organ of state power and has no right to supervise the government, but it is a channel through which the people administer state affairs.

He said the C.P.P.C.C. supervises through criticism of and proposals on state affairs and by the enforcement of the constitution and laws.

Cai Xiao, standing committee member and deputy secretary-general of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee, said the draft's preamble on the C.P.P.C.C. praises the practical activities of the C.P.P.C.C. during the past 33 years. He said the C.P.P.C.C. is playing a greater role in consulting and discussing state policies and principles, in political life and economic construction of the country. The Fifth C.P.P.C.C. National Committee has 2,554 members who represent 29 circles in the nation.

Cai, who is also chairman of the council of general office of the Taiwan Democratic Self-Government League, said the C.P.P.C.C. also played an important role in developing people's democracy and in contacting people of all walks of life. He said: "Over the past four years, its 15 working groups held 300 meetings collecting people's opinions and propagating state policies, and sent members to more than 20 provinces and municipalities to study the country's economic system, urban construction, education, relic protection, environmental protection, employment and the implementation of policies on united front work."

He said, since August 1978, over 47 million words and 4,000 pieces of historical accounts have been collected and about 3 million copies of such accounts and 880,000 copies of memoirs have been published.

The C.P.P.C.C. sent delegations to Yugoslavia, Romania, the United States, Japan and West Germany and received delegations from Yugoslavia, Romania and Jordan.

Qu Wu, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Revolutionary Committee of the Chinese Kuomintang, said the draft points out: "In the long years of revolution and construction, an extensive united front has been formed, led by the Communist Party of China, participated in by various democratic parties and people's organizations and embracing all socialist working people, all patriots who support socialism and all patriots who stand for the reunification of the motherland. This united front will continue to become stronger and grow."

This is of historic significance, said Qu, who participated in the two cooperative efforts between the Kuomintang and Communist Party. He recalled the important role of the united front in the Chinese revolution. "The results of the two cooperative efforts showed that the united front is one of the three magic wands of the Chinese revolution," he said.

The first cooperative effort was during the first civil war, which overthrew the northern warlords and won victory for the northern expedition, and the second effort led to the defeat of the Japanese imperialists and victory in the anti-Japanese war, Qu said.

He said in the new historical period, the united front is still a magic wand of the Communist Party. Qu said he hoped that the Taiwan authorities will participate in the united front and, together with the people all over China, work for the reunification and the modernization of the country.

Today's meeting was presided over by Liu Lantao, vice-chairman of the C.P.P.C.C. National Committee.

SOCIAL SCIENTISTS DISCUSS DRAFT CONSTITUTION

OW151130 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1647 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 14 Jun (XINHUA) -- In discussing the draft revised constitution, some noted scholars of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences pointed out: People throughout the country are now discussing the draft revised constitution. Social scientists should pay attention to studying the theoretical questions raised during the discussion in order to contribute to formulating a new, flawless constitution.

Experts attending a 12 June forum on the draft revised constitution stated their views on the draft. Liu Guoguang, deputy director of the Economics Institute, said: The draft revised constitution has raised many theoretical questions in the political, economic, legal, cultural and other spheres which call for us to do deepgoing research and scientifically expound and prove them under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

Sun Shangqing, deputy director of the Economics Institute, held: In accordance with the draft revised constitution, our country's socialist economic structure is based on public ownership, and various economic sectors and various forms of economic management will coexist. This is of great significance in overcoming some deviations in the theoretical research of the preceeding period such as the ideas of negating the leading role played by the state sector of the socialist economy and of being over-anxious in making the production brigade the basic accounting unit in collective ownership, as well as inaccurately appraising the role of the individual in urban and rural areas.

The draft revised constitution also stipulates that "the state plans the national economy on the basis of socialist public ownership." This gives expression to the most fundamental characteristic of the socialist economy which is conducive to overcoming the view of inappropriately stressing the role of market regulation in the study of economic theories.

Qian Junrui, director of the World Economics Institute, expounded our country's policy of opening to the world as prescribed by the draft revised constitution. He held: In modern times, it is historically inevitable that economic relations will develop between countries. Our policy of opening to the world is unquestionably correct. Although we will have to pay a price for this policy, it will serve the purpose of consolidating and developing our country's socialist economy. We implement the policy of opening to the world on the premise of independence, equality and mutual benefit. Under no circumstances will international capital be allowed to encroach on our country's sovereignty and violate its laws.

Linguistic and ethics experts discussed the importance of education in communist morality and culture as stressed in the draft revised constitution. In their speeches Lu Shuxiang, director of the Linguistics Institute, and Li Qi, deputy director of the Philosophy Institute, held: Education is necessary for building a socialist material civilization and it is indispensable for building socialist ethics. Superstitions which have occurred in some localities are a reflection of cultural backwardness and the ignorance of the masses. The draft revised constitution stipulates that the state promotes the planned development of education and that citizens have the right and obligation to receive an education. The draft also specifically provides that the basic principle of communist morality is to "promote the virtues of love for the motherland, the people, labor, science and socialism." This is absolutely necessary. It is of great significance for carrying on the struggle against the corrosive influence of capitalist ideas and for promoting communist consciousness and ethics among the people in the new situation in which contacts between our country and the capitalist world have been increasing day by day.

At the forum experts also expressed their opinions on establishing the socialist relations among all our nationalities and strengthening socialist democracy, the socialist legal system, the study of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and the education of young people in patriotism as well as on the reform of the political system. They also made some suggestions on revising and complementing some articles of the draft revised constitution. Li Xin, Li Xueqin, Wen Jize, Wang Shuwen, Fei Xiaotong, Yan Jiaqi and Zhang Zhonglin also spoke at the forum. Mei Yi presided over the forum.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS NANHAI COUNTY'S EXPERIENCE

[Commentator's article: "Advance Firmly as Nanhai County Has Done"]

[Text] In August last year, we published an editorial and a newsletter passing on the experience of Nanhai County, Guangdong, in enlivening the rural economy. Since then, this county, which has become prosperous earlier than most other counties in the country, has taken another step forward. Its total agricultural and industiral output value last year amounted to 1.26 billion yuan, an increase of 91 percent compared with 1978. Its contributions to the state continue to increase. The per-capita income of commune members from the collective was 374 yuan, an increase of 100 percent compared with 1978. If the per-capital income of about 100 yuan from household sideline production is included, the yearly per-capita income was nearly 500 yuan. How inspiring this is! The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee put forth that some localities with more favorable conditions should be allowed to speed up their production and become prosperous first. With several years' efforts, Nanhai County has become initially prosperous. There are a number of similar brigades, communes and counties with relatively favorable conditions that have also become prosperous one after another throughout the country.

As mentioned in documents on agriculture issued by the third plenary session, this is a good thing. They have played an exemplary role and have given great impetus to the whole country, encouraging millions of peasants to work harder and carry out meticulous management in order to shake off poverty as early as possible and to embark on the socialist road of common prosperity as Nanhai County has done.

One important experience of Nanhai County in boosting production is that it has followed the agricultural policy formulated at the third plenary session resolutely readjusted the internal structure of its agriculture by shifting monoculture of grain to an overall development of the rural economy -- firmly grasping grain production and the work of developing a diversified economy at the same time -- and made a breakthrough in developing production in an overall way. In the past 2 years, various localities have acquired a common understanding through practice. As far as giving guidance to production is concerned, in order to speed up agricultural development and to enliven the rural economy, we must do a good job in effecting two changes. One is to change the practice of grasping only grain production to developing a diversified economy. The other is to change the practice of paying attention only to water conservation to paying attention to water and soil conservation and to improving vegetation as well. This is an important experience acquired at a high cost. The leading comrades of Nanhai County have proceeded from reality and have concentrated their efforts on developing grain production and a diversified economy simultaneously. They have broken through the prohibited zone and have united the "leftist" rope which bound the peasants hand and foot. They have helped and also supported the production brigades and communes in tapping the potential of various resources such as land, manpower and materials. Hills, streams, grass, trees, flowers, birds, fish and worms have all been utilized. In the past few years, more production channels have been opened up, more and better ways for increasing production and income have been found, more material wealth has been created through hard work and the commodity economy has been rapidly developed. In the past few years, the country's agriculture, sideline production and industry have been developing at a relatively high speed.

Of course, the change from grasping only grain production to grasping the development of a diversified economy does not mean slackening the efforts for grain production. The moment the development of a diversified economy is put forth, some localities try to reduce the area for grain crops and to lower the procurement quota for grain. This shows that this change has not yet been correctly understood. The reason for changing the situation of grasping only grain production is not to weaken grain production but to rationally use the natural resources and manpower of respective localities, to open up new production channels and to make grain production and other branches of production develop together and promote each other. In the past 2 years, the diversified economy in Nanhai County has been greatly developed and its total grain output has also been increased year after year. This year, there are 500,000 mu of land for rice-planting which is the same as last year. The increase of grain production has provided prerequisites for extensively developing a diversified economy.

Many complicated problems are bound to occur in developing commodity production and enlivening the rural economy. What should be the correct attitude towards various new problems which emerge under new situations? Nanhai County has found solutions to them in its advancement. County leading cadres stay at a selected grassroots unit to make investigations, acquire firsthand material, sum up experiences in good time and strengthen ideological education among cadres and the masses. They pay attention to distinguishing right from wrong in work and drawing distinctions in accordance with the party's policy. They persist in what is correct and correct what is not in conformity with policies or decrees. In this way, they make the best use of the situation and guide the rural economic activities of the whole county along a path of healthy development. At present, there are some comrades who do not try to carry out careful investigation or analysis but resort to their old ways of "checking, blocking and struggle" which dampen the peasants' enthusiasm for production, and the rural economy which has just been enlivened is again turned into a pool of stagnant water. This practice does not enjoy popular support at all.

The thoroughgoing reforms carried out in our country's rural areas in the past few years are virtually a relatively major readjustment in the production relations. During this reform which involves millions of peasants, the situation of all the rural areas is favorable. The rural economy has begun to become lively. Although powerful leadership has not yet been formed in some localities, the reform there is still being carried on in an orderly manner and production is apparently increasing. This proves that this reform enjoys the full support of the peasants. During the reform, problems have also occurred in some localities. This is not strange at all. When problems occur in our advancement, we should not stand aside and make criticism. Nor should we be indifferent to them and abandon or slacken leadership. We should go among the masses and together with the masses, enthusiastically and carefully study the new situation, solve the new problems and guide the masses to resolutely make further progress in the direction of enlivening the rural economy. The gratifying achievements of Nanhai County indicate that Chain'as agriculture is promising and has great potential. We should follow the example of the comrades in Nanhai, exert ourselves, strengthen our faith and take an even greater and better step forward in developing the rural economy.

HONGQI CARRIES WANG SHOUDAO REPORT ON GUANGDONG

HK151035 Beijing HONGQI in Chinese No 11, 1 Jun 82 pp 9-13

[Article by Wang Shoudao: "Grasp the Building of Material Civilization With One Hand and the Building of Spiritual Civilization With the Other"]

[Text] Editor's note: We commend this investigation report to the readers. With circumstances permitting, the veteran comrades pay visits and carry out investigations in the lower levels each year and meticulously compile written reports afterwards. It is a very good sign and should be encouraged in a big way. By so doing, first, they will be able to keep in close touch with the actual conditions, and better propagate and implement the principle, lines and policies of the CCP Central Committee; second, they will be able to discover certain problems and put forth suggestions — this is the most practical advisory work; third, taking the lead in so doing, the veteran comrades pass on their valuable experience to the cadres in power and particularly, the younger cadres. [end editor's note]

This spring I carried out an investigation of factories and villages in the municipalities of Guangzhou, Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Zhongshan, Xinhui, Jiangmen, Foshan, Nanhai and Conghua. I held discussions with a number of responsible comrades of the province and the prefectures, municipalities and counties and also with rural cadres. I also visited a number of workers' and peasants' homes. I noticed that, in recent years, in the field of economic construction, Guangdong has achieved a faster rate of growth and higher economic returns. The political situation is also getting better and better. There have also been improvements in the party style, social climate, and public order.

Economic Construction Is Steadily Developing

In the past few years, Guangdong Province has seriously implemented the central authorities' guiding principle on further readjusting the national economy and their decision that Guangdong should practice a special policy and flexible measures in its external economic activities. Proceeding from Guangdong's actual situation, the province has handled relatively well the relationships between centralized control and enlivenment of the economy, between advance and retreat, between readjustment and restructuring, and between expansion of external economic activities and economic readjustment and development. As a result, steady development of the province's economy has been promoted.

1. Agricultural production is steadily developing. In promoting agricultural production, Guangdong Province has linked the functioning of the superiority of the collective economy to the mobilizing of the individual's initiative, by means of continuously perfecting the agricultural production responsibility system, and thus has added strong driving force to the development of the rural economy.

Under the guidance of the state plan, the province has readjusted its agricultural economic distribution according to the local conditions, and thus has changed the relatively unitary economic structure of the past. Comparatively remarkable development has been achieved in both the diversified economy and communes' and brigades' industrial and sideline production. For example: Vigorously promoting the diversified economy in the Zhu Jiang Delta under the circumstances that the rice growing area has been stabilized; reducing the grain procurement quota for mountainous areas and the border special zones, so as to push ahead with hte development of forestry, forestry sideline production, the production of special local products and agricultural and sideline products for foreign trade such as vegetables, fish, poultry, and so on; linking grain production with surgarcane production so as to push ahead with the latter; and establishing a number of bases of commodity grain and bases of oil crops, fishery, forestry, animal husbandry, special local products, and so on, so as to gradually rationalize the internal production structure of agriculture. Last year relatively great development was recorded in industrial crops and diversification despite serious natural disasters such as floods and typhoons which caused a fall in grain output of 3 billion jin. Sugarcane output may have reached 12 million tons, an increase of more than 30 percent over the previous refining season; this was the biggest increase recorded since the founding of the state. Total value of the province's agricultural output rose by 3.3 percent over the previous year. Nanhai County scored outstanding achievements. Its total value of agriculture output in 1981 was 23.8 percent higher than in 1980. Despite a slight reduction in the grain and cocoon harvests due to natural disasters, forestry output value rose by 9.3 percent, animal husbandry by 3.3 percent, sideline production by 44 percent, and fishery production by 4.1 percent. The collective economy has developed rapidly, the political situation in the rural areas is more stable, and one of the best rural situation since the founding of the country has indeed emerged.

2. New progress was recorded in industrial production. As far as industrial production is concerned, we have readjusted the orientation of service, improved the product mix, enlarged the scope of service and realized a relatively fast speed of development in accordance with the characteristics that there are a large number of workshops in the province, the degree of flexibility is high, and that there are sufficient export facilities since our province neighbors Hong Kong and Macao, and in accordance with the market demand. As a result, development of light industry was accelerated and there was a certain growth in heavy industrial production. Last year total output value rose by 11.4 percent, with increases of 17 percent in light industry and 1.8 percent in heavy industry. Based on the experiences gained in Jiangmen, Qingyuan and other municipalities and counties where experiments on reform of the economic system have been actively and steadily carried out, Guangdong has pushed forward various forms of the economic responsibility, rights and interests, improve business and management and arouse the enthusiasm of the enterprises and the broad masses of workers. The economic returns of state-owned industry and communications enterprises in Foshan municipality previously were never very good. Profit per 100 yuan of output value was only some 5 yuan in 1979, lower than the average for the province, and also lower than the municipality's previous best level. Last year the Foshan Municipal CCP Committee vigorously popularized the experience of the Shiwan chemical industry ceramics plant in implementing the system of "four fixes and four guarantees" ("four fixes" means that the plant fixes the number of workers in the workshops, fixes equipment, fixes raw material supplies and fixes expenditure; "four guarantees" means that the workshops must guarantee quantity, quality, variety and profits). Internal economic activities among the enterprise units were carried out in accordance with estimated costs and the system of "free supply" was abolished. On completion of the task of "four guarantees" the workshops would be given a certain amount of money as a bonus. However, those workshops which were unable to complete the task of "four gurantees" would be fined in accordance with the regulations. Various other forms of the economic responsibility system were also practiced in the administrative offices. By so doing, the economic responsibility and economic interests of the internal units of the enterprises and the individual workers were made clear.

Thus, the staff and workers of the enterprises were encouraged to enthusiastically seek ways to increase production and economize expenses. As a result, distinctive economic results were obtained and large-scale increases of production and revenue were achieved. The municipality's industrial production quota was fulfilled 46 days ahead of schedule. Total value of industrial output showed an increase of 23.22 percent, while profits rose by 55.29 percent and profit turned over to the state increased by 14.4 percent. This was the highest rate throughout the province.

3. The province has actively developed external economic activities and speeded up the development of its domestic economy. The trial operation of special economic zones has not only directly provided favorable conditions for economic construction in the special zones themselves, but has also indirectly supported economic development in the interior, but has also indirectly supported economic development in the interior, stimulated joint undertakings with the interior, and expressed the complementary relationship between economic development in the special zones and the interior.

In the course of implementing its open-door policy, Guangdong has achieved three integrations. First, economic activities with foreign countries have been integrated with economic readjustment and now serve economic readjustment, thus enabling local industries to enjoy development in the course of the open-door policy and enabling their products to penetrate foreign markets and so bring their own superiority into play. Second, economic activities have been integrated with the technological transformation of enterprises and a number of enterprises have been equipped with advanced and suitable foreign technology. Third, economic activities have been integrated with the development of urban and rural public facilities. Through various channels, they have attracted foreign capital for use in education, culture, bridges, roads, and so forth. They have thus speeded up urban and rural construction. Furthermore, in cities in border regions, they have started up lawful border trade on a small scale. This has also definitely had a hand in increasing peasants' income, improving the lives of commune members and stabilizing public order in the border regions.

4. The markets are prosperous and lively and the standard of living of people in the urban and rural areas has improved. In the wake of the development of production and the increase of the circulation channels, the markets have grown more and more prosperous. Comparing 1981 with 1980, total volume of commodity retail sales rose by 15.9 percent, while purchasing power increased by 13.4 percent. There were ample supplies of clothing and utensils. Savings deposits of the urban and rural people increased by 45.7 percent over 1980, urban workers' wages rose somewhat, jobs were found for 400,000 during the year, and 5.1 million square meters of urban workers' housing were completed. Housing conditions improved to some extent.

The peasants' income from collective and domestic sideline occupation increased to a certain extent over last year. In the rural areas new housing construction by peasants can be seen everywhere; this is a major hallmark of the improving standard of living of peasants. In the rural areas in Nanhai County, there was an upsurge in building houses. In many places both the scale and standard of construction exceeded the previous records, and a situation in which "each household prepares the materials and each brigade is engaged with construction work" existed. According to incomplete statistics for the county, the rural areas of the whole county built over 16,000 houses last year, with a total area of over 1 million square meters. Over 90 percent of them were reinforced concrete structures. Many old villages have taken on a new look. Xiaolan commune in Zhongshan County built 3,502 new houses last year (1,627 houses were reconstructed), showing an increase of 1,966 houses over the preceding year. Peasants living in brick and tile-roofed houses accounted for 93 percent of the commune's total population. Many peasants in Nanhai County have developed from purchasing the "three old things" (bicycles, sewing machines, watches) to the "three new things" (television sets, radio-cassette players, electric fans). The peasants in Xiaolan commune in Zhongshan County owned 24,069 bicycles in 1981, showing an increase of 2,922 over the preceding year; 10,681 sewing machines, showing an increase of 2,415 over the preceding year; 1,810 television sets, an increase of 835 over the preceding year; 7,416 electric fans, an increase of 5,179 over the preceding year and 2,632 radio/cassette players, an increase of 1,193 over the preceding year.

Visiting the lower levels and seeing the improvement in the life of the broad masses, we are more confident of the future of our economic development.

The Building of Spiritual Civilization Has Yielded Results

In our socialist state, if socialist ideology fails to occupy a dominant position in the society, it is impossible to ensure a socialist orientation in building material and spiritual civilization. At present, it is necessary, by centering on the task of building spiritual civilization and in the light of practical problems in work and ideology, to strive for a decisive turn for the better in party work style, social mood and social order.

First, the problem of party work style occupies an important place in socialist spiritual civilization. Guangdong implements special policies and adopts flexible measures in its external economic activities, but it should by no means be exceptional in party work style and party discipline. The open-door foreign policy and relaxation of domestic policy also chiefly refers to economic policies. We should never relax party work style and party discipline, but should enforce them more strictly. It should be affirmed that the foundation of the party work style in Guangdong Province is good. The majority of party members and cadres are loyal to the cause of the party and the people, diligent and hardworking. There are plenty of cadres who are willing to serve the people wholeheartedly and who bend their backs to their tasks until their dying day; there are also pelnty of cadres who are honest in performing their official duties and remain uncontaminated. However, owing to various complicated causes, both historical and practical, the problem of party work style has now become an outstanding problem that should be solved urgently. Due to the proximity to Guangdong of Hong Kong and Macao, the corrupt bourgeois ideology and lifestyle will definitely take advantage of the open-door policy to work their way in. In the economic sector, unhealthy tendencies and violations of the laws and discipline have been fairly serious. A considerable number of party members have committed economic errors. The proporation of economic cases in relation to the total number of criminal cases has risen. Furthermore, the amounts involved are generally quite big. Viewed from the nature of the problems, illegal activities such as speculation, profiteering, graft, embezzlement, smuggling and selling of contraband, and offering and accepting bribes are on the increase; acts in violation of financial discipline such as indiscriminate issuance of bonuses and loans, arbitrary increase of price and illicit distribution of public property as well as unhealthy tendencies such as making use of one's connections and influence have developed to some extent. What is worthy of attention is that the circumstances of some cases are serious and the methods employed are heinous. This reflects that some party members and cadres, and even leading cadres, have a prominent tendency to "think of everything in terms of money." Furthermore, some leading cadres quite obviously use their power for their own gains and seek privileges. Some leading cadres are seriously guilty of bureaucratism, are extremely irresponsible in their work and their revolutionary zeal is waning. In the rural areas, some party members participate in feudal superstitions, gambling, armed conflicts and other activities, and the situation is also quite serious. In view of the situation stated above, the Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee has mustered its strength and grasped the problem from within. With the power of a thunderbolt and the speed of lightning, it has resolutely carried out investigations and meted out punishments to those party members and cadres who have dared to flout the law and who openly take part in the smuggling and selling of contraband, graft, embezzlement, offering and accepting bribes and other violations of the law and discipline. It has spared no one, regardless of seniority. The provincial CCP committee has stipulated that CCP organizations at various levels should vigorously grasp party work style this year. It is necessary to mobilize the whole party to study again the "Guiding Principles For Inner-Party Political Life" and carry forward the party's three important work styles. It is necessary to vigorously praise good party members and cadres, expose typical examples of unhealthy party work style and deal with them seriously.

The three special zones of Zhenzhen, Zhuhai and Shantou have formulated regulations governing party and government cadres in the special zones so as to educate and check up on them. In Shenzhen, rectification of the party has been started by grasping typical cases of illegal building of houses and smuggling and selling of contraband and be dealing with them with great fanfare. This has hit out at the unhealthy trends and practices, cuased far-reaching repercussions and brought about an improvement in the social mood.

Second, a problem that merits our serious attention in Guangdong is preserving a good social mood and preventing cadres and the masses form being contaminated and corrupted ideologically as a result of the open-door policy. The Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee has repeatedly and explicitly announced that: we should absorb as well as resist capitalist elements to a certain extent. With respect to funds and technology from Western capitalist countries, we should absorb them, but we should uphold proletarian spiritual civilization, maintain and carry forward the fine traditions of our nation and the proletariat and foster a new socialist mood. Since February last year, the "five stresses and four beauties" activities have been vigorously launched in Guangdong. In the past year, especially since the second half of last year, the building of spiritual civilization in Guangdong has yielded some results and social mood and social order has started to take a turn for the better. To counter the problems of "dirt, disorder and high cost" in municipal environment and sanitation and in prices, Guangzhou municipality launched last year a "three rectifications" drive (rectifying the environment and sanitation, social order and traffic, and market prices) and, by taking this as a breakthrough in building spiritual civilization, organized several big activities. At the same time, Guangzhou municipality launched extensive education in morality and in democratic and harmonious new family relationships along with activities such as promoting new wedding styles and "learning from Lei Feng and adopting new habits." At present, the appearance of the city's 25 main streets has started to change. Some guest houses which were criticized by foreign guests in the past for their poor service have, through the civility and decorum activities, improved their work to a considerable extent. The mood of unity and mutual help and of taking pleasure in helping others has also been initially revived and carried forward. Moving examples reflecting the spirit of "a family in trouble enjoys the support of 100 families" have emerged in many localities. Last year, the activities of "five stresses and four beauties" and "three loves" (love for the motherland, socialism and the collective) were vigorously launched in the three special zones of Shenzhen, Zhuhai and Shantou. At the same time, efforts were made to improve municipal environment and sanitation, traffic and order. The social appearance is now developing in a good direction. School education has an important position in building spiritual civilization. The special zones attach great importance to conducting positive education among youths in order to inspire their patriotic enthusiasm and guide them to study hard, engage in healthy and uplifting activities and develop in an all-round way, that is, to develop morally, intellectually and physically. The atmosphere and appearance of the middle and primary schools in Shenzhen are taking a gradual turn for the better. In Shezhen's Futian junior middle school, there were only eight CYL members in April last year and the political atmosphere was weak. Since the launching of the "five stresses and four beauties" activities, many pupils have been keen on making progress politically and, by the end of last year, the school had succeeded in recruiting 71 CYL members. With the economic development in the special zones, the the spiritual outlook of the people in the special zones is also changing. The youths are very keen on studying and urgently wish to study new knowledge and technology. More young workers have registered to take part in sparetime studies and studying diligently has become the order of the day.

The Guangming Overseas Chinese electronic factory in Shenzhen has proposed the "three resistings and three promotings" drive (resisting corrosion and influence by bourgeois ideas and promoting the style of being honest in performing one's official duties and of remaining uncontaminated; resisting the influence of the bourgeois practice of each trying to cheat or outwit the other and of benefiting oneself at the expense of others and promoting the style of being concerned for comrades and taking pleasure in helping others; resisting the influences of out-and-out bourgeois egoist ideas and promoting the style of safeguarding public property and abiding by social morality) and extensively and thoroughly conducted education in upholding the four basic principles and in socialism, patriotism and collectivism.

Third,, in strengthening the socialist legal system, improving social order and defending social order, Guangdong has done a lot of work. Since last year, the party and government organs at various levels have extensively launched the "three rectifications" drive. The public security and judicial departments have made a concerted effort in promptly and severely punishing various criminals such as counterrevolutionaries and murderers, arsonists, rapists, looters, traffickers in narcotics and ringleaders of criminal gangs who seriously endangered social order. With respect to various illegal organizations and publications, obscene books, paintings, tapes and videotapes, steps have been taken to resolutely ban them in accordance with the relevant regulations, laws and decrees of the state. Works of suppressing smuggling in the border and coastal areas has also been strengthened by mobilizing the masses to report or expose offenses to the authorities. A number of cases such as smuggling and selling of contraband, tax evasion and speculation have been proved through investigation. This has dealt a severe blow to economic criminal activities. By doing so we have succeeded in consolidating the people's democratic dictatorship and further removing various factors unfavorable to stability and unity. This has contributed to the relatively stable environment in life and work throughout the province and ensured the smooth progress of industrial and agricultural production and other work. There was a turn for the better in social security as a whole last year. The healthy tendency is in the ascendant and the unhealthy tendency is in the descendent. Good people and deeds related to the struggle against bad people and deeds have emerged in large numbers. The disorderly conditions such as "the neighbors closing their doors when a household is being robbed," "all people looking on with folded arms while another is being maltreated," and "good people are bullied while bad people are overweening" have changed. Last year the incidence of crime was 18 percent less than in 1980. This included a 55 percent decline in cases of robbery. However, owing to various reasons, especially to the proximity of Hong Kong and Macao to Guangdong and to its being situation in a border and coastal area, which results in an excessive number of transient people and in a relatively complicated situation, the social order as a whole has not taken a fundamental turn for the better. Various criminal activities such as robbery, theft, gambling and mercenary marriage still continue to occur. We should still make tremendous efforts in order to check the unhealthy tendencies.

Several Questions That Merit Attention

This visit to Guangdong was very fruitful. I and other comrades who traveled with me were glad to see fast economic development in Guangdong and a promising urban and rural political situation. While carrying out inspections and discussions on our way, we gathered the following opinions:

1. When the Central Committee decided to set up experimental special economic zones in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces, it was a brand-new undertaking. We are groping our way forward. We need to continuously sum up experiences and lessons in the course of practice. Whether they are experiences of success or lessons of error, as long as we clear-headedly recognize them, they will all be beneficial to our work. The Shenzhen-Shekou industrial zone has taken the initiative by setting up special zones and has reaped distinct results. The Shenzhen-Xili reservoir resort has its own rustic flavor.

The Zhuhai-Shijingshan mountain resort has set up a strict, scientific managment system and has enlightened us much in our work. Certain of our units and organizations are overstaffed. There are more personnel than matters to be attended to. They are plagued by bureaucratism. Whenever they are confronted with work, they try to pass the buck. Efficiency is extremely low. Some people hold "iron ricebowls" and eat from a "big pot." Should they not learn from these good experiences to overcome the malpractices in their own work? Some comrades have adopted all along a negative, suspicious attitude toward the open-door policy and the experimentation with special zones. They think that the open-door policy has opened a back door for bourgeois ideology and has corrupted the party style and social climate. We are no longer in the period of remote antiquity. No country in the world can no afford to keep itself to itself. During the feudal dynasties of the Ming and Qing in Chinese history, we tried on numerous occasions to implement a "closure of ports." This was to have dire consequences on the development of our own productive forces and caused tremendous political and economic loss. The open-door policy is highly conducive to the enlightenment of people's thinking and the promotion policy will inevitably cause certain lawless elements to take advantage of the situation and carry out activities designed to sabotage socialist construction and also definitely affect the party style and social climate. However, the present problems associated with the party style and social climate are not entirely due to the open-door policy. We must both acknoweldge its side-effects and even more recognize the nature of the problem. We must have full confidence in the open-door policy and our experimentation with special economic zones. We must conscientiously sum up and continuously improve. The special economic zones must not be completely Westernized. They must not turn into second Hong Kongs or Macaos.

2. There has been a good start in building spiritual civilization and an improvement in the social and moral atmosphere. However, the development in unbalanced. What merits our attention now is that there are still many party committees and leading cadres who do not have a sufficient understanding of the significance of building spiritual civilization. Some of them think that they are too busy with their work and cannot spare time to promote the building of spiritual civilization; some of them lack confidence in building spiritual civilization, holding that "a bonus of 10 yuan is better than doing 1 year's work in grasping spiritual civilization;" some think that spiritual civilization in unable to solve problems and is like scratching an itch from outside one's boots; some think that grasping spiritual civilization is the work of the departments, and wonder why the CCP Central Committee and the provincial CCP committees should make a fuss of it. In order to persistently and profoundly launch the building of spiritual civilization, we must strengthen and improve party leadership and further enhance the whole party's understanding of building spiritual civilization. In the course of building spiritual civilization, we must strongly grasp the question of party work style, social customs and social order. We must create public opinion in a big way so that it can become regular and systematic among the masses. On the basis of extensively mobilizing the masses and improving the level of understanding, we must make the best use of the situation and formulate certain practicable facts, agreements with the masses, management regulations, rules and so forth in relation to the overall situation or certain aspects of building spiritual civilization. We must, by means of building spiritual civilization, make our people become people who have ideals, morality, culture and who abide by discipline.

3. Market prices is a major matter to thousands and thousands of families. Last year in Guangdong, procurement of agricultural and sideline products at negotiated prices and increases in the rural financial credit expenditure, workers' bonuses and transient laborers accounted for the situation in which a large number of the currency was put into operation, an excessive amount of food coupons were in the hands of the people and there was short supply of vegetables, nonstaple foods, construction materials for the rural areas, medium-size and small farm tools and other commodities.

In addition, slackened market management and increased prices of commodities have affected the livelihood of the masses and, in particular, the livelihood of a certain section of workers and staff members. The question of commodity prices is a matter of overall importance and is a relatively complicated question. We must resolutely implement the 10 regulations on stabilizing market prices issued by the State Council recently, and adopt the comprehensive measure of integrating economic and administrative methods and ideological education. The state-owned commercial enterprises must take the lead and set good examples in implementing the market price policy and strictly forbid private price increases and price increases made in disguised forms. It is necessary to seriously deal with cases in violation of the price policy and price discipline. We must punish according to law those who break the law. Governments at all levels must perfect the organs in charge of commodity prices, carry out regular inspections of the market prices, form a system and strengthen supervision by the masses. Maintaining fundamentally stable commodity prices is extremely essential to stabilizing the economy, maintaining stability and unity and improving the masses' livelihood. This must not be treated lightly.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS FORMATION OF AUDITING BODIES

[Article by Chen Xingbo [7115 5281 3134]: "Why Does the New Draft Constitution Provide for an Auditing Body?"]

[Text] The auditing system was not provided for in China's previous three constitutions. The new provision of establishing auditing bodies is to meet the needs of our socialist modernization construction.

What does an audit mean? Generally speaking, it means analyzing, examining and checking accounting books of the enterprises and institutions so that their business and financial status will be reflected and errors or irregularities in management will be discovered. Government auditing is a part of the auditing system, which means that the state enforces supervision over financial affairs. The auditing system provided in a constitution usually and primarily refers to establishing special auditing bodies by the state to make pre-, post or temporary examinations and selective examinations of the annual and usual financial revenues and expenditures of the governments at various levels, so as to discover any mistakes, and false, illegal or uneconomical expenditures in the accounting books of governments at various levels and state-invested enterprises. Auditing is an instrument for fulfilling the state budget and examining its implementation.

The financial budget in every country (that is, annual revenues and expenditures) usually consists of four procedures: drafting, examination and approval, implementation and supervision. The auditing system has become an indispensable and important link in fulfilling the financial budget in all countries, and the independence of auditing is a general rule. However, as the conditions of various countries are different, the auditing systems are also different. In different countries, the auditing organs have different names, such as auditing office, auditing court and accountancy inspecting office. The auditing organs in some countries are under the jurisdiction of the legislative organs while in some other countries they are under the administrative or judicial organs. There are also different methods in auditing, such as pre-audit, post-audit and examination (that is, temporary or free audit), and different forms, such as submitted audit, on-site audit, circuiting audit and full or selective examinations. The United States, West Germany and some other countries have also adopted a comprehensive audit, which means carrying out a comprehensive analysis and examination of the financial affairs and business activities of the government organs and offering suggestions for improvement. As the audit systems differ in various countries, the audit roles also differ in reality.

At present, the financial system characterized by unified revenues and expenditures by the state has been changed into the system of "assigning revenue and expenditure quotas separately to the central authorities and localities and assigning responsibility for task completion at various levels." At the same time, the enterprises have been granted greater decisionmaking power and the funds for localities and enterprises have increased. The extra budgetary funds of the state have accounted for 50 percent of the budgetary funds, and those of some localities are even larger than the budgetary funds. Since the budgetary funds for capital construction have been reduced and the extra budgetary funds for other projects have increased, if supervision is not strengthened, it will be more difficult to control the scope and development of national construction. This will also be harmful to the smooth development of our economic readjustment and the development of the national economy in a proportional and planned way. For many years, a method which localities and departments have used to compete with the state for investment and materials is by asking for the approval of their leaders. The problems concerning the commencement, postponement and cancellation of a project are usually decided by the leaders in charge of the work. Meanwhile, due to the imperfection of our financial systems, the laxity in discipline and the disorder in management, as well as the sabotage of the economic criminals who made use of the loopholes in our systems, our national income has been seriously affected. Originally the financial and accounting departments in various units should play the role of supervisor over the units' financial work. However, practice shows that if supervision is not also carried out over these supervising departments, the problems still cannot be solved. Since the financial and accounting departments are under the units' administrative leadership, it is difficult for them to fully carry out supervision over the units' financial work. For example, in some units the decisions on the expenditure for some important items or for importing equipment and material are usually made before consulting the financial and accounting departments. Only when problems emerge are these departments consulted. In some units the financial and accounting staff collude with the unit leaders to deceive the state. And in some other units, when the financial and accounting staff who adhere to financial and accounting regulations resist the wrong decisions of the leaders in charge of the work, the latter will ask the principal leaders to criticize them. Sometimes they are even retaliated upon for this. Besides, there are also problems in the financial and accounting departments in some units. So in the light of the actual situation in our country, it is imperative to establish auditing organs in our state organizations to carry out supervision over their financial work. It can help plug the loopholes in our financial systems, solve the problem of lax financial discipline, and rectify the unhealthy trend in the economic field, so that the funds which should be collected by the state can be collected and the limited financial and material resources can be used more rationally and economically.

Article 92 of the draft of the revised constitution stipulates: "The State Council has an auditing body to audit and supervise the financial work, the revenues and expenditures of the governments at various levels and of the financial and monetary departments and enterprises and institutions under them. The auditing body exercises its auditing and supervisory powers independently, according to provisions of the law and subject to no interference by any other administrative organs or any organizations and individuals." Article 111 stipulates: "Auditing bodies are established in local people's governments at and above the county level. Local auditing bodies at various levels exercise their auditorial and supervisory powers independently and according to provisions of the law and are responsibile to the people's governments at the corresponding levels and the auditing bodies at the higher level." These stipulations embrace the following points:

1. The duty and responsibility of the auditing bodies. The auditing bodies are supervisory organs and have the duty to audit and supervise revenues and expenditures in the financial work. The auditing body of the State Council is authorized to audit and supervise the financial work, the revenues and expenditures of the governments at various levels and of the financial and monetary departments and enterprises and institutions under them; and the local people's governments at and above the country level also establish auditing bodies to audit and supervise the local financial work and revenues and expenditures. The State Council, local governments and the enterprises and institutions under them receive income and expend moeny according to the budget and plans of the state, the localities and the units. Therefore, auditing and supervision chiefly mean the supervision over the implementation of the budgets. The government budgets are worked out by governments at various levels and implemented by the governments after they are examined and approved by the people's congresses at corresponding levels. The auditing bodies are not only authorized to audit and supervise the budgetary revenues and expenditures in the whole process from before implementation to the final accounts, but are also authorized to supervise the extra budgetary financial work and revenues and expenditures (including supplementary and temporary budgets). The stress of supervision is laid on whether the targets of revenues and expenditures are fulfilled and whether they are fulfilled in accordance with relevant laws, decrees, policies, regulations and financial discipline. The supervision over the financial work is a power entrusted to the auditing bodies by the constitution. The organs under examination should not refuse to be supervised and examined. They should provde the auditing bodies with reliable facts and true figures. When laws are violated, such as by corruption and serious dereliction of duty, and are found through auditing, they must be submitted to the judicial departments to be dealt with according to the law.

2. The principle of independence in auditing. Being a part of government organizations, the auditing bodies are also independent from other administrative departments. They exercise their auditing and supervisory powers independently, according to provisions of the law and are subject to no interference by any other administrative organs or any organizations and individuals. The stipulation of exercising supervisory power independently in the draft of the revised constitution is aimed at granting the auditing bodies necessary authority to ensure that their duties are carried out successfully. If the auditing bodies are not authorized to exercise the supervisory power independently, they will not be able to check any illegal and improper activities in revenues and expenditures. Any administrative organs or any organizations and individuals who interfere in the auditing work, by refusing to be examined, obstructing the examination, trying to make the auditing staff change the results of auditing, or bribing or attacking and persecuting the auditing staff, should be criticized or given party or administrative disciplinary punishments according to the seriousness of their cases. Criminal cases are subject to court decisions. The stipulation about the auditing bodies established in local people's governments at and above the county level being responsible to the people's government at the corresponding levels, and the auditing bodies at the next higher levels are also aimed at preventing other administrative organs, organizations and individuals from interfering in the auditing work. To those who interfere in the auditing work, the people's governments at the corresponding levels have the right to stop them from doing so and deal with their cases so that obstacles can be removed. If problems are found in the financial work and the revenues and expenditures of the governments at the corresponding levels and they remain unsolved after being pointed out, the local auditing bodies have the right to report to the auditing bodies at the next higher levels or even to the auditing bodies of the State Council and request them to solve the problems. The auditing body of the State Council has the right to audit and supervise the financial work, the revenues and expenditures of the governments at various levels and of the financial and monetary departments and enterprises and institutions at various levels.

NPC or, when the NPC is not in session, by its Standing Committee. The NPC Standing Committee also has the right to appoint and remove deputy chief auditors and auditors as well as the chief auditors of provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities directly under the central government. The important role the auditing bodies play requires that the appointment and removal of the chief auditors must be made with great care. The stipulations in the draft of the revised constitution on the legal procedure of the appointment and removal of the chief auditors are organizational guarantees for the auditing bodies to exercise their auditing and supervisory powers independently. They will effectively prevent the administrative organs and their leaders from interfering in the auditing work by appointing and removing the chief auditors. They will also prevent the responsible auditors who boldly adhere to principles and act strictly according to law from being retaliated upon.

In order to perfect the auditing system in our country, the principles provided in the constitution are certainly not enough. For example, the duties and responsibilities of auditing bodies must be made clearer and more concrete. There must also be stipulations on how to carry out the auditing work, how to deal with problems which have been discovered by audit, and on the composition of the auditing bodies and requirements for auditors. In short, we must draw up the audit law, the audit program law and the law governing the organization of auditing bodies as soon as possible so that the socialist auditing system can become a complete legal system and the auditing system can serve our socialist modernization drive more effectively.

WINTER WHEAT VARIETY — Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- A new wheat variety bred through another culture has been recently named "Jinghua No 1," according to the Beijing Municipal Academy of Agricultural Sciences. Agrotechnicians of the institute of crops under the academy said they achieved the success after years of research. The new wheat variety has been trial-grown on the outskirts of Beijing for the past 2 years. It was found to be resistant to disease and lodging (being beaten to ground by weather) and the average yield per hectare was 5.25 tons. With additional fertilizer, irrigation and good management the yield would exceed 7.5 tons per hectare, they said. Jinghua No 1 will be sown in larger areas in China beginning next autumn, the academy said. [Beijing XINHUA in English 0708 GMT 12 Jun 82 OW]

PUBLIC HEALTH WORK IN SHANDONG COUNTY DESCRIBED

[Text] Jinan, June 14 (XINHUA correspondent) -- A preview of the public health work at Yexian, where 15 developing countries are holding an inter-regional seminar on primary health care, showed it to be a typical Chinese county with no modern hospital buildings or sophisticated medical equipment.

But the people appear robust, the streets clean and the village courtyards tidy. Poplar trees and willows flank the streets and peonies and roses are in full bloom in the courtyards. Here, cholera, typhus, V.D., diphtheria and poliomyelitis are plagues of the past, and there were only 2 reported cases of malaria in 100,000 in 1981.

A cooperative medical system was first initiated in 1958 and has since been developed to cover all villages, said Liu Zhiying, director of the Yexian County Public Health Bureau.

There are now 31 hospitals with 1,000 beds and 1,500 professional medical personnel, in addition to more than a thousand clinics and 2,122 barefoot doctors servicing the people at the production brigades. In 1981 an average of 76 percent of the patients were treated at the village clinics, 20 percent more at the commune hospitals and only 4 percent difficult cases needed to be dealt with at the county level. The barefoot doctors, he said, take turns in studies sponsored by the state to upgrade their competency. An examination given last year promoted 1,623 to "country doctor" level.

In China, he explained, "prevention" comes first in public health. The mass line is adopted to mobilize the peasants in this work. The people soon realized that the elimination of mosquitos and flies must start with water purification, cleaning toilets and pigsties. Water ditches were dredged and 90 percent of the families are using self-devised pipe water for drinking. Nightsoil is now piled and sealed with mud to ferment into fertilizer. It is a positive cycle, said Yexian Magistrate Wang Zhengxiu, since with better public health and sanitation, production goes up and thus there are more funds for public health undertakings.

Yexian on the Shandong Peninsula has 88,698 hectares of arable land and a population of 833,000 people. Its industrial and agricultural output total 877.8 million yuan. The 1981 per hectare grain output, mainly wheat, corn and peanuts, averaged 7.55 tons, giving each individual an average annual income of 196 yuan from the collective, a sum free from income tax and rents. Financially, it is not difficult for the peasants to shoulder the average 3 to 5 yuan (1.63 to 2.7 U.S. dollars) per person of medical expenses involved, he added. But in some richer production brigades they are borne entirely by the collective, while in some brigades, two thirds by the collective and one third by the commune members themselves.

Summing up their public health experiences, he said, these preliminary accomplishments are credited to the mobilization of the masses, the cooperative medical system and barefoot doctors and finally the full utilization of local resources, namely the traditional Chinese medicine.

TIE YING ATTENDS ZHEJIANG CPPCC SESSION

OW141421 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 14 Jun 82

[Excerpts] The fourth session of the Fourth Zhejiang Provincial CPPCC Committee opened ceremoniously at the Graet Hall of the People in Hangzhou this morning. Present were First Secretary Tie Ying and Deputy Secretary Wang Fang of the Zhejiang Provincial CCP Committee. The opening session was presided over by Mao Qihua, chairman of the provincial CPPCC committee.

In his report on the work of the Standing Committee of the Fourth Zhejiang Provincial CPPCC Committee, Vice Chairman Jiang Ximing of the provincial CPPCC Committee said: Since the third session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee, the standing committee of the provincial CPPCC committee, under the guidance of the party's line and principles, under the leadership of the Zhejiang Provincial CCP Committee and with the close cooperation and joint efforts of various democratic parties and people's organizations, has done a great deal of work to promote further economic readjustment and political stability and unity as well as the reunification of the motherland.

After dealing with the work of the provincial CPPCC committee over the past year, including promotion of the return of Taiwan to the motherland and study of the central authorities' important documents, Jiang Ximing said: Our future tasks are to earnestly study and implement the guidelines laid down by the national conference on united front work and to further expand the patriotic united front. We should now do a good job in implementing various policies in close coordination with the party and the government.

Attending the opening ceremony were Xu Ju, He Kexi, Zhang Renzhi, Zhu Zhiguang, Chen Li, Cai Bao, Wu Youxin, Wang Jiwu, Cui Dongbo, Peng Ruilin, He Zhibin and (Huang Keyun), vice chairmen of the provincial party committee. The session held panel discussions this afternoon on the report on the work of the standing committee of the provincial CPPCC committee.

GUANGDONG: CPPCC REVIEWS INTELLECTUALS POLICY

HK160431 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1430 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Report: "Ren Zhongyi and Liu Tianfu Listen to the Opinions of the CPPCC Group Investigating the Implementation of the Policy on Intellectuals Toward the 'Three Kinds of Compatriots'"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 15 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) — First Secretary of the Guangdong Provincial CCP Committee Ren Zhongyi, Guangdong Governor Liu Tianfu and others this afternoon received the CPPCC group investigating the implementation of the policy on intellectuals toward Taiwan compatriots, Overseas Chinese and Hong Kong and Macao compatriots and listened to its opinions.

In his talks with the members of the investigation group, Ren Zhongyi pointed out that the CPPCC investigation group not only investigated how the policy on intellectuals toward the "three kinds of compatriots" was being implemented in some areas of Guangdong Province but also examined the work of the provincial party committee and the provincial government. The investigation group not only affirmed the achievements of Guangdong Province but also frankly posed problems. The problems investigated by the investigation group are highly representative and help greatly in further implementing various policies in Guangdong Province.

After concluding its investigation in Fujian on 3 June, the CPPCC investigation group reached Shantou municipality on 4 June. Its members conducted a 12-day investigation in Shantou, Chaozhou, Meixian and Guangzhou.

Huang Dingchen, head of the CPPCC investigation group, said to Ren Zhongyi, Liu Tianfu and others that the governments of Guangdong Province, Shantou, Meixian and other areas had attached great importance to the implementation of the policy on intellectuals toward the "three kinds of compatriots", done a large amount of work and achieved relatively prominent results. But he pointed out that at present, Guangdong Province's implementation of the policy on the private housing of Overseas Chinese still left something to be desired, and that the implementation of the policy toward dependents of those who had gone to Taiwan had only just begun and the task in this respect was still a very arduous one. He also put forth some suggestions to Guangdong Province.

Ren Zhongyi and Liu Tianfu immediately assigned the relevant departments to seriously handle the problems raised by the CPPCC investigation group.

Responsible persons of Guangdong Province and Guangzhou municipality who received the CPPCC investigation group included Liang Weilin and Xue Yan.

GUANGDONG LEADER ON ECONOMIC COOPERATION

HK130223 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2350 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Text] Comrade Liu Tianfu made a speech at a forum convened by the provincial government on 11 June on economic and technical cooperation. Speaking on problems in economic and technical cooperation inside and outside the province, he demanded that government at all levels set up cooperation organs and put them on a sound basis and that the responsible persons of the economic departments take the lead in going out, promote cooperation in a just and forceful way, and clear the main channels.

Comrade Liu Tianfu said: At present only about 50 percent of the province's products are covered by the state plan. We have to rely on cooperation with fraternal provinces and regions for a considerable proportion of our materials, raw materials and fuel, in order to make up for insufficiencies in the plan. However, recently some places in other provinces and regions have not understood Guangdong's situation very well, with the result that mutual cooperation channels have been cut and circulation channels blocked.

Unless this problem is solved, it will have a very great effect on the province's production this year and next and will be very bad for mutual economic development.

Comrade Liu Tianfu said: The leaders at all levels must attach importance to economic and technical cooperation and take effective measures to rapidly promote this work. At present it is first necessary to set up provincial, prefectural, municipal and departmental cooperation organs and put them on a sound basis, and send people out to take rapid action. The responsible persons of the economic departments at all levels must take the lead in going out, and clear the main channels. Cadres and purchase and sales personnel with good ideology and work style, who have scored success and made contributions in cooperation, must be promptly commended and rewarded, The leaders at all levels must spontaneously accept responsibility for past mistakes in cooperation work.

GUANGDONG TEACHERS COMPLAIN OF LOW REMUNERATION

[Text] While inspecting institutes of higher education in the past few days, deputies of the Guangdong Provincial People's Congress heard many appeals by middle-aged teachers about excessively heavy burdens and low remuneration. This must be brought to the attention of leadership departments of the party and the government.

Beginning on 9 June, the inspection group, comprising 10 people and led by Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee Vice Chairman Ou Mengjue, went successively to Zhongshan University, Jinan University, Guangzhou Physical Culture College and Huanan Normal College. When they arrived at a college or a school, they held a forum of various forms, which was attended by cadres, teachers and students. They universally listened to opinions. Many teachers said that, over the past few years, institutes of higher education have done a great deal of work in implementing the policy on intellectuals and teachers living conditions have been improved to a certain extent. At present, it is necessary to show more concern for the middle-aged and young teachers. This is an important aspect of further implementing the policy on intellectuals.

Zhongshan University disclosed that middle-aged backbone teachers at an above the lecturer's level generally have excessively heavy burdens and low remuneration. Due to low living standards, middle-aged backbone elements become old before their time and there will be no successors in many branches of learning. They urgently hope that deputies of the provincial people's congress will urge departments concerned to take effective measures to solve this problem.

XIZANG ACTS TO IMPROVE NATIONALITY RELATIONS

OW120547 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0730 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Excerpts] Lhasa, 11 Jun (XINHUA) -- According to a report by XINHUA reporters Shen Wanqi and Sun Mingzhen, the Xizang Autonomous Regional CCP Committee had adopted a series of measures to readjust and improve the relations among various nationalities and extensively and meticulously carried out its work well in strengthening unity among nationalities since its firm implementation of the directive issued by the central authorities on work in Xizang two years ago. This has brought about a fine situation in the autonomous region with the cadres and masses of all nationalities working hard together to build a new Xizang.

For the past 2 years, the main experience of the regional CCP committee in strengthening unity among nationalities has been as follows:

1. It has vigorously brought order out of chaos in guiding ideology for nationalities and eliminated the influence of "leftists" ideas on the nationality issue. It has also repeatedly disseminated Marxist-Leninist theories on the nationality issue and carried out reeducation among the people on China's nationality policy. For the past 2 years, the regional CCP committee has convened several enlarged meetings in which responsible comrades have repeatedly pointed out that the relations among nationalities in Xizang have become those among the working people after the completion of democratic reform. They called on the people of all nationalities to further strengthen unity on the new basis.

The autonomous regional CCP committee has further implemented the party's policy of self-government in national autonomous areas, reaffirming the rights of the national minority people in governing their own affairs. For the past 2 years, a large number of minority nationality cadres have been promoted to leading posts, and hundreds of patriotic personnel have been given proper jobs. The regional CCP committee has stressed that it is essential to implement the various guidelines and policies issued by the central authorities in close connection with the special characteristics in Xizang and in accordance with the principles laid down by the Constitution. The standing committee of the autonomous regional people's congress has strengthened the local legislative work. In handling all affairs, the people's governments at all levels have also taken into consideration the special conditions in Xizang and tried their best to take care of the interests and needs of the people of the Tibetan nationality. This has made the people of the Tibetan nationality realize that they have been really treated as equals in the community of the motherland. They have also understood that the party's nationality policy is sincere and consistent. This has enhanced their confidence in and their feelings for the party. Thus, they have even more consciously safeguarded the unification of the motherland and the unity among all nationalities.

2. The regional CCP committee has readjusted the economic policy, vigorously developed production, raised the people's living standards and laid a sound material foundation for the unity among all nationalities.

During the past 2 years, the government has appropriated more than 410 million yuan to help the urban and rural people in Xizang develop production and promote the Tibetan handicraft industry. This year the autonomous region has once again decided to continue exempting the peasants and herdsmen in Xizang from paying taxes in agriculture and animal husbandry for a period of 3 years. Those who live in remote districts and backward areas will be exempted from paying such taxes for an even longer period. All these measures have greatly stirred the masses' enthusiasm for production.

3. The unity among the members of the leading group of the regional CCP committee has brought about the unity among the party organizations at all levels and among the cadres of all nationalities. The regional CCP committee has emphatically pointed out: The unity among the leading bodies at all levels, particularly the unity in the standing committee of the regional CCP committee, provides an organizational guarantee in achieving unity among the people of all nationalities and resolutely implementing the directive of the central authorities.

A responsible comrade of the regional CCP committee points out: under new historical conditions, an issue regarding relations among nationalities is generally an issue among the working people. In tackling an issue of this category, we first must strengthen education on a regular basis. We must take precautionary measures and try our best to guard against disharmony. Second, when there is disharmony, we must find out the nature of the issue and the reason for creating such disharmony. In general, we must adopt the measure of criticism and self-criticism, and tackle this issue prudently and properly. Third, after the issue is solved, we must earnestly sum up our experience and draw lessons, help everyone raise their awareness and achieve new unity on a new basis. During the past few years, the Xizang Autonomous Region has carried out its work on nationality issues in such a manner. As a result, it has effectively improved the relations among all nationalities.

HEBEI RIBAO URGES INCREASE IN INDUSTRIAL GROWTH

[Reporter's roundup: "Go All-Out, Advance From Victory to Victory, Reach a Still Higher Level"]

[Text] Beginning this year, the workers and staff members of our province's industrial and communications departments have heightened their fighting spirit and made unrelenting and strenuous efforts, with gratifying achievements being obtained in the growth rate and economic returns of industrial and communications production throughout the province. From January to April, the total output of industry has increased by 9.1 percent over the corresponding period last year, heavy industry has increased by 5.4 percent and economic returns are better than last year. The profit of industries and enterprises realized in the first quarter in the local budget of the province has increased by 10.78 percent over that of the corresponding period last year, and the profits handed to the higher authorities has increased by 3.3 percent.

However, we should realize that there is still no fundamental change in the backward situation of industrial and communications production in our province. Many targets in the whole country are still rather backward and there are still many problems in carrying out the plan for increasing industrial production this year. According to the demand for "ensuring a 40-percent increase and striving for 50-percent growth" in the annual rate of industrial production, we have fulfilled only 31.9 percent of the plan for the whole year in the first quarter, and the task for the subsequent 8 months will be extremely arduous. Although there has been an improvement in economic returns, development is unbalanced and the economic returns of some trades and enterprises are still very disappointing. The qualitative and consumption targets of principal products have not been properly fulfilled, and the costs of fixed products have risen. A shortage exists in raw materials and fuel, especially in the supply of coal, electricity and oil. There is a serious drought at present and soon we will enter the high-temperature and rainy season. This will also greatly affect industrial production. Therefore, we must keep a clear head and not lose sight of the current problems in production. We absolutely cannot treat them lightly.

We must continue to thoroughly implement the guidelines of the national industrial and communications work conference and the guiding ideas of party committees and people's government at various levels. First, we must conscientiously shift the focus of work to socialist modernization centered on economic construction. Second, economic work must be shifted to improving economic results. We must constantly study and solve problems arising in production, mobilize the masses of cadres, workers and staff members, go all out, advance from victory to victory and reach a still higher level. Practice in many localities has proved that studying the experience of the Handan No 2 Construction Company and teaching the workers and staff members to have a sense of responsibility of being the master of their own affairs are effective methods of urging everyone to consciously become the master of society, fully bringing their initiative, enthusiasm and creativity into play and making contributions to the four modernizations. We hope that all units will view this work as the key to making a success of production.

We must integrate the all-round reorganization of enterprises with making a success of current production. The way has already been paved for the all-round reorganization of industrial and communications enterprises in the province. Various levels must strengthen leadership. The key lies in paying proper attention to the work of reorganizing and readjusting the leading bodies. Teams staying at selected grassroot units must do their work well and solve problems effectively. The reorganized enterprises must promote current production with speed and results. The first group of reorganized enterprises must overfulfill this year's production task and set a new standard for the targets of various economic returns.

We must use every means to achieve the plan calling for increased production and practicing economy. All prefectures, municipalities and departments must conscientiously implement the increase production and practice economy plan formulated at the provincial industrial and communications work conference, mobilize the masses and organize its implementation. Light industry must continue its big growth, and heavy industry must maintain its rising momentum. We must make an effort to improve product quality, increase variety and produce products which cater to market demands. Apart from the plan for increasing production already arranged, all enterprises with conditions and potentials should strive to increase the production of key products and products in short supply, such as food, clothing and commodities based on market demands. Enterprises with insufficient tasks should pay even more attention to strengthening market survey, acquainting themselves with market demands, promptly solving problems in production and properly arranging production. We must make energetic efforts in grasping properly the work of supplying raw materials and fuel, and material supply departments must ensure the supply of raw materials covered by the plan. Industrial and communications enterprises must adopt measures to lower consumption, economize on the use of various raw materials, properly grasp the work of saving coal, oil and electricity, strengthen management and strive to increase production and speed by practicing economy. We must do a good job of the various preparatory work to meet the high-temperature and rainy season, make a success of safety in production and guarantee fulfilling the increase production and practice economy plan for the whole year.

We must quicken the pace of technical transformation projects for this year. Technical transformation projects under construction and arranged for this year must be completed as scheduled according to plan and must bring their role into play in this year's production. There must be clear and definite responsibility for every project from selection and design to construction and operation, and there must be special people in charge from beginning to end. The department in charge must make periodic inspections of the rate of progress and must carefully inspect the completed project before acceptance.

We must actively organize the linking up of production, supply and marketing. Both industry and commerce must adhere to taking planned economy as the key link, establish the standpoint of coordinating all the activities of country like pieces in a chess game, work closely together, coordinate actions, link up production, supply and marketing, continue to develop channels of communication, guarantee the smooth progress of production and place them in the service of satisfying the needs of society. We must strictly implement the state plan. Industrial production and commercial purchasing must be carried out according to plan, contracts must be signed according to plan and work must be carried out according to the terms of the contracts.

This year, the task of industrial and communications production in our province is very heavy. We hope that the leading members at various levels will heighten their revolutionary spirit, conscientiously change their work style, go deep into the frontline of production, promptly and effectively solve problems, sum up and popularize new experiences so that everybody from top to bottom will make concerted efforts, work hard and go all out to grasp properly this year's industrial and communications production.

SHANXI AUTHORITIES HELP ENTERPRISES STOP LOSSES

HK140407 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 29 May 82 p 1

[Report: "Party Committees and Industry and Communications Departments Throughout the Province Take Effective Steps To Help Enterprises Running at a Loss To Change To Making a Profit Within a Set Time"]

[Text] Reporter Gong Gui reports: Party committees and industry and communications departments of districts and muncipalities throughout the province, after making thorough investigation and study in enterprises running at a loss and analyzing reasons for losses incurred there and other current problems, have taken steps to help these enterprises to change to making a profit within a set time. This practice has aroused the initiative of the broad masses of staff and workers and has achieved noticeable results.

Since the beginning of this year, industrial and communications enterprises in our province have been running at a loss with the volume getting higher from 1 month to another. By the end of April, there were 604 enterprises throughout the province running at a loss with a total volume of 38.84 million yuan. Recently, the standing committee of the provincial party committee made a special study of the problem of enterprises incurring financial losses. The provincial committee held that the existence of the problem of so many enterprises running at a loss had severely affected the development of the economic work of our province. This also showed that leading comrades in some economic departments had not bestirred themselves and had not exercised effective leadership and proper management. Thus the provincial committee and the provincial government issued an "urgent circular on effectively solving the problem of enterprises running at a loss." The circular urged that leaders at all levels must take resolute steps to solve this grave problem and basically change the situation within 3 months' time, that is, from June to August. Comrade Huo Shilian, the first secretary of the provincial CCP committee, giving close concern to this problem, explicitly pointed out that solving the problem of enterprises running at a loss must be treated as an important task concerning the improvement of economic results and that the enterprises running at a loss must change to making a profit within a set time. Leading comrades in charge of industry in the provincial CCP committee and the provincial government together with leading cadres in the economic council, the planning council, the financial council and other departments concerned of the provincial government conducted investigation and analysis in some large and medium-sized enterprises running at a loss. They found out the main problems there, and by means of joint consultation of all parties concerned and making decisions on the spot, helped them solve some urgent problems. Party committees of districts, municipalities and countries and local departments concerned also investigated one by one their enterprises running at a loss. They found out that the main reasons included: Some enterprises were poorly managed resulting in severe waste, big consumption and high overheads. In some enterprises, products were inferior in quality, and varieties and designs are few and excessively overstocked. In some enterprises, equipment was obsolete and production conditions were unfavorable. In some enterprises, leading groups were weak and slack in their work; some leading members were even on bad terms with each other. In some enterprises, losses were caused due to the problem of policies.

On the basis of finding out the causes of enterprises incurring financial losses, leading comrades in charge of industry at all levels took measures of specifying the responsibility of every leader to take charge of certain factories, ensuring that they made up their deficits, rectified management, upgraded product quality, lowered cost and consumption and carried out technical transformation and equipment renewal. At the same time, enterprises where raw materials were not guaranteed, products did not meet demands and losses were incurred for a long time, had to be shut down or reorganized. The party committee of Yanbei District asked all chemical fertilizer enterprises in this district to stop financial losses and increase profits by the end of June. Enterprises which cannot stop losses within the time limit will be resolutely asked to stop production and conduct reorganization. Those that still incur losses after reorganization will be shut down. Enterprises where losses are not large and can be stopped when efforts are made have been asked to change to making a profit within a set time. Management systems and measures for examining and approving subsidies to enterprises incurring losses have been tightened. Financial departments will not give subsidies and banks will not make loans to those enterprises which incur financial losses outside or over planned limits. Zhalin iron mill in Huoxian county and sevel other enterprises in Linfen District incurred a total loss of 1.06 million yuan last year. The district committee planned to close or reorganize these enterprises within this year and use their manpower, equipment and factory space to produce products that meet market demand. The Changzhi municipal committee, besides adopting the measures of setting ceilings for losses in enterprises and stopping subsidies to enterprises where losses exceed the ceiling, has laid down a system of reward and penalties for enterprises where losses are allowed in plans, so as to encourage reduction of losses and prevent losses from exceeding planned limits. The Yangquan municipal committee has laid down targets, time limits and measures for grassroots units, covering all enterprises, workshops, teams and groups.

In Luliang District, 13 coal mines incurring losses, after reorganization, reduced their losses from 770,000 yuan in the first 4 months of last year to 170,000 yuan in the same period of this year.

District and municipal authorities have also paid attention to helping technical transformation and equipment renewal in enterprises incurring losses. The Changzhi municipal committee has raised 2.6 million yuan of funds for these enterprises and used these funds maintly to finance 13 projects of technical transformation. They are now under rapid construction and will achieve results within this year. The Datong municipal committee has allocated 1.316 million yuan from the subsidy for transferring coal to other areas and applied the funds to technical transformation of enterprises incurring losses. The Taiyuan municipal committee and the Jizhong District committee organized enterprises incurring losses to cooperate and handle joint ventures with advanced enterprises in Shanghai, Jiangsu and Zhejiang, thus achieving results in a short time, some of them have even shaken off the label of incurring losses.

NEI MONGGOL RURAL ECONOMY -- According to statistics released by the regional statistics bureau, the economy in rural and pastoral areas of the region is getting better, and commune members' income from collective distribution is higher every year. Last year, per-capita commune members income from collective distribution was 93 yuan, an increase of 38.81 percent over that of 1980. The region's highest per-capita commune member's income -- 211.91 yuan -- was recorded in Alxa League. [Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 7 Jun 82 SK]

NEI MONGGOL INDUSTRIAL ACHIEVEMENTS -- Over that past 3 years, industrial enterprises throughout Hohhot municipality, Nei Monggol Autonomous Region, have scored a 6.8 percent increase in output each year, a 1.4 increase in taxes and 14.4 percent increase in profits handed over to the state. The municipal proportion of light and textile industrial production amounted to 56.4 percent of production of all industries in 1978 but 69.5 percent in 1981. The municipality has introduced 258 varieties of new products and over 1,840 categories of new design, color and packing style. Its 41 products have been appraised as fine quality. Two products have been conferred medals by the national authorities. [Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 9 Jun 82 SK]

HEILONGJIANG HOLDS MEETING FOR COLLEGE GRADUATES

[Excerpts] The provincial conference on assigning jobs for the 1982 college and university graduates concluded today after a 5-day session. It discussed and studied issues concerning policies and principles pertinent to the deployment of 1982 college and university graduates and discussed the job assignment plan.

The guidelines of the national conference on assigning jobs for this year's college and university graduates stipulate that the key points and orientations of job assignments for college graduates are centered on strengthening the production of the light, textile, energy, communications, transport and building materials departments and that in the future special attention should be paid to organizing graduates of agricultural, forestry, medical and teacher's training colleges to work on the forefront of agricultural production and to reinforce grassroots units below the county level year after year. In line with the above guidelines, the conference set forth demands on this year's college graduate job assignment work.

The conference noted: One of our province's major issues is our serious shortage in technical forces for the light and textile industries. Therefore, in assigning jobs for this year's college graduates, we must give priority to this area. During the job assignment work, we must educate the graduates to be concerned with what the country is concerned with and worry about what the country is worried about. We must urge all graduates who are qualified to work on the light and textile industrial front to volunteer to work there and to bring their talents and role into full play. Departments concerned, while employing and arranging jobs for graduates from the light and textile vocational schools, must not assign them jobs not in their chosen field of study.

The conference urged all colleges and universities to strengthen ideological and political work, do a good job on conducting education on assigning jobs for the college graduates and resolutely stop unhealthy tendencies in this regard.

HEILONGJIANG'S FOREIGN TRADE TRANSACTIONS BOOMING

SK111005 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Text] According to our sources, thanks to abundant natural resources and the day-to-day product increase of industrial and agricultural production, Heilongjiang Province has achieved rapid progress in direct transaction of foreign trade and has become the leading trade province on northern China.

Since approval by the central authorities in January 1981 on direct trade transactions with foreign countries, our province has attained steady development in foreign trade by following the principle of equality and mutual benefit and helping supply each other's needs as well as by widely opening trade channels and boosting each other closely. The province has successively established foreign trade offices in Guangzhou, Dalian and Qinhuangdao cities, which have taken up tasks such as dealing with goods storage, consigning shipments and allocating exchanges. According to the business contracts signed at the first provincial export trade fair held in Harbin in 1981, the province has established business relationships with over 1,100 traveling traders from over 100 countries or regions of the five continents. As of now, about 100 commodities of our province have been directly exported to foreign markets.

In the past, our province supplied commodities only to internal markets and was only entrusted by the coastal export cities, including Dalian, Tianjin and Shanghai, in commodity procurement and allocation. Following direct transaction of foreign trade and the steady increase of export transactions, our province has made a good start in giving full scope to the strong point of provincial natural resources and opening more production avenues of export commodities to enliven the economy.

At present, in addition to exporting special local commodities, our province has achieved an increase year after year in exporting machinery and electronic commodities as well as chemical industrial products. There are a large number of enterprises throughout the province which have scored over 10 million yuan of export value and have paved a new road toward improving the structure of export commodities and giving full scope to the strong point of the provincial heavy industrial production. In 1981, the Harbin municipal procurement volume of export commodities in machinery, electronic and chemical industries amounted to 58 percent of the municipal annual total volume. In addition, a large amount of new export commodities such as watchbands, candies, cameras, carpets, towelling coverlets and sheets have been delivered each year to markets both at home and abroad and have been greatly welcomed by consumers.

JILIN FIFTH PEOPLE'S CONGRESS OPENS SESSION

[Excerpts] The fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress opened ceremoniously this afternoon at the auditorium of the provincial guest house in Changchun. The session opened under an excellent situation in which the party and the people throughout the country are ideologically more unified, society is more stabilized, economic readjustment has scored more results and all other work has achieved new success.

The guiding thoughts of the session are the decisions of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and the spirit of the 4th Session of the 5th National People's Congress. The main tasks of the session are using the study and discussion of the draft of the revised PRC constitution as a motivating force and, in accordance with the spirit of the 1982 work outlines of the provincial people's government, to sum up work in the last year, to discuss and make decisions on major issues in our province's socialist material and spiritual civilization building and to organize the people of all nationalities in the province to boost morale, work diligently and strive to promote our province's national economy.

The executive chairmen of today's session are Li Youwen, Song Renyuan, Zhao Tianye, Xu Shouxuan, Liu Cikai, Zhang Kaijing, Wu Duo, Cheng Shengsan, Yu Ruihuang and Ren-qin-zha-mu-su. Attending today's session were (Lui Jingzhi), secretary of the provincial CCP Committee, and responsible comrades of the provincial higher people's court, the provincial people's procuratorate, various committees, offices and bureaus under the provincial people's government, municipal and prefectural people's congress' standing committees and prefectural administrative offices. All participants at the fourth session of the fourth provincial CPPCC committee also attended the session.

The work report of the provincial people's government delivered by Zhang Shiying, deputy governor of the province, consists of four parts. The first part is a review of the economic work in the past year. The second part is the major task for economic construction in 1982. The third part is the need to do a better job in building the socialist spiritual civilization. The fourth part is the need to strengthen the socialist legal system and attack serious criminal activities in the economic field and serious crimes which do grave damage to social order.

Deputy Governor's Work Report

SK130654 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Excerpts] Deputy Governor Zhang Shiying delivered a report on government work at the first meeting of the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress. He pointed out: The principal tasks for economic construction in 1982 are to steadily develop agriculture in an all-round manner, continue to execute industrial readjustment, vigorously promote enterprise consolidation, fully tap the potentials of existing enterprises and strive to improve economic efficiency, achieve a higher economic growth rate than last year, strive to balance revenue and expenditures and stabilize market prices and improve people's livelihood.

The report points out: To fulfill this year's tasks of economic construction, we must pay particular attention to the following 10 tasks:

1. Strive to reap a bumper agricultural harvest and promote agriculture, forestry, livestock breeding, fisheries, sideline production and industry simultaneously. Promoting the rural economy in an all-round manner is crucial to guaranteeing the overall growth of the national economy. We must continue to uphold the principle of relying on policy and science, fully mobilize the socialist consciousness of the broad masses of peasants and try in every possible way to combat natural disasters of every description to ensure an all-round harvest in agricultural production. Efforts should be made to stabilize and improve the responsibility system in agricultural production, readjust the agricultural structure, change the practice of one-crop farming and increase the production of commodities.

2. Enact enterprise consolidation in a down-to-earth manner by focusing on improving economic efficiency. The focal point of the work on the industrial and communications front now and in the next 2 or 3 years is to successfully enact enterprise condolidation in an all-round manner. This is also crucial to the overall fulfillment of this year's industrial production tasks, the improvement of economic efficiency and the promotion of the province's industry. We must attend to this work in a planned and gradual manner in line with the guidelines of the CCP Central Committee and State Council decision on the overall consolidation of state-owned industrial enterprises and the requirements of the recent provincial industrial conference. Focusing on improving economic efficiency, we must pay particular attention to the following points in enacting enterprise consolidation: First, earnestly attend to strengthening leading bodies. Second, improve enterprise management.

3. Further readjust the industrial structure by proceeding from the province's actual conditions. We must cultivate the ideology of taking the whole country and the whole province into account, break the bounds of different trades and unify our thinking to promote in a planned manner the trades that should be promoted and resolutely close, suspend, merge and transfer to other lines of production all the enterprises that are not managed well. Efforts should be made to control the production of goods which are in oversupply and avoid blind and repetitive construction. Efforts should be made to reform the economic system and expand the authority of enterprises. In industrial readjustment, we should continue to promote collective enterprises.

4. Fully tap the potential of existing enterprises and implement technical innovations in a planned manner with the emphasis on key projects.

5. Increase income and practice strict economy to strive to balance revenue and expenditures.

6. Link channels of purchasing and marketing and improve the work of commercial, supply and marketing and foreign trade departments.

7. Implement a labor policy in a correct manner and improve the technological levels of staff and workers.

8. Continue to promote planned parenthood and strictly control population growth.

9. Accelerate scientific and technological development and promote education to cultivate more talented people to meet the requirements of economic development.

10. Improve the people's livelihood on the basis of developing production.

Report on Economic Figures

SK130800 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Text] According to JILIN RIBAO, entrusted by Zhang Gensheng, acting governor of the province, Zhang Shiying, deputy governor of the province, made a government work report on 11 June at the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress. He said in his report: Our province's political and economic situation is getting better and better. Since the beginning of this year, a good start has been made in economic construction and various other fields. Prosperity has come to all rural places. Last year the province reaped a good harvest in agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations, fishery and industry. The agricultural output value amounted to 5.75 billion yuan, up 7.2 percent over the previous year. Total grain and soybean output reached 18.4 billion jin, an increase of 7.3 percent over the previous year and a record in the province. The rural collective economy greatly developed, and peasants' income increased. Each commune member's income from collective distribution was 144 yuan, up 22 percent over the previous year. The number of production teams whose per capita income from collective distribution averaged over 300 yuan increased from 796 in the previous year to 2,673 in 1981. Peasants in most areas began to become prosperous.

Industrial production has developed to some extent in the readjustment of the economy. Inspite of inadequate energy resources and production quotas for enterprises, the province achieved 13.39 billion yuan of industrial output value in 1981, up 0.98 percent over the previous year. People's livelihood has been improved. The 1981 wage bill for workers and staff employed in units owned by the people and collectively owned units throughout the province increased 8 percent over the previous year. The annual wages of each worker and staff averaged 775 yuan, an increase of 1.6 percent over the previous year. The province provided jobs for 367,000 people through various channels.

The purchasing power of the rural and urban population continued to increase, and more durable consumer goods were owned by them. Sewing machines, bicycles and wristwatches owned by each 100 people increased markedly. Televisions owned by the people increased 360 percent.

At the end of 1981, the savings deposits of the urban and rural population totalled 1.46 billion yuan, topping the 1980 figure by 37.3 percent and setting a record for the province. Housing conditions for the urban and rural population improved to some extent.

The province's economic work has improved this year. Since the beginning of 1982, the province has sown crops in good time and fulfilled the field crop sowing and paddy transplanting tasks according to the plan. New developments have been made in forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fishery. From January to April, the provincial industrial output value increased 6.5 percent over the corresponding 1981 period. Profits delivered to the state increased 18 percent. The provincial revenue was 8.8 percent over the corresponding 1981 period.

Socialist Modernization Needs

[Excerpt] According to our sources, in his government work report delivered at the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress, Deputy Governor Zhang Shiying pointed out the need to do a better job in building the socialist spiritual civilization.

The report states: To carry out socialist modernization, we should not only build a highly developed material civilization but also a highly developed spiritual civilization. They are closely connected to each other and are inseparable. Only when we simultaneously develop the two civilizations can we guarantee long-term development for economic construction and a socialist orientation for building material civilization. The building of socialist spiritual civilization is a great task of long-term and strategic significance. Government organs at all levels must consider it a major issue and make a success of it.

We must notice that due to Lin Biao and the gang of four's sabotage over a long period of time, the infiltration of foreign reactionary forces and the influence of bourgeois ideas and life style and tendencies such as anarchism, ultra-individualism and bourgeois liberalism still exist. Obscene paintings and books and decadent songs in our society have not been eliminated. All these phenomena are seriously polluting social practice, corrupting the cadre contingent, poisoning the people's spirit and obstructing the four modernizations. Therefore, it is imperative to build the spiritual civilization.

The report states: Mastering ideological education is the central link in building the spiritual civilization. We should mobilize all forces of our society, use all mass media and adopt different means according to different targets to conduct communist idea and ethics education in a thorough and protracted manner and carry out the ideological education of cherishing the motherland, the party and socialism in an effort to solve problems in political ideas and ethics in our society.

Report on Economic Crime

[Excerpts] According to our sources, in his government work report delivered at the fourth session of the Fifth Jilin Provincial People's Congress, Deputy Governor Zhang Shiying urged the people's governments at all levels to carry the struggle against serious economic crimes through to the end and to do a good job in consolidating public security to ensure smooth progress in the program for achieving the four modernizations.

The report stated: Since 1982 the people's governments at all levels throughout the province have earnestly waged the struggle under the leadership of party committees at all levels. Up to the end of May the province has initially exposed a number of serious economic crimes and has educated the broad masses of cadres and the people in dealing blows at key criminals by holding open trials, resulting in initial achievements for the struggle.

Judging from the problems discovered in the cases throughout the province, they are more serious than those which occurred during the 1952 movement against the three evils -- corruption, waste and bureaucracy within the party, government, army and mass organizations. Therefore, efforts should be made to remind the broad masses of cadres and the people to clearly understand that a struggle against serious economic crimes is an important manifestation of class struggle developed in the economic sector of the new historical period in Chinese socialist society. The struggle is aimed at upholding communist purity, blocking corruption and deterioration and safeguarding the socialist system. It has a vital bearing on the success and failure of China's program to achieve socialist modernization and on the rise and fall of our party and country.

In referring to the question of successfully consolidating public security, the report stated: Over the past year political and judicial organs throughout the province have done a great deal of work in maintaining social order and protecting the safety of the people's lives and property and have scored certain achievements. However, it is noted that the public security status throughout the province has not totally taken a turn for the better. Criminal activities are still rampant in some areas where criminals are swollen with arrogance. We must adopt effective measures to deal powerful blows at them.

The report stated: In doing a good job in maintaining social order, in addition to resolutely dealing blows at various crimes, it is necessary to organize forces of various circles to work out ways in ideology, politics, economy, administration and law to vigorously consolidate public security in a comprehensive manner. To enhance educational work among youths is a key link for successfully consolidating social order. We must show concern for sound growth of youths in every field. Stress in consolidating social order should be laid on doing a good job in urban work. A good job should be also done in rural public security work.

The report demanded that further efforts be made in conducting education on the legal system among the people. At present, a good job sould be done in organizing the people to disseminate and discuss well the draft of the PRC's revised constitution.

Second Day's Plenum

SK130450 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Text] According to our sources, the fourth session of the fifth provincial people's congress held its second plenum this morning. The people's deputies heard a report by (He Wentao), chairman of the provincial planning commission, on draft plans for Jilin Province's economic and social development in 1982 and a report by (Guo Hongxia), deputy director of the provincial financial office, on Jilin province's 1981 financial accounts and 1982 budget.

The executive chairmen of today's plenum were He Youfa, Yu Lin, Liu Cikai, Zhang Kaijing, (Ma Yuehai) and (Xu Shoupeng). Liu Cikai, vice chairman of the standing committee of the provincial people's congress, presided over today's plenum.

In his report, Chairman (He Wentao) pointed out: As a result of initial readjustment, our national economy has entered a phase of steady development. In 1981, under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the provincial CCP Committee, the people of all nationalities in our province firmly implemented the principles and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central committee, enacted the central principle of readjusting the economy and stabilizing the political situation and scored relatively good achievements. However, we must also notice that there are some problems in economic development which need immediate attention. These problems should be gradually solved by adopting effective measures while making arrangements for the 1982 plan and long-term plans.

In his report, Chairman (He Wentao) specifically explained the tasks and main targets of our province's plan for 1982's economic and social development and set forth 10 measures for fulfilling and overfulfilling the plan.

Deputy Director (Guo Hongxia) said in his report: Judging from the financial situation in 1981, the implementation of our spending plan has been relatively normal, but our income plan has serious problems. If we inspect our work, we will find that waste is serious, financial management is weak and there are problems in the distribution of financial resources. From now on, we should conscientiously sum up our experiences and lessons and strive to do a good job in the revenue sector.

After explaining the arrangements for our province's 1982 budget, he pointed out: It is very difficult to achieve a balance between our income and expenditures this year. But our province has great potential in increasing income and reducing expenditures and has many conditions conducive to balancing income and expenditures. So long as we brace up, work diligently and make full use of our favorable conditions, it is not impossible to achieve balance between our income and expenditures this year.

Participants at the fourth plenary session of the fourth provincial CPPCC Committee attended today's plenum. Also present at today's plenum were responsible persons of the provincial higher people's court, the provincial procuratorate, departments under the provincial people's government, municipal and prefectural people's congress' standing committees, prefectural administrative offices and country and district people's congress' standing committees.

JILIN CCP OFFICIAL DIES; LEADERS ATTEND FUNERAL

SK160250 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] According to JILIN RIBAO, Comrade (Wang Ziming), deputy secretary-general of the Jilin Provincial CCP Committee and member of the provincial CPPCC Standing Committee, died of illness in Changchun on 11 June 1982. He was 64 years old. His native place was Laishui County, Hebei Province. He joined the Chinese Communist Party in January 1939 and the Chinese revolution in June of the same year.

During his over-40-year revolutionary struggle, Comrade (Wang Ziming) was constantly faithful to Marxism, Leninism and Mao Zedong Thought and resolutely implemented the party's line, principles and policies. He was a model party member and a faithful fighter for the proletarian class. His proletarian spirit and work style deserve to be used as an example forever.

After his death, his wife, (Zhang Shiying), and his children requested of the provincial CCP committee that, in deference to his wishes, all unnecessary formalities be dispensed with in making his funeral arrangements. Leading comrades of the provincial CCP committee agreed with the request of his relatives and highly praised their revolutionary spirit.

Leading comrades, including Qiang Xiaochu, Wang Daren, Zhang Gensheng, Li Diping, Yu Ke and Song Jiehan, visited him in the hospital during his critical illness. Following his death, paying last respects to his remains were leading comrades from the provincial CCP committee, the provincial people's congress, the provincial people's government, the provincial CPPCC committee and provincial military district, including (Zhao Xiu), He Youfa, Li Diping, Yu Lin, Yu Ke, Zhang Shiying, (Liu Jingzhi) and Li Youwen, as well as responsible comrades from departments of provincial level organs, official cadres, representatives of workers and his friends.

HEILONGJIANG INTELLECTUAL POLICY INVESTIGATION -- Party committees at all levels in Heilongjiang Province are conscientiously investigating the implementation of policies towards intellectuals. In the past month or so, over 500 investigation groups consisting of 2,000 persons have been assigned to conduct the investigation. The emphasis of the investigation is on intellectuals of higher education and middle-aged back-bone professionals. Some intellectuals who used to work in positions where they could not bring into play their knowledge and proficiency have been transferred to other posts. Some intellectuals who did not have a decent place to live have also been arranged new houses. The provincial CCP committee has attached great importance to the investigation and assigned Li Jianbai, secretary of the provincial CCP committee, to preside over the investigation. In the past few days, the provincial CCP committee held 3 forums of intellectuals of different categories from 60 units. Li Lian, second secretary of the provincial CCP committee, attended the forums. [Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 May 82 SK]

SHAANXI REPORT ON IDEOLOGICAL EDUCATION

[Report: "Provincial CCP Committee Propaganda Department Stresses Stepping Up Education in Communist Ideology and Morality While Building Socialist Spiritual Civilization"]

[Text] From 26 May to 1 June the Shaanxi Provincial CCP Committee Propaganda Department held a meeting for heads of the propaganda departments of the CCP committees at the prefectural and municipal levels, and responsible comrades in charge of propaganda work of the departments concerned directly under the province. The meeting conveyed the spirit of the forum jointly sponsored by the CCP Central Committee Propaganda Department and the CYL Central Committee for a summation of "all-people decorum and courtesy month" and the spirit of the meeting for exchanging experiences in propaganda work on the industrial and economic fronts as well as the forum on theoretical and educational work under the auspices of the CCP Central Committee Propaganda Department. The participants at the meeting studied relevant speeches made by responsible comrades of the central authorities and held discussions on the building of socialist spiritual civilization and the problems arising on the present propaganda front. Comrade Chen Yuanfang, secretary of the provincial CCP committee and Deputy Secretary Comrade Bai Wenhua spoke at the closing ceremony of the meeting.

The meeting held: In various tasks on the present ideological front, efforts should be focused on upholding the four basic principles, adhering to the communist party purity, resisting and making a break with the corrosive influences of capitalist ideas, remnants of feudal ideas and of other corrupt ideas so as to fill party members, cadres and the masses of people with revolutionary enthusiasm and vigor and to step up the building of the socialist material and spiritual civilizations. This problem has now become much more prominent and important. It is because of the damages caused by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the 10 years of internal disorder that the nature of the working class -- pioneers of our party -- and the communist purity of our party members have been greatly impaired. Apart from that, after the introduction of the correct policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, we have been facing a serious struggle between corrosive elements of capitalist ideology and anticorrosive elements of socialist ideology. The class enemies, internal and external, are now resorting to different forms and means to sabotage our socialist modernization and corrupt our ranks. The current crackdown on the serious criminal economic activities is a prime manifestation of class struggle in the economic field under the new historical circumstances. We must be fully aware of the gravity of the struggle, always remain sober; correctly estimate the present situation of class struggle and properly handle the problems arising from the struggle. We must persist in the struggle between two lines. Now, we must pay special attention to checking the bourgeois liberalization tendencies from the right in the political, economic and ideological fields, while continuing to sweep away the pernicious vestige of Lin Biao, Jiang Qing and their followers and the influence of the "leftist" ideology. We must also be resolved to fight against the profit-before-everything mentality of the bourgeoisie and the survivals of feudal ideology and other decadent ideas.

The meeting pointed out: Around the central task of preserving the communist purity of our party, efforts must be concentrated on the following areas of work on the propaganda front in the second half of this year:

1. The activities of the "five stresses and four beauties must be penetratingly and persistently carried out. Concerning this, we must vigorously work for strengthening education in communist ideology and morality and cultivating people who cherish good ideals and are imbued with good moral, culture and discipline.

2. Political and ideological work must be reinforced in the enterprises such as industry, transport, communications, and finance and trade, in particular stressing a strong conviction to young staff and workers for the party and the socialist system and enhancing their sense of responsibility of being masters of the country.

3. Political and ideological work must also be reinforced in the rural areas, inculcating in peasants correct handling of the common interests between the state, the collective and the individual and putting an immediate stop to all sorts of evils such as feudal superstitious activities and gambling.

4. Publicity and education must be strengthened in rectifying the party work style. We must teach the CCP members and state functionaries to fill themselves with the party spirit, to strictly abide by party discipline and state laws and to enhance their consciousness in combating corrosive influences while dealing blows at serious economic criminals and putting right the unhealthy trends of "three recruitings, three changings and one building" [concurrently recruiting laborers, cadres and students, changing household registration from agricultural to nonagricultural, changing the status of rural youths to educated youths, and changing the status of temporary and contract workers and teachers in schools run by local people to permanent state workers and building private houses by using one's power].

5. We must bring the role of advanced models into full play, extensively and penetratingly carry out massive activities of emulating the advanced as well as vigorously encourage healthy trends and check unhealthy ones.

6. It is necessary to stick to the orientation of making literature and art serve the people and socialism and to earnestly improve the work in the literary and artistic fields so as to play a good role in the building of the socialist spiritual civilization. Meanwhile, it is necessary to adopt strong measures to resist the corrosive influences of the capitalist culture.

7. It is necessary to do well in the study and discussions of the draft of the revised PRC constitution and to arrange for cadres to continue their study of economic theory.

8. It is necessary to do a good job of ideological work in the streamlining of all organs and in the preparatory work of vocational training of cadres.

The meeting stressed: Propaganda departments at all levels should rouse to action and fully play their positive and creative roles in work under the leadership of the CCP committees at the corresponding levels. They should progressively change the feeble and slack state on the ideological front by contending for the initiative and not landing themselves in a passive position. They should make timely study and analysis of all sorts of erroneous ideological trends and unhealthy tendencies emerging in the party and society and solve these problems without delay so as to stop them in their embryonic state. Propaganda departments at all levels should persistently publicize and imbue the masses of people with communist ideas as well as incessantly raise their ideological consciousness and morality level. The focus of the work should be made on educating party members, cadres and especially the leading cadres at all levels. Discipline should be tightened organizationally and politically in the propaganda departments. Instructions from the central authorities or the provincial CCP committee should be carried out without fail. In implementing these instructions, no one must deviate and attitudes must be positive. In the course of work, efforts should be made at making study and investigation, stressing main points and knowing how to effect a breakthrough on one individual problem. Once the problem is ready to be tackled, it is necessary to grasp it firmly until it is completely solved.

XINJIANG'S DAWAMAT ON PRODUCTION CORPS REVIVAL

HK110243 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 10 Jun 82

[Radio script by Tomur Dawamat, secretary of Xinjiang Regional CCP Committee and chairman of regional people's congress standing committee: "Strengthen Unity and Work Together To Build a Rich and Civilized New Socialist Xinjiang"]

[Excerpts] The Xinjiang production and construction corps has been formally revived under the earnest concern of the CCP Central Committee. This is a major affair in the region's socialist modernization drive.

Since its establishment, the corps has followed the instructions of the Central Committee and Chairman Mao, reclaimed wasteland and guarded the border and acted as both a military and an agricultural force. It is a major force in defending the border and a combat force that is never demobilized. The corps has made major contributions in smashing hegemonist subversion and sabotage and defending the border.

The corps has been vigorously supported by the people of all nationalities in Xinjiang in the course of its establishment and development. The corps has also vigorously supported and assisted local construction undertakings. The cadres and masses and the military reclamation fighters in Xinjiang are close brothers in building and defending the borders and fighting together.

Following its revival, we believe that the cadres and workers of the production and construction corps will always remember the concern of the Central Committee and the hopes of the people of all nationalities, continue to carry forward the glorious revolutionary traditions, play their role as a production, combat and work force, work hard to develop production and make new contributions to achieving big progress in construction and all work in Xinjiang. We believe they will certainly be able to continue to implement the party's nationality policy, do more good deeds for the people of all nationalities, further consolidate and develop the relations of equality, unity and mutual assistance between all nationalities and be models in unity of nationalities.

The cadres and workers, peasants and herdsmen of all prefectures, municipalities, counties, communes and farms must always support the work and building of the corps, strengthen good-neighbor unity with the military reclamation fighters, and work in concert in shouldering the together glorious task of building and defending the border region. They should strive together to bring about great progress in construction and all other work in the region and to build a rich and civilized new socialist Xinjiang.

SUN YUN-HSUAN DISCUSSES REUNIFICATION ISSUE

OW151231 Taipei CHINA POST in English 11 Jun 82 p 4

[Text] Premier Sun Yun-hsuan's remarks at the reception honoring participants in the 11th Sino-American conference on mainland China on June 10 in Taipei.

Ladies and gentlemen: The 11th Sino-American conference on mainland China is both important and meaningful. Chinese and foreign scholars have gathered to ascertain Chinese mainland realities through the exchange of knowledge acquired in the course of their studies. We have special admiration and respect for friends from various foreign countries who have made the tiring trip here in quest of learning. On behalf of the government and people of the Republic of China, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to extend our warmest welcome and our best wishes.

In three days of meetings, you have engaged in wide-ranging and penetrating discussions of the Chinese Communists' Party, political, economic, social, cultural and foreign affairs. The incisive views you have expressed during these sessions will assuredly deepen the free world's understanding of problems on the Chinese mainland.

The True Wishes of the Chinese

I would like to stress that studies on mainland China should be focused on understanding of the true wishes of the Chinese people and the overall trend of China's future development. In past decades, Chinese and Western scholars have made considerable contributions to the study of mainland China problems. The emphasis of their research, however, seems to have centered primarily on the investigation of the structure, behavior and short-term changes of the Chinese Communist regime. Consequently, the findings tend to reflect their observation of the outward phenomena at a certain stage and thus fall short of penetrating the more fundamental and underlying causes in the momentum of change in modern China.

A Change in Direction in Mainland Studies

In my humble opinion, if we are going to increase the explanatory, heuristic and predictive power of the research findings in China studies, we must elevate the level of analysis and broaden the scope of observation. In other words, we have to transform China studies from a field of study of the Chinese Communist regime alone to one dealing with the direction and processes of the modernization of the Chinese nation as a whole. If we can agree on this, then we may want to shift our attention from the study of the conduct of Chinese Communist leaders to that of the response of Chinese culture and society to the communist system. Only by following this path can we unravel the true nature of evolving Chinese problems and find the key to a deeper understanding of the common inner aspirations of the Chinese people.

The "China Issue," Not the "Taiwan Issue"

Influenced by the Chinese Communist regime, the people of the world have made free China an issue -- the so-called "Taiwan issue." This concept is as mistaken as putting the cart before the horse. The Republic of China on Taiwan has achieved progress, prosperity and stability; its people enjoy a modern life of freedom and happiness. The Republic of China, moreover, is a constructive member of the international community. It therefore does not constitute an issue. We believe the real issue is that of mainland China -- the issue of whether the people there should forever continue to live under communist rule.

To the free world, the common issue we face is the "China issue" -- the issue of preference for a strong and hostile Communist China or a peace-loving non-communist China. If a non-communist China is to be preferred, the free world should obviously allow the people on the two sides of the Taiwan Straits to make their own choice. In other words, we should leave the problem of China's future to the decisions of the Chinese people as a whole.

Regarding "Chinese reunification," the two sides have advanced different views. Free China calls for Chinese reunification under the three principles of the people, whereas the Chinese Communist regime has advanced through "Marshal" Yeh Chien-ying a nine-point proposal for so-called peaceful reunification which is actually intended to communize free China. The current question therefore remains that of whether a "democratic and free China" or a "communist and despotic China" can best fulfill the spirations of the Chinese people and the interests of the free world. At this point I should like to make some explanations and request your comment:

Peiping's So-Called Peace Proposal

1. The nine-point "peace proposal" of the Chinese Communist regime:

Since establishing diplomatic ties with the United States, the Chinese Communists have continuously clamored for so-called "peace" and "unification" in an attempt to implement its conspiracy to isolate us by pulling the wool over the eyes of the free world.

Judging the Chinese Communists by their past conduct, we are well aware that they will turn to "peace talk" if they are unable to attain their objective by force. They will compel an opponent to agree to peace by threatening war or by alternating peace and war if their "peace talk" call is ignored.

The Chinese Communists' "peace talk" proposals have attracted the attention of the international community in recent years. We have always understood that this is a phony image of peace devised by the Chinese Communists and a gimmick to deceive the people of the free world. This is because all such proposals have two accompanying preconditions: First, the government of the Republic of China is to be considered a "provincial goverment" under the jurisdiction of the Chinese Communist regime; second, the invasion of Taiwan by force is not ruled out if peace talks fail. In other words, this so-called peace proposal is actually an attempt to annex the Republic of China on Taiwan. We have learned many traumatic lessons and will not again take the Chinese Communists' words lightly.

In September, 1981, "Marshal" Yeh Chien-ying made his nine-point "peace talk" proposal on behalf of the Chinese Communist regime, calling on the Kuomintang of China to talk with the Chinese Communist Party as equals. Yeh said the Chinese Communists would allow Taiwan (under the rule of the Republic of China) to maintain its military, economic and social autonomy. But almost in the same breath, the Chinese Communists threatened to "downgrade diplomatic relations" with the United States if it continued selling arms to the Republic of China on Taiwan. The Chinese Communists also demanded that countries with which they maintain diplomatic ties not have representative agencies in Taiwan. Recently the Chinese Communists disrupted international athletic activities by refusing to send a team to the fifth world women's softball championships in Taipei and by trying to dissuade other countries from participating. All of these developments provide evidence that the Chinese Communists' "peace talk" proposal and their clamor for "three links" and "four exchanges" are means of deception in the attempt to communize free China.

Peiping's Attempt To Deceive U.S.

"Peace talk" is another form of communist struggle. The Chinese Communists have raised the absurd view that "the supply of weapons to the Republic of China on Taiwan will strengthen its stand against peace talk."

This is an attempt to deceive the United States. In the words of Sun Tzu, a famed Chinese strategist of olden times, this is an effort "to defeat the military force of the other side without fighting a battle."

On January 20, 1961, in his inaugural speech, President John F. Kennedy said the United States would never fear to negotiate but would never negotiate out of fear. President Reagan said in his State of the Union Address in 1982 that America will negotiate only from a position of strength. The eminent views of these two American presidents clearly express the position and attitude that should be adopted by a responsible government.

We hope sincerely that the free world and the United States especially will recognize the Chinese Communist regime's conspiracy of attempting to disarm free China and communize its people through the employment of diplomatic pressure. The free world should never be lured by the Chinese Communists bait into making further concessions.

ROC's Goals

2. Free China's goal: In keeping with the aspirations of the Chinese at home and abroad, the Republic of China on Taiwan has proposed to unify China on the basis of the doctrines and advocacies of Dr. Sun Yat-sen. Developments on the two sides of the Taiwan Straits during the past 30 odd years have proved that Dr. Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people are suited to the national development of China and can solve the "China problem" and assure the freedom, affluence and happiness of the Chinese people.

I should like to explain briefly the major points of the three principles of the people. The principle of nationalism seeks to establish a country "of the people," the principle of democracy is intended to establish a country ruled "by the people," and the principle of the people's livelihood is aimed at establishing a country "for the people."

The results of our implementation of the three principles of the people on Taiwan, Penghu, Kinmen and Matsu have been recognized throughout the world in past years. Even the leadership of the Chinese Communist regime has been compelled to admit openly that mainland China cannot catch up with Taiwan economically. The Chinese Communists have tacitly followed the successful experience of the Republic of China in seeking national development. They have imitated our free export processing zones by opening so-called "special economic zones." They have introduced foreign capital to help enlarge exports and readjusted the order of economic construction by giving first priority to agriculture. They recently tried again to adjust the economic structure. While continuing to recognize "ownership by the whole people" and "collective ownership," they began in a small way to accept the "individual economy" of urban and rural workers. All of these changes are signs that the consistently dogmatic Chinese Communist regime has been compelled to bow to reality and make an aboutface after a series of setbacks.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Principles

In advocating the reunification of China on the basis of the three principles of the people, we are not trying to embarrass the Chinese Communist regime. As early as September 1937, soon after outbreak of the Sino-Japanese war, the Chinese Communists announced: "Dr. Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people are needed today in China, and this party is willing to try to help carry them out." In recent years, the Chinese Communists have often expressed their respect for Dr. Sun Yat-sen. On October 10, 1981, the anniversary of the Wuchang revolution of 1911 that gave birth to the Republic of China, the Chinese Communist regime paid tribute to the great man who created the first democratic country in Asia. In the recently promulgated fifth draft constitution, the Chinese Communists affirmed Dr. Sun Yat-sen's contribution to establishment of the Republic of China. They have thus recognized the superiority of the three principles of the people. All freedom-loving Chinese sincerely hope that the Chinese Communists will truly "return to" and "identify with" Dr. Sun Yat-sen's three principles of the people and that they will take earnest action to implement the three principles.

Ladies and gentlemen, the reunification of China is the common aspiration of the Chinese people. For the last more than 30 years, the government and people of the Republic of China have worked to reunify China and restore freedom to the Chinese people on the mainland.

The reunification of China is a fateful topic. We hope the Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Straits will ponder carefully and decide which political system will bring them dignity, glory, freedom and happiness.

How China Should Be Reunified

We believe that Chinese reunification should be based on the free will of the Chinese people as a whole. We hope the Chinese Communists will not continue to beat around the bush and engage in the plotting of ruses. We also hope they will make no more gestures to confuse the people of the world. Instead, they should give up the "four fundamental principles" as quickly as possible and take steps to change their way of life. If the political, economic, social and cultural gaps between the Chinese mainland and free China continue to narrow, the conditions for peaceful reunification can gradually mature. The obstacles to reunification will be reduced naturally with the passage of time.

Scholars' Counsel Requested

Ladies and gentlemen, academic study is a serious business. Han Yu, a Chinese scholor of the T'ang Dyanasty, said "words must bear enlightening messages." The Bible says "...truth will make you free." Both quotations suggest that the quest for knowledge should not cease with the mere satisfaction of curiosity, but should apply knowledge to the furtherance of mankind's well-being. I sincerely hope that through the profound study, analaysis and deliberation of famed scholars like you, an in-depth understanding of the reality of the observations will shed light on the right direction for China's further development. In conclusion, I want to express the hope that during your stay in the Republic of China you will give us the benefit of your wise counsel on our administrative affairs as well as of your deliberations on the problems of mainland China. My colleagues and I will be delighted to accept your advice.

I wish you good health, happiness and prosperity. Thank you.

Footnotes:

The "three links" refer to mails, trade and air and shipping services. The Chinese Communists have asked that these links be set up as soon as possible. They first made this offer on New Year's Day, 1979.

The "four exchanges" refer to establishment of exchange between relatives and tourists, academic groups, cultural groups and sports representatives.

Sun Tzu or Sun Wu (around 500 B.C.) was a native of Chi in the period of spring and autumn annals. He was an outstanding strategist. King Ho Lu of Wu put him in charge of armies to attack Chu in the west and neutralize Chi and Chin in the north so Wu could dominate her three sister states. He wrote Sun Tzu --"The Art of War," a classic of Chinese military strategy.

The "four fundamental princples" of the Chinese Communists regime are (1) always stick to the socialist road; (2) always retain Communist Party leadership; (3) follow through with the dictatorship of the proletariat; and (4) follow the thoughts of Marx, Lenin and Mao Tse-tung.

Book of John, chapter 8, verse 32; "You will know the truth, and the truth will make you free."

TAIWAN PREMIER'S REUNIFICATION REMARKS EXAMINED

HK160359 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 15 Jun 82 p 1

["New Talk" column: "Sun Yun-hsuan Talks About Peaceful Reunification"]

[Text] Sun Yun-hsuan, "President of the Executive Yuan" of Taiwan, spoke last week about peaceful reunification. The Taiwan press has reported reactions to this in recent days, and the CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY issued a dispatch from Hong Kong saying that the majority of Chinese there welcomed his words.

Reactions to this talk of Sun Yun-hsuan differ from previous occasions. It has been given a greater welcome than any previous talk by a Kuomintang leader, and this is because there are changes, his approach lays more stress on reality, his language is more moderate and he talked more like a Chinese.

Sun Yun-hsuan spoke at a study meeting; his speech was entitled "The China Issue and Chinese Reunification." He said that "China's reunification is the common aspiration of all Chinese in the nation," and "the question of what course China should follow should be reserved for the whole body of the Chinese people to solve." In saying this, he has precisely taken the stand of the Chinese people, and hence his words are welcome. Beijing has consistently and repeatedly reiterated this common aspiration of the Chinese compatriots, and now the upper stratum in Taipei has uttered the same words, thus attaining unanimity on the great premise of reunification.

Apart from affirming reunification, it is also necessary to work hard to pursue peaceful reunification. In addition to the draft of Sun Yun-hsuan's speech, Taiwan's publicity media have reported other words he spoke: When the political, economic, social and cultural differences between the mainland and Taiwan continually narrow, the conditions for the peaceful reunification of China will gradually ripen.

The change from the previous diehard anticommunism and rejection of peace to affirmation of reunification, and peaceful reunification, demonstrates that, under Beijing's powerful urging and efforts, the Taiwan authorities are retreating step by step; from the viewpoint of the Chinese people's stand, the Taiwan authorities' understanding is progressing step by step and can gradually join the mainstream of unanimity with the whole Chinese nation. Although the distance is still great, history is always evolving, and the facts prove that the Taiwan authorities too can and will change.

The conditions put forward by Sun Yun-hsuan for peaceful reunification hold that it is first necessary to narrow the differences between the mainland and Taiwan in all aspects. Actually, it is unjustifiable to cite political, economic, social, cultural and other differences as reasons for rejecting reunification. There can be differences between different areas of a country, and this is the case in many countries in the world. In particular still more regional differences can coexist in China, a large nation with a huge population, where progress can be promoted through exchanges. Beijing's nine-point peace talks proposal agrees to Taiwan's maintaining its status quo in many respects, thus precisely recognizing [chengren] that the differences can continue to exist. Reunification is the righteous cause of the nation, and internal differences should certainly not constitute an obstacle.

However, since Sun Yun-hsuan has come up with conditions, there is no harm in regarding them as a demand for an exorbitant price for advancing toward negotiations. Sun Yun-hsuan wants to narrow the differences between the mainland and Taiwan; how is this to be done, and to what degree is to be taken? If the Taiwan authorities are sincerely bent on peaceful reunification, these questions will have to be solved by direct negotiations with Beijing, and exchanges between Taiwan and the mainland will have to be opened up. How can the differences be narrowed if peace talks and the effort to open up communications in three ways are rejected? What peaceful reunification needs is seeking common ground while reserving differences, not putting differences above unity.

USSR ANNOUNCES NEW NUCLEAR STANCE AT UN SESSION

[Text] United Nations, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Leonid Brezhnev's pledge that the Soviet Union "assumes an obligation not to be the first to use nuclear weapons" came as a surprise to many and aroused their comments here at the U.N. special session on disarmament today. The Soviet Union had refused to undertake such an obligation for the past two decades. Observers here believed that Moscow's new stance was intended to frustrate the nuclear-deterrence strategy of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

Moscow's announcement was contained in a message from Brezhnev sent to the U.N. session and read out by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko. "This obligation will become effective immediately, on the moment it is made public from the rostrum of the U.N. General Assembly," Gromyko said. Brezhnev asked other nuclear powers to adopt reciprocal steps. The Soviet Union would continue to take into account the attitude of other nuclear powers when deciding on its own policies, Gromyko noted.

Moscow's new stance was also regarded as a posture to cater to the current anti-nuclear mass movement in Western Europe and the United States. But it will not reduce the Soviet threat confronting Western Europe because of the Soviet Union's edge in conventional weapons, observers said.

In his hour-long speech at the U.N. session, Gromyko put all the blame on the United States for the arms race between the superpowers. He denied the Soviet Union had ever posed any threat in the world. "The Soviet Union is not threatening any state on any continent," he declared.

Gromyko said that the Soviet Union's objective was to eliminate all medium-range nuclear arms and tactical nuclear weapons. He reiterated the proposal for the freezing of the strategic arms possessed by both sides at the present level and for the complete prohibition of chemical weapons and destruction of their stockpiles.

RENMIN RIBAO ON SOVIET 'SHAM' DISARMAMENT

[Article by Yan Caijun [0917 2088 0913]: "The Truth About the Soviet Sham Disarmament"]

[Text] [Being summary in boldface type] With regard to the problem of disarmament, superpowers comply with it in public but oppose it in private. They are playing the trick of sham disarmament and true arms expansion. In particular, the Soviet Union is talking glibly about "detente" and "disarmament" to cover its expansionist features and to deceive and lull people throughout the world. While telling lies about "seeking balance of power" rather than "superiority," the Soviet Union has continued to contend for overall military superiority. [end of summary]

True disarmament or sham disarmament is an important problem in the sphere of disarmament.

With the convention of the second UN special session on disarmament, disarmament has become one of the focuses of world attention. All peace-loving countries and people of the world demand the realization of true disarmament. However, the superpowers, the main targets of disarmament, comply with it in public but oppose it in private. They are playing the trick of sham disarmament and true arms expansion. In particular the Soviet Union has put forth a number of plans and proposals for disarmament and pretended to be willing to carry out disarmament. Actually, it is continuing to expand its arms vigorously.

Arms Expansion Under The Pretext of Disarmament

One of the characteristics of sham disarmament is saying one thing and doing another or saying yes and meaning no.

Since the Soviet Union put forth the proposal of "overall and complete disarmament" in the 1960's, it has talked a lot and presented more than 100 disarmament proposal and plans. The Soviet Union does not have the intention of implementing any of those proposals and plans, such as the sheer empty talk of "refraining from resorting to force." Some of these proposals and plans are tricks which avoid the important and dwell on the trivial, such as "banning environmental warfare" and so forth. It is precisely under the cover of talking glibly about "disarmament" that the Soviet Union is rapidly and vigorously increasing its military strength.

As far as nuclear weapons are concerned, in 1963 the Soviet Union had less than 200 long-distance ballistic missiles. At present, it has 2,400 missiles of this kind, an elevenfold increase over 1963. While maintaining the superiority of the number of its strategic nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union is making great efforts to improve their quality and has achieved marked success in this respect. In 1980, the accuracy of the Soviet warheads had already been narrowed down to 245 meters of the target, which was close to the U.S. accuracy. With regard to medium-range nuclear weapons, the Soviet Union has renewed them in recent years and deployed 300 SS-20 guided missiles. It is continuing to expand its nuclear arsenals and develop new intercontinental missiles. While extensively developing its nuclear force, the Soviet Union has never slackened its efforts to develop convening of the first UN special it has superiority in this respect. One-fourth of its 45,000 tanks and one-third of its 62,000 armored carriers were produced 4 years after the convention of the first UN special session on disarmament. The Soviet Union has also greatly developed its navy and air force. The quantity of its war planes and the production of its chemical weapons rank first in the world. The production output of its conventional weapons is equal to the total production output of the United States and various West European countries. The Soviet military expenditure in 1981 was 8 times higher than that of 1961. The Soviet Union's purpose in talking glibly about "disarmament" is to use it as smokescreen to distract people's attention from its real arms expansion.

In order to defend themselves, Soviet leaders are concocting a set of so-called "rational" arguments for arms expansion by saying that arms expansion is for "defense" and "self-defense." However, when people see the Soviet supersonic jet fighter planes making unbridled strafing attacks in Afghanistan against the guerrillas who have armed themselves for self-defense and when they hear that the Soviet tanks are ruthlessly suppressing the Afghan people who dare to resist aggression on Afghan soil, how can they believe that the Soviet Union produces planes and tanks for "defense" and "self-defense"? In 1978 at the solemn rostrum of the first special disarmament session at the UN General Assembly, the Soviet foreign minister declared that "we have never started any wars, nor will we start one now." However, soon afterwards the Soviet Union sent its army to occupy Afghanistan and support Vietnam in invading Kampuchea.

One of the purposes of the Soviet Union's glib talk about "detente" and "disarmament" is to cover up its true hegemonist face so as to deceive and benumb the people of the world. In particular, when its hegemonist policies suffer setbacks, in order to exricate itself from isolation and to stablize its vested intersts, the Soviet authorities usually use the "peace offensive" to change their unfavorable passive positions. In 1969, after being roundly condemned by the whole world for its invasion and occupation of Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union put forward a so-called proposal for "international security" at the 24th Session of the UN General Assembly in 1969. Later it again put forward a so-called proposal for "not resorting to force and permanently prohibiting nuclear weapons in international relations."

After supporting the Vietnamese invasion of Laos and Kampuchea and sending troops to invade and occupy Afghanistan, it again put forward a so-called proposal for "certain measures for reducing the danger of war which demand immediate attention" at the 36th Session of the UN General Assembly. As everyone knows, the country which used force against Czechoslovakia and undermined international security is none other than the Soviet Union itself. The country which mounted a large-scale invasion of Afghanistan is also none other than the Soviet Union itself. When the use of conventional arms by the Soviet Union to carry out aggression and expansion met with opposition from people of various countries in the world, it still put forward a so-called draft declaration for "forestalling a nuclear catastrophe" at the 36th Session of the UN General Assembly. Since the Soviet Union is so concerned with "nuclear catastrophe," people cannot help asking why it is not taking action, such as voluntarily committing itself not to use nuclear arms first or, at the least, committing itself first to the obligation of not using and not threatening to use nuclear arms against nonnuclear countries and nonnuclear regions. In fact, this Soviet proposal is not a genuine concern for "forestalling nuclear catastrophe," but an attempt to divert the attention of various countries from the Soviet Union's development of conventional arms and its reliance on the superiority of conventional arms for carrying out aggression and to befuddle world opinion. The Soviet Union has made clear by its own actions the hypocrisy of these proposals.

Seeking Supremacy Through "Disarmament" Talks

The two superpowers, possessiong the greatest arsenals in the world, are not interested in genuine disarmament but they are going on with their disarmament talks. For one thing, they want to curry favor with the public. For another, they try to restrict the other party and achieve supremacy through the talks, or to take advantage of the "talks" to gain time for armament, or to cope with the difficulties each of them is confronted with politically, economically and militarily at home and abraod and to readjust the pace and plan of armament. In short, each has a plan of its own and each is seeking to enhance its own position of strength. The Soviet-American talks on limiting nuclear weapons in the European theater currently being held and the Soviet-American talks on strategic weapons due to begin soon are also the arenas of rivalry between the two countries. Their previous records of talks show that each announcement of reaching an "agreement" signified the beginning of a new round of the arms race. Was it not precisely the Soviet Union which took advantage of the Soviet-American Salt I agreement to speedily catch up with the United States in strategic nuclear weapons and to surpass the United States in some aspects (the number of intercontinental missiles, the destructive force of nuclear warheads and medium-range nuclear missiles)?

In order to conceal its intentions of continually achieving overall supremacy, the Soviet Union always makes a point of vindicating itself by saying that it is only "seeking parity" and that it is not trying to seek "supremacy." However, we can see from the military strategy and views of Soviet generals that the situation is not like that. Soviet senior General Ou luo qi jin) [1655 5012 1142 6855] said in 1962: "Achieving supremacy over the enemy in nuclear weapons and in the methods of their use is an important task." In 1968 Marshal Sokolovskiy more explicitly said: "By achieving supremacy over the enemy in modern weapons, we have the prerequisite for vanquishing the enemy." When Soviet strategic weapons were still in an inferior position, Soviet generals were still able to admit quite frankly the ture Soviet intention of seeking supremacy in armaments. Today when the Soviet Union is in a superior position in many aspects of nuclear weapons, it does not utter a single word about its intention of continually seeking supremacy. The policy of hegemonism has determined that it will certainly seek overall supremacy. However, it is afraid that once it publicly admits its real intention of seeking overall supremacy in armament, its true features of sham disarmament will be seen through.

USSR ISSUES STATEMENT ON ISRAELI INVASION

[XINHUA report: "Soviet Government Issues Statement on Israel's Invasion of Lebanon"]

[Text] Moscow, 16 Jun -- The Soviet Government gave this warning in a statement today: "Those who decide on Israel's current policy should not forget that the Middle East is a region directly bordering on the Soviet Union's southern boundary. Any incident there invariably involves Soviet interests."

Released by TASS, this statement by the Soviet Government says: "Very obviously, Israel's invasion has been carried out within the scope of the so-called 'strategic cooperation' between Tel Aviv and Washington."

The statement says: "The attempt to dismember Lebanon and to station so-called 'multinational troops' with the U.S. Army as the mainstay in the occupied area of Lebanon is being exposed more and more clearly."

The statement says: "The Soviet Union sides with the Arabs not in word but in deed and seeks to drive the invaders out of Lebanon." It also says: "Launched in Lebanon by Israel, this war has posed an acute question concerning the situation of the Middle East as a whole. Currently the Middle East has become a still more dangerous source of international tension."

At the banquet, Pak Yong-sok, leader of the group, member and a department head of the Central Committee of the Korean Workers' Party, and Qiao Shi, head of the International Liaison Department of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, toasted the growing militant friendship between the two parties and the people of the two countries. The friendship group will leave for home tomorrow.

ACTIVITIES OF GENG BIAO DELEGATION IN DPRK

Tours Military Academy

OW152030 Beijing XINHUA in English 1847 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Pyongyang, June 15 (XINHUA) -- The visiting Chinese military delegation led by Geng Biao and Deputy Leader Liang Biye today toured Mangyongdae and the Kim Il-song Military Academy.

Situated at the south-western suburbs of Pyongyang, Mangyongdae is the birth place of President Kim Il-song, the great leader of the Korean people where he spent his childhood.

O Chin-u, minister of the People's Armed Forces who is also a member of the Presidium of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Workers' Party of Korea, accompanied the Chinese military delegation to tour President Kim Il-song's native place, where they listened attentively to accounts of President Kim Il-song's life and revolutionary struggle then.

At the Kim Il-song military academy, the Chinese military delegation watched a training exercise of the special technical force. Delegation leader Geng Biao highly praised the students for their excellent performance. The Chinese delegation also watched a grand music and dance epic "song of glory" this evening accompanied by O Kuk-yol, chief of the General Staff of the Korean People's Army.

Kaesong Vist

[Text] Pyongyang, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Defense Minister Geng Biao declared today that "no matter what happens in the world," the Chinese people and the People's Liberation Army are determined, as always to closely cooperate with the Korean comrades-in-arms and fight shoulder to shoulder."

He was speaking at a banquet hosted this evening by General Chu To-il, commander of the First Army Group in Kaesong a city bordering South Korea, in honor of the visiting Chinese military delegation headed by Geng Biao. Geng Biao and other Chinese senior officers arrived in Kaesong today in the company of O Chin-u, minister of the Korean People's Armed Forces. Geng Biao said that the Chinese and Korean comrades-in-arms have always supported each other in the past half century. He expressed resolute support to the Korean people's sacred cause of independent and peaceful reunification. He said: "The United States must pull out of South Korea all its troops together with their equipment."

In a welcoming speech, Commander Chu To-il noted that the visit to Kaesong by the Chinese military delegation "again demonstrates the combined strength of the Korean and Chinese peoples and armies." He said: "We do not want war. But we are never afraid of war. If the enemy dares invade us, we will deal them redoubled counter-blows." The Chinese military delegation also visited some units of the Korean People's Army stationed in Kaesong today.

ASEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS MEETING CLOSES

OW161950 Beijing XINHUA in English 1921 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Singapore, Jun 16 (XINHUA) -- Foreign Ministers attending the three-day 15th ASEAN foreign ministerial meeting, which ended here today, described the meeting as "constructive" and "fruitful." They said they had agreed on many important issues although some differences still remain among them.

The meeting was held to discuss Kampuchea and the question of economic cooperation among the five member countries, they disclosed.

Philippine Foreign Minister Carlos P. Romulo, who told XINHUA that the meeting was "constructive and fruitful," summarized in his closing statement five accomplishments of the meeting. The meeting, he said, reiterated ASEAN's determination "to pursue the objective of a comprehensive political solution to the problem of Kampuchea in conformity with the relevant resolution of the United Nations," consolidated the considerable gains of ASEAN activities to redefine its long-term goals, identified new modes of cooperation, revitalized ASEAN's cooperation with their dialog countries and agreed to strengthen the ASEAN Secretariat.

S. Dhanabalan, Singapore's foreign minister and chairman of the meeting, told the closing session that the efforts of the delegations were productive.

Thai Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawesila stressed the fact that the meeting enhanced ASEAN's cooperation.

Malaysian Foreign Minister Ghazali Shafie said the meeting was useful for exchanging points of view on the Kampuchean question.

"Let there be no doubt about our continuing commitment to a comprehensive political solution of the problem on the basis of the international conference for Kampuchea declaration," he said. "In this regard, the current efforts of the Kampuchean resistance groups to form a coalition government merit our encouragement and continued support."

Indonesian Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja said at the closing session that "concerning the Kampuchean conflict, our discussions have strengthened our belief that the resolutions of the United Nations and the International Conference on Kampuchea, which established the ad-hoc committee on Kampuchea, remain the only viable means of solving the Kampuchean issue. We look forward to a positive response from Vietnam."

Joint Communique Issued

OW161716 Beijing XINHUA in English 1629 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Singapore, Jun 16 (XINHUA) -- The foreign ministers of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) today reaffirmed support for continued representation of Democratic Kampuchea in the United Nations and for the formation of a coalition government in Kampuchea.

The five ASEAN foreign ministers from Thailand, the Philippines, Singapore, Malaysia and Indonesia issued a joint communique adopted at today's closing session of the 15th ministerial meeting.

Concerning Kampuchea, the joint communique said "The foreign ministers reiterated their full committment to the United Nations resolutions, which call for the immediate and total withdrawal of Vietnamese forces from Kampuchea."

It stressed: "The continued Vietnamese military occupation of Kampuchea constitutes a serious threat to peace and stability in the whole southeast Asian region."

The foreign ministers deplore the intransigence of Vietnam in refusing to withdraw its military forces from Kampuchea in defiance of international opinion."

The communique said: "The foreign ministers reaffirmed their continued recognition of Democratic Kampuchea and their support for its representation at the United Nations. They emphasized that the grounds for their support for the credentials of Democratic Kampuchea were based on the fundamental principles of respect for the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of states, non-interference in the internal affairs of states and non-use of force in international relations."

"The foreign ministers rejected all attempts to justify the continued unlawful occupation of Kampuchea and to seek recognition for the regime established in Phnom Penh by Vietnamese forces. The foreign ministers expressed their continued support for the efforts toward the formulation of a Kampuchean coalition government. They recognized that the establishment of a truly representative government in Kampuchea remains a matter for the Kampuchean people themselves to decide," it said.

"The foreign ministers expressed their firm belief that a comprehensive political solution for the Kampuchean problem is essential to the establishment of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in Southeast Asia which would ensure the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of all states in the region."

Concerning Israel, "The foreign ministers reiterated their condemnation of Israel's aggression against Lebanon. They also reaffirmed their full support for the resolutions of the United Nations Security Council calling for a ceasefire and for the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon," the communique said.

Concerning international economic issues, the communique said: "The foreign ministers observed that, while all ASEAN member countries experienced reasonable economic growth, they were nevertheless concerned with the worsening international economic situation especially the continuing recession in the industrialized countries with no prospect for an immediate solution."

"The foreign ministers expressed deep disappointment in the continued impasse in the North North-South dialog. The foreign ministers called on the developed countries to exercise the necessary political will to immediately launch global negotiations in order to expedite international economic recovery and the establishment of a new international economic order.

"The foreign ministers viewed with dismay the trend toward protectionism." They expressed hope that the forthcoming GATT ministerial would restore the basic task of GATT in ensuring that the principles of free trade are consistently practiced in the world market.

"The foreign ministers reaffirmed ASEAN's determination to cooperate fully in their efforts to overcome the difficulties brought about by the adverse international economic conditions," it said.

Referring to ASEAN cooperation, the communique stressed: "The foreign ministers in reviewing the developments in ASEAN cooperation during the past year observed with satisfaction that ASEAN has grown in stature and that it is recognized as an important regional organization in international affairs." "The foreign ministers also noted the important economic role played by ASEAN in international affairs."

The communique states: "The foreign ministers expressed the view that the existing international political and economic situation is fast moving into a state of crisis." They expressed deep concern with such developments and called for an urgent and total re-examination of the entire international system. The ASEAN foreign ministers announced the appointment of Chan Kai Yau of Singapore as the next secretary-general of the ASEAN Secretariat. The sixteenth ASEAN ministerial meeting will be held in Thailand in June 1983.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS EEC VICE PRESIDENT DAVIGNON

OW161324 Beijing XINHUA in English 1302 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today reiterated China's principle to develop friendly relations and cooperation with the European Economic Community. He was speaking at his meeting with Etienne Davignon, vice-president of the E.E.C. Commission, and his party here this afternoon.

Premier Zhao said the establishment of long and stable economic relations between China and the E.E.C. are beneficial to both sides. He said he wished that the two sides would make common efforts to open new fields for cooperation to further promote economic, trade and technical cooperation.

Vice-President Davignon said the E.E.C. attaches great importance to developing economic cooperation with China. "We are interested in discussing the possibilities in metallurgy and energy with China," he added.

Present at the meeting were Jia Shi, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, Zheng Weizhi, Chinese ambassador to Belgium, and Roger Denorme, Belgian ambassador to China.

OW161706 Beijing XINHUA in English 1507 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Peng Chong, member of the Political Bureau and of the Secretariat of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee, met here this evening with a delegation from the Lombardia Regional Committee of the Italian Communist Party headed by Giovanni Cervetti, member of the leadership of the party and secretary of the Lombardia Regional Committee of the party.

Peng Chong and Cervetti expressed satisfaction and elation over the growing relations between the two parties.

Present were Qiao Shi, head of the International Liaison Department of the CCP Central Committee, and Feng Xuan, adviser to the department. The meeting was followed by a dinner given by Peng Chong for the Italian comrades.

The delegation arrived in Beijing on June 10. The following day, Qiao Shi gave a dinner to welcome the delegation. The guests made a three-day trip to Shanghai and were warmly received by Hu Lijiao and Zhong Min, second secretary and secretary of the CCP Shanghai Municipal Committee. The Italian comrades had discussions with leading members of the CCP Shanghai Municipal Committee and visited the memorial hall of the site of the First National Congress of the CCP, a factory and a people's commune. The Italian delegation is leaving for home tomorrow.

ISRAELI INVASION OF LEBANON WIDELY DENOUNCED

Wen Yezhan Condemnation

OW161222 Beijing XINHUA in English 1201 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Wen Yezhan, Chinese vice-minister of foreign affairs, met with Tayib 'Abd ar-Rahim Mahmud, head of the mission of the Palestine Liberation Organization in Beijing, Wajib 'Abd as-Samad, charge d'affaires ad interim of the Lebanese Embassy in China, and Boutros Hanna, counsellor of the Syrian Embassy in China, on separate occasions yesterday evening and this morning. He handed them the statement issued by the Government of the People's Republic of China June 15.

During the meetings, Wen Yezhan strongly condemned Israel's barbarous invasion of Lebanon. He said that the Chinese Government and people firmly support the Lebanese, Palestinian and Syrian Armed Forces and people in their just struggle to resist Israeli aggression and safeguard their national rights.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentator

[Commentator's article: "Israel Must Unconditionally Withdraw From Lebanon"]

[Text] The Israeli aggressor army which invaded Lebanon has never actually stopped its military actions since announcing a cease-fire at noon on 11 June. On the one hand, they are mopping up the Palestinian guerrilla fighters in the occupied areas of southern Lebanon, and on the other, they are keeping up pressure on the Lebanese capital, Beirut. At present, the Israeli aggressor army controls the Beirut International Airport runways and the neighboring strategically pivotal Khaldah area, and has surrounded the Beirut city area where the PLO headquarters is located. Israel's actual moves show that the so-called cease-fire it announced is a swindle. It is counting on concentrating forces under the cover of the "cease-fire" and destroying the PLO to the maximum extent possible. The Middle East situation is even more crisis-ridden as a result of this scheme of the Israeli aggressors.

The Israeli aggressors have now put forward harsh conditions of a so-called "political solution" for withdrawing their forces, and threaten that if these conditions are not met they will not withdraw. To cease fire without withdrawing or to occupy land for long periods on account of nonacceptance of "political conditions" are the habitual tricks of the Israel expansionists. This is how the West Bank, the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights were occupied by Israel. Now the Israeli aggressors are again intending to use these barbaric, unreasonable and scoundrelly means to attain their expansionist aims.

The so-called Israeli "political solution" scheme that has already been revealed shows that Israel is attempting, after destroying the PLO bases in southern Lebanon, to ban the return of the Palestinian Armed Forces to that area. Israel seeks, by means of striking at the Syrian forces in Lebanon, to compel the Syrian units to withdraw from that country and weaken Syrian support for the Palestinian people's struggle. Israel is also vainly attempting by this invasion to split Arab unity and influence or change the Lebanese Government and policies. It is evident that the aim of the Begin authorities is to destroy and indeed wipe out the PLO Armed Forces, and wreck and even dismember Lebanon. This is something that the Palestinian people, the Lebanese people, the Arab people and all states and peoples that uphold justice absolutely cannot tolerate. Israel is a brazen aggressor, so what right does it have to put forward conditions for withdrawing its forces? If Israel is allowed to do this, would not the Soviet Union in Afghanistan and Vietnam in Kampuchea also think that they can put forward conditions for withdrawing their forces? What principles of international relations would there then be to speak of in the world?

The Palestinian people have waged a long and heroic struggle against the Israeli aggressors in order to recover the homes seized from them and to win their right to national self-determination. Their struggle is reasonable and just. In the face of the Israeli aggression, the PLO Armed Forces are fighting a bloody battle. 'Arafat and other PLO leaders are staunchly directing the battle. Fearless in the face of difficulties and sacrifices, they are resolved to carry through to the end the struggle to gain their national rights. Their spirit in advancing wave upon wave, which moves one to song and tears, demonstrates their heroism in struggling for national existence. International public opinion's condemnation of the Israeli aggressors and sympathy and support for the Palestinian people and for Lebanon fully express the common feelings of people throughout the world who uphold right and justice.

However, the U.S. Government, which has consistently been partial to Israel, has continued to support the Israeli aggressors since their invasion of Lebanon. In the Security Council the United States vetoed a resolution calling for an Israeli cease-fire and withdrawal, refused to take sanctions against Israel, and continued to ship arms to Israel; after Israel had seized a large tract of Lebanese territory and gained "the best bargaining position" in negotiations, the United States gain started so-called "mediation" activities. No wonder the Arabs accuse U.S. diplomacy and Israeli cannons of playing a mutually complementary role in aggression. The absurd U.S. attitude has made it convenient for another superpower to seize the chance to intervene, and the struggle between them for hegemony in the Middle East is bound to start a new round. The Middle East situation will further deteriorate for this reason.

The Chinese people have consistently and resolutely opposed the Israeli policy of agression and expansion and resolutely supported the Palestinian people's just struggle to regain their national rights. In the current situation, we appeal: For the sake of peace in the Middle East and of human justice, all peace-loving countries and peoples that uphold justice must mobilize, put a stop to Israeli aggression, and compel Israel to abide by the relevant UN Security Council resolutions and to immediately and unconditionally withdraw all its forces from Lebanon.

XINHUA Comment

OW161900 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 16 Jun 82

["Commentary: Israel's Premeditated Invasion -- By XINHUA Correspondent Mei Zhenmin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Israeli troops have occupied half of Lebanese territories and pressed steadily toward its capital Beirut only seven days after they launched a lightning attack against that country on June 4.

Israel's recent large-scale invasion was quite different from the harassing attacks it carried out before the cease-fire in Lebanon last July. It was also different from its military actions south of the Litani River in Lebanon in March 1978. It was in fact a premeditated strategic action. The immediate victims of Israel's invasion are Lebanese, Syrians and Palestinians.

In general, the strategic aims of Israel's action include:

-- To destroy the Palestine Liberation Organization's base in Lebanon and to eliminate the main force of Palestinian guerrillas;

-- To smash Syria's missile bases in the Bekaa Valley of Lebanon and to drive Syrian troops out of Lebanon;

— to weaken the pro-Palestine force in Lebanon and to foster and beef up the country's pro-Israel force so as to dismember Lebanon by putting the area it occupied under the control of pro-Israel force;

— to undermine the rapprochement between Egypt and other Arab countries and to obstruct the proper progress of the peace process in the Middle East.

Israel does not merely focus its eyes on southern Lebanon but tries first of all to write off by military action the Palestinian question which is the nucleus of the Middle East problem. So far it has not completely achieved these strategic purposes.

The two superpowers' attitudes to the war are inconsistent with the desire of the Arab people. The United States not only knew in advance the Israeli invasion but also connives and supports it. The invasion came four days after Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon's return from a ten-day visit to Washington where he discussed with the U.S. high-ranking officials the Palestinian "terrorism" and gained "complete understanding" from the U.S. Government. At the same time, the United States agreed to resume the suspended U.S.-Israeli "strategic cooperation agreement" and increase its military aid to Israel. Meanwhile the Soviet Union issued a statement saying that "the Middle East is an area lying in close proximity to the southern borders of the Soviet Union and that developments there cannot help affecting the interests of the USSR."

All of this show that the U.S. policy on the Middle East with its support for Israel as the core not only runs counter to the interests of the Arab people but also is harmful to the defence of world peace. The Soviet moves in the Middle East, as the Soviet Union itself proclaimed, also merely serve its own interests there.

Now, a cease-fire has come into effect in Lebanon, but the grave tension is far from relaxed. Israel will try its best to achieve its strategic aim under the smokescreen of "cease-fire." Therefore, the Arab nation is facing an extremely complicated and arduous historic task, that is, unite together to defeat the aggressor. People hope that the imminent situation in the Middle East will help fuse the splits in the Arab world and fire the enthusiasm for defending the interests of the Arab nation. History will prove that violence, rampant for a period of time, is doomed to die out and no one will succeed in resorting to force to enslave other nations.

Mass Organizations React

OW161308 Beijing XINHUA in English 1231 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) — Chinese mass organizations have sent messages since June 8 to Palestinian and Lebanese mass organizations, condemning Israel's bombings and invading Lebanon.

The message of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions says: "The Chinese workers and trade unions firmly support the Palestinian and Lebanese workers and trade unions in their just struggle against Israel's aggression. We are deeply convinced that this struggle will be crowned with final victory with the support from the people of the world."

The All-China Women's Federation says in its message: "The Chinese women firmly support the Lebanese, Palestinian and Syrian people and women in their just struggle against Israel's aggression and in defence of their national rights. Israel must withdraw from the Arab territory it occupied in 1967. The national rights of the Palestinian people must be restored. The Middle-East issue must be solved in an all-round and fair way."

The message of the all-China Youth Federation and the All-China Students' Federation says: "The Chinese youth and students show deep sympathy for the Palestinian and Lebanese people in suffering. We demand that Israel immediately and unconditionally withdraw its aggressor troops from Lebanon's territory."

RENMIN RIBAO ON MILITARY ASPECT OF FALKLANDS WAR

[Article by Guan Yanzhong [4619 1750 1813]: "What the Malvinas War Reveals Militarily"; capitalized passages were printed in boldface]

[Text] The military conflict between Argentina and Britain for the Islas Malvinas has resulted in the largest air and sea battles over the Atlantic since the postwar period. Both sides have resorted to advanced armanents, especially the up-to-date elecronic-guided missiles, causing both sides great losses of warships, planes and personnel. This war has thoroughly captured the attention of military experts of many countries. They intend to draw lessons from it as reference.

Both Britain and Argentina have thrown a certain proportion of their military forces into the battle. Up to now Britain has called up half of its naval force, together with 140 planes and a total of 27,000 troops, while Argentina has mustered 200 airplanes, more than a dozen warships and about 10,000 troops. The British naval force is relatively strong, but it had to join the battle at a distance of more than 10,000 miles from its homeland. In comparison Argentina is weak in its naval force and armaments, but it can hold its position and wait for the arrival of the enemy as the Islas Malvinas is not far from the mainland. Argentina also gains the advantage of having full use of its air force.

The Malvinas war has its unique traits. NATO military experts said that this conflict has taught the NATO military personnel more than they expect to learn from the massive war exercises they will participate in the next 10 years. Military experts of many countries have analyzed what new problems have arisen from this war, calling for changes in modern warfare. Generally speaking, these problems can be summed up as follows:

First, ACCURATELY GUIDED WEAPONS HAVE CHANGED THE TRADITIONAL METHOD OF SEA WARFARE. Western news agencies reported that the Malvinas conflict "was the first large-scale sea war in the world which involved the utilization of missiles of the space era and the most complicated electronic systems ever." During the battles, people found that guided missiles played a key role in sea warfare. The setup of sea warfare has greatly changed because anti-warship missiles can be launched from a great distance, even hundreds of miles away. One expert from the London International Institute of Strategic Studies pointed out that future sea warfare "would be a hide-and-seek game. Warships hiding at far distances will wait for the opportune moment to launch a surprise attack."

The Malvinas conflict was regarded as a test of new modern weapons. In the air and sea battles, both Britain and Argentina used the most advanced and fatal missiles, such as the French "Exocet" missile, the British "Sea Dart" missile, a kind of long-range radar guided missile launched from a warship, and the U.S. "Sidewinder" missile. These electronic-guided missiles which are connected to a long-range radar system can destroy warships and shoot down airplanes even before they appear on the horizon. The British new-type missile-equipped destroyer "Sheffield" was sunk by the "Exocet" missile launched from a distance of 48 miles.

Second, the electronic-guided missiles can play their important part in sea or air battles, but in order to win victory it is still necessary to raise and give full rein to the ability to carry out comprehensive sea warfare such as reconnaissance, accurate and timely communications, control of the air, air defense, the ability to launch missile attacks and anti-missile warfare.

To counter the British weaknesses of insufficient warships and planes and a weak air defense, the Argentine military forces gave full play to their advantage of a strong air force. They relentlessly bombed the British ship fleet and the positions held by the British landing forces on the island. All this put the British troops in great difficulties in attaining reinforcements and provisions.

British troops suffered losses many times due to a poor air screen. The Argentine air force also made use of different types of airplanes in one air raid. They dispatched a large number of innefficient A-4 fighters to draw the attention of the planes and artilleries on the British aircraft carrier, and at the same time launched a surprise attack at the British ship fleet with a small number of advanced "Super Ensign" fighters and scored good success.

Britain had more initiative in the war because of its advanced means of reconnaissance, communications and command. However, as pointed out by foreign press services, the coordination between missiles and radar systems on the British warships was not good enough. Although the "Sea Dart" defensive missile system was advanced, the radar systems watching it were "inferior."

Third, HUMAN FACTOR IS STILL A DECISIVE ONE IN A MODERN WAR. During the Malvinas war, the Argentine troops fought staunchly and heroically and dealt serious blows to the British troops. Particularly, the skill and courage of pilots of the Argentine air force were universally praised. In the air battles, they displayed their heroic spirit of fearing no sacrifice. They damaged and sank many British warships by using offensive tactics of low-altitude flying and diving. They were honored with the name of "flying steeds." Even British Defense Secretary John Nott admitted, "I reckon that the Argentine pilots have displayed unequaled valor." Facts have proved that in a modern war, weapons are important factors but men who use them are a more important factor.

Fourth, THE MALVINAS WAR HAS PUT TO MILITARY EXPERTS THE QUESTION OF RECONSIDERING NAVAL STRATEGY. Western military experts hold that "the dawn of a brand-new era of sea battles" was seen in the South Atlantic war. It is necessary to have "small high-speed surface warships fully equipped with missiles closely coordinating air defense systems and highly effective submarines which do not use nuclear weapons." Some people also think that it is still necessary to have aircraft carriers with extensive deck space and various offensive and defensive functions. This means excellent weapons, close coordination and high efficiency. With these, successful offensive or defensive action can be taken.

Finally, the Malvinas war has also shown that as a result of using electronic controlled and guided missiles, the rate at which warships are being damaged has increased. An Exocet missile, which was worth $200,000, sank a destroyer which was worth $200 million. This has drawn the attention of military circles in various countries. Experts hold that in building warships in the future, efforts should be made to build small, high-speed ones at low cost. It is not advisable to use aluminum in building warships because its ignition point is 100 percent lower than steel. The upper structures of the British frigates "Ardent" and "Antelope" were made of aluminum. After they were hit, fierce combustion and rapid melting occurred and then they soon sank.

At present, the Malvinas war has concluded but the military lesson of this war will be a topic of discussion for Western military experts for a long time to come.

STATE COUNCIL INSTRUCTIONS ON RAILWAY ACCIDENT

OW161123 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0027 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- In its 15 June written instructions on a report by the Ministry of Railways regarding a serious accident in which the No 193 passenger express train overturned, the State Council called for the ministry to mobilize all its workers and staff members to conscientiously implement the system of personal responsibility, strictly observe labor discipline, promptly change the current situation of unsafe railways and ensure that trains run safely and on schedule. The State Council's written instructions read in full as follows:

This serious accident caused heavy losses in property and human lives for the state and people and had a bad influence politically. This shows that the leadership of the Ministry of Railways failed to pay due attention to the longstanding problems of perfunctory management and lax discipline, much less take any effective measures to solve such problems. If strict measures are not taken to straighten things out and solve problems in this regard once and for all, it will be impossible to really draw a lesson from this serious accident and ensure that trains run safely. In that case, the "safety month" activities would become a mere formality.

In its 10 June report the Ministry of Railways said that it has "called for all railway departments and units to give first priority to safety. Leading cadres at all levels must foster the idea of safety first and carry out safety education among all workers and staff members so that each and every worker and staff member will have a boundless sense of responsibility to the state and the people, conscientiously implement the system of personal responsibility, strictly observe labor discipline and be conscientious and meticulous in following rules, regulations and operating instructions." All these are correct, but the question here is to do all these in earnest.

The railway departments had a set of effective rules, regulations and operating instructions. However, the "gang of four" interfered with and sabotaged these departments during the 10 years of turmoil. In addition, the number of new workers who have not received enough training has increased in recent years and the foundation for railway management is weak. Moreover, the Ministry of Railways has failed to exercise effective leadership. As a result, the railway departments' fine tradition and work style of observing regulations and discipline have not been revived and carried forward, and some unhealthy trends and evil practices have not only gone unchecked but have also developed. Now is the time to thoroughly straighten things out.

Those mainly responsible for this serious accident constitute not a general case of violating labor discipline and operating regulations but a case of leaving their posts without permission and dereliction of duty. This is absolutely impermissible. They must be investigated for their criminal liability and severely punished according to law. Leaders of the Jinzhou railway bureau and subbureau, the Dahushan engineering section and the Xinglongdian railway maintenance district who were involved in this accident should be dealt with sternly and strictly. It is correct for the leadership of the Ministry of Railways to have asked for punishment themselves. Since the accident occurred before the new leaders of the ministry took their jobs, they are exempted from punishment and we will have to see how they behave.

The written instructions of the State Council and the report by the Ministry of Railways should be promptly conveyed to railway workers and staff members throughout the country and made known to all of them. All railway workers and staff members should be mobilized to expose the serious phenomena of perfunctory management and lax discipline, and the harmfulness of such phenomena should be fully understood.

On this basis, it is necessary to reaffirm or improve various rules and regulations, strictly implement the system of personal responsibility and conscientiously carry out the regulations on rewards and penalties. Cadres at all levels and Communist Party and CYL members should set an example and play an exemplary, leading role in changing the current situation of unsafe railways and effectively ensure that trains run safely and on schedule.

ASSOCIATION FOR PROMOTING DEMOCRACY HOLDS PLENUM

OW170215 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1241 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- The secondary plenary session of the Sixth Central Committee of the China Association for Promoting Democracy, which concluded today, adopted a resolution calling on all association members to conscientiously study and discuss the "draft revised constitution" and implement the guidelines of the national united front work conference in order to work actively for the training of talented people for building modernization and contribute more to the development of education, science, culture, publications, public health and other undertakings.

Association Chairman Zhou Jianren and Vice Chairmen Ye Shengtao, Xu Boxin, Zhao Puchu, Lie Jieqiong and Wu Ruoan attended the closing ceremony. Vice Chairman Xie Bingxin sent a written note.

The session pointed out: Guided by the adherence to the four fundamental principles, the "draft revised constitution" sums up the historical experience since the founding of the country and reflects the special characteristics in building socialist modernization during the new period. With a sense of responsibility of being the masters of their own affairs, the participants submitted amendments to the "draft revised constitution" and offered constructive suggestions for ensuring its execution. The session called on all association members to diligently study, extensively publicize and strictly abide by the "draft revised constitution" and fulfill their glorious duty to maintain the dignity of the constitution and ensure its execution.

The session held: The importance and role of the united front will become more and more evident along with the propagation and implementation of the guidelines of the national united front work conference. The association's organizations at various levels must follow the principle of "prolonged coexistence and mutual supervision" and take further initiative in doing independent, responsible work.

The session held: Relied upon in the building of socialist material and spiritual civilization, the intellectuals occupy an important position and play a vital role in socialist construction. The organizations of the association at various levels must continue to help concerned party and government departments effectively carry out the party's policy toward intellectuals and better mobilize the initiative of the broad masses of the association's members and intellectuals in playing a greater role in building socialist spiritual civilization.

The CCP Central Committee united front work department gave a reception for the participants during the session. Yang Jingren, deputy director of the CCP Central Committee united front work department, and Liu Lantao, vice chairman of the CPPCC National Committee, held discussions with the session participants.

XINHUA OUTLINES DEMANDS ON NEWLY APPOINTED CADRES

OW161413 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1132 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Article by XINHUA commentator: "Be Brave in Shouldering Heavy Burdens, Bring About a New Situation in Work"]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- In the restructuring of central state organizations, a large number of cadres who combine ability and political integrity and are in the prime of life have been selected for leading posts at the ministerial and bureau levels.

In the days to come, as the restructuring of local administrations develops, tens of thousands of outstanding young and middle-aged cadres will be appointed to new leading posts. The party and people place ardent hope in the young and middle-aged cadres who have been newly promoted to leading posts hoping that they will strive for accomplishments, bravely shoulder heavy burdens, outstandingly perform their duties and live up to the great trust placed in them by the party and people.

This group of younger comrades is to undertake the heavy responsibility of carrying on our cause and forging ahead as our country enters a period of great historical change. The basic demands placed on them by the party and people are: 1) to uphold the four fundamental principles, faithfully implement the line, principles and policies formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and resist influence by erroneous "leftist" and rightist ideas; 2) to always be full of vigor and vitality in work, boldly shoulder responsibility, press forward in the face of difficulties, strive for practical results, work for socialist material and cultural development with single-hearted devotion and refuse to become political philistines; and 3) to maintain close ties with the masses in work style, constantly go deep into the realities of life, experience and observe the conditions and feelings of the people, be modest and eager to learn, work hard and perseveringly, be honest in performing one's official duties and resolutely struggle against all kinds of unhealthy trends and evil practices. Whether one can meet these three requirements, work diligently and conscientiously and courageously bring about a new situation in work will be a rigorous test for every newly promoted young cadre.

The young comrades appointed to leading posts in the last couple of years and particularly during the current restructuring of the administration are the best selected by party organizations strictly according to the priciple of combining ability and political integrity and the criteria of personnel selection for the new period and by the method of the mass line. However, a cadre's growth and development do not entirely depend on how good his past political and progessional qu lities were, but more importantly, on how he will use his good qualifications to face his tasks ahead. On this, historical experience merits attention: Some cadres, at the time they were chosen for new leading positions, were indeed quite outstanding with strong sense of political responsibility, revolutionary devotion and relatively great competence. However, when they became high "officials" and their status changed, they became blind to themselves, the things around them and the many new situations and new problems faced by them. In the end the outstanding elements were gradually outperformed by others and even degenerated. Only a small number among them were crushed by the "pressures" because their working abilities really did not measure up to their new tasks, and, more often than not, a greater number slid down the evil road because they failed to be on guard against the decadent, vulgar ideas and style of the exploiting classes and all kinds of backward forces of habit. Therefore, after assuming leading posts, the young comrades should not only have the lofty ambition to do good work but should also carefully appraise all kinds of changes which may come with their rising status, fully foresee the troubles and problems they are about to face and take the initiative to meet all kinds of tests.

Generally speaking, when a cadre is promoted to a higher position there will always be some comrades who offer him congratulations and praises out of love and care and encourage him to make continued progress. This is often the case and not a bad thing. However, one must watch out for flatterers mingled among those offering praises. These people are different from those with good intentions. They are people of fine words and smooth manners who are good at currying favor with those in authority for personal gains and specialize in attaching themselves to those who are "hot." They will brazenly flatter anyone in a high position and holding great power only to curry favor for selfish ends and never to seek truth from facts. If you find these individuals' "nice words" pleasant to the ear and feel at ease with them, you will become smug and forget yourself.

We are to serve the people and need no flattery from anyone. However, we need to constantly listen to truthful, fair comments on our rights and wrongs, achievements and errors so that we can add to our achievements, correct our mistakes and manage the people's affairs well.

For this reason, when promoted by party organizations, our cadres -- young cadres in particular -- should realize that the new duties have placed higher demands on their ability and political integrity, but the new jobs will by no means give them higher political integrity and ability at the same time, nor will their original political integrity and ability be raised naturally by their higher positions like "a ship rising with the tide." Under the circumstances, they need to know their own limitations and should be more modest and prudent, pay attention to investigation and study, follow the mass line more frequently and strengthen tempering their political integrity and ability in practice. They must not allow themselves to have a swelled-head, become arrogant, lazy or soft, feel that they cannot go out without a car and cannot work without a secretary. Even if they score really praiseworthy achievements in the future, they should not attribute the success to themselves. They must understand that although the sun and the moon are long lasting, there are heavens outside of heaven. It is dangerous to claim credit for oneself, become arrogant, and consider oneself an extraordinary being. Only by consciously refusing all unprincipled flattery and turning the successes already achieved into a motive force for continued advance can one become invincible on the revolutionary march.

As the comrades rise in position and power, the party and state will place even greater hopes on them to exercise their functions and powers effectively and serve the people even better. However, there will be also some who hope to draw support from these comrades' position and power in pursuit of their personal gains. In their eyes, the position and power of cadres are like honey to be collected and eaten. When they themselves do not qualify for such positions and powers, they hope that their relatives, friends, colleagues or fellow-townsmen will succeed, thus making it easier for them to seek personal gain, turn on the green light for their children to go abroad illegally, enter higher schools, find jobs and join the party or the CYL. They even expect protection for them to carry out activities to benefit themselves at the expense of others and the public. This calls for the newly promoted comrades to heighten their vigilance, be impartial and incorruptible in upholding principle, to continue to regard themselves as public servants despite their power, always value the interests of the party and people above everything else and resist the unhealthy tendencies from any source, particularly from relatives and friends. It is hoped that the newly-promoted comrades will take the lead in fostering the sytle of hard work and plain-living and, on matters involving personal gains and losses or those of their relatives, be strict with themselves and cultivate a new spirit. In short, to demand correctness of others, one must first be correct himself. So long as one remains honest in performing one's official duties and refuses to be swayed by personal considerations, the people who hope to get in through the "backdoor" and make a "profit" will find themselves in a "blind alley." If everyone will make such strict demands on himself, it will be easy to bring about a basic turn for the better in party style and social practice.

After young cadres move from lower leading posts to higher ones, the scope of work will be broader and there will be more problems than before. To bring about a new situation, not only must they possess the courage, resourcefulness, drive and tenacity of advanced proletarian fighters like the revolutionaries of the older generation and understand scientific working methods, but they must also know how to obtain help and support from the veteran comrades, rely on the collective wisdom and strength and bring the masses' initiative into full play. As the saying goes, "A fence needs the support of three stakes, an able fellow needs the help of three other people."

Assuming leadership for the first time in new environments, the young comrades need all the more help from above and below and especially within the leading bodies. Because of this, they must know how to handle themselves, conscientiously implement democratic centralism, encourage the free airing of views and choose and follow what is good. With the solicitude of party organizations, backing of veteran comrades and support from the cadres and masses, so long as the newly promoted comrades are able to constantly analyze themselves by dividing one into two, be honest and upright, work diligently and conscientiously for the party and people, firmly trust and unite with the vast majority, distinguish well-meaning criticism and help from malicious troublemaking and undermining, constantly develop their strong points and eliminate their weaknesses and courageously accept the tempering and trials of these difficulties, they will learn a lot of things, enable themselves to mature further, constantly open up new prospects for the socialist modernization drive and grow into strong leaders sharing weal and woe with the people of all our nationalities.

BEIJING MEETING VIEWS DIALECTICAL MATERIALISM

[Text] Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- Those involved in philosophy work should pay attention to studying the contradictions in the socialist society of China, sum up experience in the practice of socialist construction and study and solve the theoretical problems that need to be quickly solved in the building of a socialist material and spiritual civilization and in the performance of various kinds of practical work. This was the call made by the national discussion meeting on dialectical materialism which ended today in Beijing, according to XINHUA reporter Li Hongqi.

More than 100 scientists in philosophy circles from all over the country attended the meeting. During the meeting they studied the speech given by Deng Liqun, director of the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee, at a recent theoretical forum. The speech was entitled "Our Banner Is Communism."

The meeting emphatically pointed out: Our philosophy workers must theoretically offer very good answers and solutions to the problems that exist in the minds of the people, of some young people in particular, and do a good job in the ideological sphere by channeling and guiding young people's thinking in the correct direction. At present, there is a very small number of young people who blindly worship popular Western trends of thought such as "existentialism." This is a problem that should call for the attention of philosophy workers. Analyzing this, the participants noted that some young people have a desire to learn something and are truly using their brains and doing some exploring. However, those who dwell upon "existentialism" with great relish may not be the ones who have done some decent study about this doctrine. "Existentialism" is ultraindividualism under the cloak of philosophical phrases. The viewpoints it preaches may have a corrosive influence among our people, young people in particular. We must conduct serious study of Western trends of thought and use the truth of Marxism to convince these people, help resolve the knotty problems in their minds and guide young people in consciously resisting the corrosive influence of various kinds of erroneous trends of thought.

During the meeting the participants conducted probing discussions on the theory of matter [wu zhi lun 3670 6347 6158], especially on the subject of how the dialectical materialist viewpoint of matter [wu zhi guan 3670 6347 6034] has been enriched and deepened by the latest development in the natural sciences. They also made academic exchanges concerning the basic question of philosophy and other theoretical questions such as the relationship between material and spiritual civilizations. They all felt that these theoretical questions, which will have a great impact on the cause of socialist construction, call for further penetrating study in the days to come in connection with new experiences through practice and new achievements in science and a solution through the application of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought.

The meeting held that philosphy workers now have before them a very arduous task and there are many things that need to be done. This makes it mandatory for them to pluck up their spirit and continue to emancipate their minds so our Marxist philosphical work will be more in keeping with the times and become more creative and militant in nature. This is something the people, young people in particular, will love to see and hear.

The 10-day discussion meeting has jointly sponsored by the Institute of Philosphy under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, the philosphy teaching and research section of the Central Party School, the Chinese PLA Political Academy, the Philosophy Department of Beijing Teachers' University, the Editorial Department of ZXEXUE JANJIU and the Editorial Department of ZIRAN BIANZHENGFA YANJIU TONGXUN [DIALECTS OF NATURE RESEARCH NEWSLETTER 5261 3544 6589 6086 3127 4282 4496 6639 6061]. The meeting was followed by the establishment of the China Dialectical Materialism Research Society. After consultations and negotiations, Xiao Qian [5135 0467], Zhao Fengqi [6392 7685 1477] and Han Shuying [7281 2885 5391] were elected executive presidents, and Feng Ding was elected adviser.

GUANGMING RIBAO REVIEWS CHINESE CONSTITUTIONS

[Article by Qiu Yuanyou [6726 6678 3731]: "A Brief Account of the History of Modern China's Constitutions"]

[Text] The heroic struggle of the modern Chinese people in striving for democratic politics and a constitution lasted half a century. In the long period of acute struggle, various forms of constitution appeared. But regardless of whether it was the revolutionary class or the reactionary class, they both put forward their own views on the constitution based on the state system they adhered to. The history of the modern Chinese Constitution is a concentrated reflection and concrete manifestation of the half century of violent struggle over the state system between the revolutionaries and the counterrevolutionaries. In short, it was three different classes and social forces who formulated three constitutions with distinctive characteristics, which had three different destinies and futures.

First, the old democratic constitution which the national bourgeoise longed for and drew up.

The first constitutional campaign, initiated and led by the national bourgeois, was the 1898 reform movement, led by bourgeois reformers headed by Kang Youwei. These reformers represented the upper strata of the national bourgeois. Inheriting and summing up the constitutional idea which existed in the last half of 19th century, the national bourgeois reformers were seeking the truth from Western countries in order to save the nation and the people. They formulated a series of constitutional ideas such as "to increase people's rights, to fight for democracy and to convene a parliament" while drawing up a blueprint of a relatively complete constitutional monarchy. The objective of the constitutional movement, initiated and led by the bourgeois reformers was to reform the feudal dictatorship regime, establish a bourgeois constitutional monarchy and develop a capitalist constitution. This had progressive significance. However, the constitutional movement, led by reformers, met its final failure due to bloody suppression by the ruling clique of the Qing feudal dictatorship which persisted with its traditional unchangeable legal system.

After the failure of the 1898 reform movement and the Yi Ho Tuan movement, the bourgeois revolutionaries headed by Dr Sun Yat-sen, who represented the middle and lower strata of the national bourgeois, realized in their struggle the fact that "it is impossible to establish a constitution without waging revolution." The target of the constitutional movement, initiated and led by the bourgeois revolutionaries, was the overthrow of the feudal autocratic monarchy by means of armed force, the establishment of a parliamentary republic and the development of a capitalist constitution. The victory of the 1911 revolution established the First Republic in the East. It was headed by Dr Sun Yat-sen and had bourgeois revolutionaries as the main body. On March 31, 1912, the Nanking provisional government of the Republic of China promulgated the "Provisional Constitution of the Republic of China" -- the only constitutonal document with a bourgeois republican nature in Chinese constitutional history. This constitution stipulated that "the Republic of China is formed by the Chinese people" and "the sovereignty of the Republic of China belongs to the whole people." It established the principles of "three rights being independent" in the government organizations. It confirmed the democratic rights and the liberty of the people and it declared that private property was inviolable and that capitalist enterprise was legal. "The Provisional Constitution" was the victory and the positive result of the 1911 revolution and was also a remarkable record in the course of the bourgeois democratic revolution. The bourgeois revolutionaries made use of it as an instrument to strengthen the results achieved in the revolution and to protect their interests. Summing up the experiences of the history of modern China's constitutional movement, Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: "The Provisional Constitution of the Republic of China born in the first year of the republic was, at that time, a relatively good one. Certainly it was not a complete one and it had defects of a bourgeois character. However, it possessed a revolutionary and democratic character." ("On the Draft Constitution of the PRC"). Nevertheless, the "provisional Constitution of the Republic of China" did not enjoy a long life, owing to the weakness of an compromises by the bourgeois revolutionaries.

Second, the semicolonial and semifeudal constitution forged by the landlord comprador class.

In the rapid development of the Chinese revolution and under the profound changes in the relationships of class power, the Qing Dynasty and the northern expeditionary and Kuomintang reactionary governments were forced to pick up the flag of "establishing a constitution" in order to save their moribund rule. They forged, and promulgated, constitution after constitution over several decades. In 1908, the feudal rulers headed by Ci Xi, under the heavy blows of consecutive revolutionary storms, promulgated the "imperial constitutional program" in order to boycott the revolutionary movement of the bourgeois revolutionaries and the masses of the people. As Comrade Liu Shaoqi precisely remarked: "The purpose of this 'constitutional program' was to preserve feudal autocracy. Naturally, it could not but make a commitment on some demands by the people. But the people did not believe that these promises were true nor did they believe that this 'constitution' could make China progress. The people resisted this 'constitution' which deceived people." ("Report on the Draft Constitution of the PRC")

The northern expeditionary government which was established after the defeat of the 1911 revolution, was a naked counterrevolutionary military dictatorship backed by armed forces. However, under the new changes in class force relations and with the concept of a democratic republic deepening in the minds of the people, the north expeditionary government was compelled to pick up the broken flag of "establishing a constitution" in order to resist the impetus of the revolution and to exclude outsiders. The main ones were "The Constitution of the Republic of China (draft)", that is, "The Draft Temple of Heaven Constitution" drafted by the Yuan Shikai government in 1913; the 1914 "Provisional Constitution of the Republic of China"; the Cao Kun government's "Constitution of the Republic of China" of 1923; and the 1925 "Draft Constitution of the Republic of China" of the Duan Qirui government. However, the straw of a "constitution" at which they were grasping, could not save the northern expeditionary government from failure.

The northern expeditionary government was then replaced by the Kuomintang regime led by Chiang Kai-shek. They played a fraud of "constitution" while implementing counter-revolutionary and military suppression, with the intention of moderating the resistance of the people and realizing the internal unification of counterrevolutionaries. In 1931, Chiang Kai-shek established the "Provisional Constitution for the Political Training Period of the Republic of China. This constitution included some formulas, terms and phrases from the bourgeois republic constitution, but essentially, it was a feudal fascist state organizational law. In July 1956, Chiang Kai-shek launched a counterrevolutionary civil war throughout China, illegally convened the "National Assembly" and adopted the "Constitution of the Republic of China" which was published in the new year of 1947. This constitution represented the will of the feudal landlords and bureaucrat-comprador classes — the imperialist running dogs. It stipulated a social and state system beneficial to the reactionary ruling classes and imposed it on the people. It was a constitution of selling the country, waging civil war and implementing a fascist dictatorship against the communists, the people and the revolution. "Under the guise of the Constitution, it was entirely a one-party dictatorship." (Mao Zedong, "On the New Democratic Constitution") Being opposed and repudiated by the Chinese people, this constitution finally became a sacrificial victim of the Chiang Kai-shek kingdom soon after it appeared.

After the May 4 movement, the new democratic revolution, led by the CCP opened a new page in the history of the new democratic constitutional movement. Its target was to found a people's republic of joint dictatorship by several revolutionary classes to replace the outdated bourgeois republic. The Chinese people, led by the CCP, set up an entirely new people's democratic power in the revolutionary bases and at the same time adopted for the first time in history, a constitutional document which reflected the desires and the interests of the laborers. It was the tool for the revolutionary dictatorship.

In 1931, the worker-peasant democratic government in the Soviet area promulgated the "Constitutional Program of the Soviet Republic of China" which was revised later in 1934. It stipulated that the state system of the Soviet Republic of China belonged to the worker-peasant democratic dictatorship, and that the political system was the congresses of worker-peasant-soldiers under democratic centralism. The basic task of the worker-peasant democratic dictatorship was to eliminate all feudal forces, to expel the forces of the imperialist superpowers from China and to unite China. It also stipulated the principles of a wide range of democratic rights of the worker-peasant laboring masses and the equality of all nationalities. It publicized and implemented the policy of defending the "complete freedom and independence of the nation of China" and the foreign policy of proletarian internationalism. Despite some of the stipulations being affectied by the third "left" opportunist line existing in the CCP, this was the first constitutional document officially adopted and promulgated by a people's representative congress in Chinese history. It was the early summing up of experiences in the establishment of the revolutionary power of the Chinese people, led by the CCP. It reflected the revolutionary will of the Chinese people in the fight against imperialism and feudalism and desire for real democratic freedom. It further pushed forward the revolutionary struggle of the people in the base areas and throughout the country.

In 1946, the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia border area government issued the "Constitutional Principles of the Shaanxi-Gansu-Ningxia Border Area" which summarized the experiences in the building of power in the liberated areas as well as in the democratic constitutional movement. It played a leading role in the building of democratic power in the liberated areas and it encouraged the people in the areas controlled by the Kuomintang in their struggle for democratic politics.

Soon after the great victory of the new democratic revolution, the Constitution of the Kuomintang reactionary regime was thrown into the litter bin. Under the leadership of the CCP, the Chinese people founded the new China of democratic dictatorship. The "common program" adopted by the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference in September 1949, played the role of the provisional constitution of the PRC. In 1954, the first NPC adopted the first socialist constitution which played an important role in the socialist revolution and construction in China.

Reviewing the history of modern China's constitutions, the facts have proved the following undeniable truths: It was only possible for the people to create their own constitution through the victory of the people's democratic revolution led by the CCP; a new democratic, socialist constitution was an historical inevitability; and it was only socialism which could save China.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON PLANNED, COMMODITY ECONOMIES

[Article by He Wei [0149 0251]: "On Planned Economy and Commodity Economy"]

[Text] In their article entitled "Carrying Out Planned Economy Is a Must in Adhering to Socialism," Xie Xin and Ma Biao stressed that the essential feature of socialist economy is planned economy. This is a correct idea. However, in a large part of their article the idea of socialist commodity economy is replaced by "socialist commodity production and commodity exchange." In fact, commodity economy is the theoretical term in a short form for the actual economic life. Commodity production and commodity exchange constitutes the basic content of commodity economy and therefore is essentially no different from it. The problem is not whether we should use the term commodity economy, but whether we are able to understand the nature and position of the commodity economy under socialist conditions. It is certainly wrong to think that under socialism there should be only commodity economy and no planned economy. On the other hand, it is also wrong to think that under our present socialist conditions there should be only planned economy and no commodity economy. As long as one does not deny that planned economy is the essential feature of a socialist economy when he talks about commodity economy, we cannot think that he is wrong because he mentions commodity economy. Similarly, it is also completely wrong for us to treat commodity economy as being similar in nature to capitalism when we say that commodity economy is a feature of socialism. However, we cannot say one is wrong if we regard commodity economy as one of the things that distinguish actual socialism from the socialism described by Marx. That is why I think that we can continue to use the idea of commodity economy. At the same time, I also believe that we should not spend much time and energy in defining the term of commodity economy through debates and that the key problem now is how to correctly handle the relationships between planned economy and commodity economy.

1. On Planned Economy

What we mean by the term planned economy is the basic form in which the society (or the state) manages the whole socialist economy. It means managing the economy of the whole society in a planned manner in accordance with the objective proportionate relationships that are required by the socialized mass production and on the basis of the socialist public ownership of the means of production. This must utilize a highly scientific and very strict management of the economy and should not utilize a subjective management according to an arbitrary plan. Thus this planned economy will conform to the conscious planned management of the society that Marx and Engels mentioned. Of course, it has a wider scope and includes government input in giving supply quotas through allotting quota coupons or issuing quota cards for the commodities in short supply. These measures show the government's concern about the people's livelihood.

The planned economy that is demanded by socialized mass production can only be realized on the basis of the establishment of the public ownership of the means of production. On the other hand, it is a form of management of the public-owned economy. As this kind of planned economy includes social production, distribution, exchange and consumption, those who have the power to formulate and make policy decisions in formulating the plans in the planned economy will have the actual power of management in arranging and handling the socialist production relations. Thus they will become the actual owners of the public-owned means of production in a socialist society. For example, the ownership of the state over the means of production in a state-owned enterprise is realized by enforcing an overall plan by the state on the enterprise to control its supplies, production, marketing, manpower, finance and assets. Thus the state takes all the economic activities of the enterprise under the control of the state's plan. If the state reduces this power of planning and hands over a part of the power of management by plans to local governments or to some departments and allows enterprises to have some power and control over their own economic activities, obviously the scope of power of the management of the planned economy will undergo a change and so will the relationships between the enterprises and the state. As a result, in actual life, area ownership and department ownership will emerge though the state has not declared that there has been a change in the form of ownership. In the past, when the malpractice of arbitrary command prevailed, which was a result of the practice of taking food grain as the key link, the production teams had to pull up the soyabean and watermelon seedlings that they had already planted because the upper-level organizations said that they had violated the plan. When this happened, the collective ownership of these production teams was infringed upon, though there was no public declaration that the collective ownership of production teams had been cancelled.

The planned economy is the form needed to realize the socialist public ownership. This is a characteristic and the essence of the socialist planned economy. If the state loses its power of planned management over the enterprises, state ownership will exist in name only. That is why we say that adhering to the planned economy is actually adhering to the public ownership.

However, if we overstress the planned economy, make our plans too rigid and enlarge the scope excessively, we will deprive the enterprises of the scope that is needed to give full play to their initiatives. Thus there would be slow production growth, low economic effect, an unbalanced relationship between production and marketing and the malpractices of overstocking and waste. This, aggravated by lapses in communications, delay in solving problems already discovered, and low work efficiency, makes it difficult to give full play to the superiority of the socialist system. For a time, many comrades have criticized planning work. What they criticized was in essence those defects in our planning work, but they did not mean by their criticism to abolish the planned economy.

Naturally, in actual work many things, such as separatism, departmentalism and the trend of liberalization, may occur and hinder the carrying out of the planned economy. However, the occurrence of these things should not be regarded as solely resulting from some comrades' criticism against the planning work of the past. It stemmed from many factors and was also related to our failure to adapt our policies, decrees and planned management to what we had done in enlivening the economy. Therefore, in stressing the planned economy, we should not merely conduct some theoretical propaganda but we should also solve some actual problems.

2. On Commodity Economy

The idea of commodity economy should have very broad denotations. It must include everything related to commodities such as commodity production, commodity exchange, market supply and demand, the system of prices, the law of value and even the currency. At the same time, people's economic relationships are also embodied in commodity economy.

Under capitalist conditions, the commodity economy covers with its material formation the relationship of exploitation of the workers by the capitalists. Under socialist conditions, this relationship of exploitation of men by men is eliminated, but the economic relationships between people are still realized, to a great extent, in the form of commodity economy. Therefore, in discussing commodity economy, we should see not only its general but also its special characteristics. If we only see its general characteristics, we will possibly confuse socialist commodity economy with a capitalist one and treat all commodity economies as being capitalistic in nature. On the other hand, if we see only its special characteristics and fail to see its general characteristics, we will fail to be on guard against any possible results it may bring about. Then when problems crop up, we would be so surprised that we would incorrectly think that all these problems have stemmed from the idea of commodity economy and that therefore the idea of commodity economy should be eliminated. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, in order to enliven the economy, we have theoretically put forth the idea of attaching importance to commodity economy, respecting economic law and especially making a breakthrough into the forbidden zone by regarding means of production as commodities. This is a great achievement. Lately some problems have cropped up in the economic field, but the reasons these problems have cropped up does not lie in the idea we have put forth but in our failure to adopt other measures to coordinate with the measures we have adopted in realizing this idea. Therefore, the problem now is how we should strengthen planned management and make it more scientific and more strict and not how we should criticize the idea of commodity economy.

The historical experience of socialism has time and again proved that commodity economy is an important problem related to socialist economy which we should handle prudently, and should never neglect or even confuse it with capitalist commodity economy or criticize it.

Since commodity economy still exists in a socialist society, the law of value works not only in the field of circulation but also in the field of production. As long as there is commodity exchange, preventing the law of value from playing its role runs counter to the basic principle of Marxism. As Engels said: "In a society where commodities are produced and exchanged, anyone who wants to can establish the rule that the time involved in labor determines value; but on the other hand, they forbid the competition from making this determination which, generally speaking, is the only feasible means to determine value, by allowing the competition to force prices down; this will only prove that, at least in this respect, he has adopted a despicable attitude toward the law of value, an attitude that a Utopist usually adopts." ("Collected Works of Marx and Engels" vol 21, p 215) Therefore, this despicable attitude toward the law of value means in essence abandoning commodity production. The law of value is the law that governs commodity economy and neither of them can be divorced from the other, so it is impossible to abandon the latter and at the same time preserve the former. This is what we should pay special attention to under the socialist conditions.

Since the means of production has also become a commodity, the scope of the operation of the law of value has widened and a change has occurred in the power, responsibility and interests of the enterprises. Two things may then occur to the economic position and role of an enterprise. The first is that the economic interests of the enterprise itself conform to the interests of the society as a whole, and the second is that the economic interests of the enterprise are in conflict with those of the whole society. Generally speaking, the former is the case for most enterprises and the latter is the case for a minority of the enterprises. Nevertheless, if we do not adopt a few control measures, when the latter occurs there will be increasing instances of departmentalism, paying attention only to the interests of the enterprises, and the interests of the state will be neglected.

This will give rise to some anarchistic practices in our social production. Therefore, we should find a way through research to ensure that when we enliven the economy and expand the decision-making power of the enterprises, we will be able to make the economic activities of the enterprises conform with the state's economic plans and at the same time give full play to the initiative of the enterprises within the limits of the plans. Of course, a solution to this problem would be very involved, but the key lies in correctly handling the relationships between the interests of the state and the enterprise (and the individual). If we solve this problem satisfactorily, we will be able to achieve the goal of making our economy lively but not confused and well controlled but not rigid.

3. On the Relationships Between Planned Economy and Commodity Economy

Planned economy is the basic feature of a socialist economy and commodity economy is an important economic factor in a socialist society. Therefore, the objective reality determines that the two should co-exist for a long time. As to how to handle their relationships, Comrade Chen Yun has put forth that we should take the planned economy as the core and supplement it with the regulation of the market mechanism. This has clearly defined their positions, roles and their principal and supplementary relationships. It is a principle of great significance in guiding our actual work. We should make a theoretical analysis and exposition of this correct principle.

According to Marx' and Engels' theory, commodity economy and planned economy are opposed to and exclude one another. According to the practices in our country, they exist side by side and when one of them increases, the other decreases. In Marx' and Engels' view, commodity production is related to the private ownership of the means of production. Under the conditions of private ownership and the social division of labor, private labor can only be turned into the labor of society through exchange. But under the contions of public ownership, the society can allot labor in a planned manner and private labor will be directly realized as the labor of society. Therefore, once the society has the means of production in its possession, planned economy will replace and exclude commodity economy. However, the reality in socialist societies has shown that as yet the present socialist societies have not developed to the stage of socialism as described by Marx and Engels and therefore we cannot completely eliminate commodity economy. The establishment of the public ownership of the means of production has eliminated the contradiction between private labor and the labor of society, but the contradiction between the labor of individuals and the labor of society still exists. This means that the labor of individuals cannot yet be directly realized as the labor of society. As for the society, it always recognizes and measures the labor time spent by various enterprises as the criterion of socially necessary labor time. An enterprise always hopes that a smaller amount of labor time can be recognized by the society as an adequate amount of socially necessary labor time. The larger the amount of labor time recognized by society, the greater the profits of the enterprise. Conversely, the smaller the amount recognized by society, the smaller the profits of the enterprise and moreover, the enterprise may even suffer losses. Therefore, this contradiction between the labor of individuals and the labor of society is the source of the contradiction between the economic interests of the enterprise and the society as well as a motive force that promotes the development of commodity production. In order to solve this contradiction, we should strengthen the management by plans and pay attention to making economic levers work. If we do not strengthen the management by plans, we will not be able to safeguard the interests of the society. On the other hand, if we do not pay attention to making economic levers work, we will not be able to correctly handle and harmonize the relationships between the interests of the state, the enterprise and the individual. We can adopt the following two measures:

The first measure is that the state divides all the products and enterprises into a few categories in accordance with the interests of the whole society and decides which categories should be controlled by the instructions of the state plans, which categories should be regulated by the law of value, which categories should both be controlled by the instructions of the state plans and be regulated by the law of value and to what extent the enterprises and commodities in a particular category should be controlled and regulated. The category an enterprise belongs to should not be determined by the enterprise itself, but should be determined by the state in accordance with the actual conditions. This measure is relatively better suited to the actual conditions in our country and is more simply and easily carried out because its implementation will not have a wide involvement. For a time in the future, we should adopt this measure, but viewed as a long-term measure it needs to be continuously perfected and improved.

The second measure is that the production and distribution of all products in short supply and related to the state plan and the people's livelihood must be controlled by the instructions of state plans, and that all other products need not be controlled by the state plans and their production and circulation should be spontaneously regulated by the law of value. This measure also requires the formulation of the unified economic plans of the state, but these plans are only circulated to the enterprises as a reference. For those products that we fail to produce enough of to fulfill the targets of the state plans and to meet the demand of the society, the economic management department should give preferential treatment to their producers and encourage the producers to increase their production by means of raising their prices, lowering their tax rates, providing bank loans and lowering the credit interest rate given to these enterprises. Conversely, if the products are being produced in excess of the targets of the plans and the demand of the society, the economic management department should restrict their production. The characteristics of this measure are making the enterprises voluntarily carry out the state plans by means of using the state plans as the criteria and using economic levers and the law of value to regulate the activities of the enterprises. This will facilitate giving full play to the initiative of the enterprises and enlivening the economy in the light of local conditions. Of course, this measure is more difficult to adopt, more complicated to work, is slower to produce remarkable results and demands a certain level of management expertise. However, these difficulties will become easier to overcome after we have passed the initial stage and lead the operation of the whole economy onto a normal path. Then we will be able to overcome them by making some adjustment. This can be considered as a measure that we will strive to adopt in the future.

In order to achieve the transition from adoption of the first measure to adoption of the second, we should reform the existing economic management system. The major aspects of the reform should be separating economic management from political administration and establishing various kinds of specialized trade companies and various kinds of economic centers on the basis of organizing a nationwide economic network. The state will exercise its leadership and management by plans through the specialized trade companies and the economic centers and at the same time will supervise and examine, through the economic management departments of the governments at all levels, how the enterprises carry out the government's plans and policies and how they observe the government's decrees and regulations. Thus we will be able to combine economic levers with administrative control. This will be favorable to giving full play to the supplementary role of the regulation of the market mechanism as well as to ensuring the fulfillment of the state economic plans. By doing so, we will enable our national economy to develop healthily in accordance with the demand of the objective economic law.

GUANGMING RIBAO VIEWS PLANNED MANAGEMENT

[Article by Wang Jiye [3769 4480 2814] : "An Important Principle for Planned Management -- on Application of Administrative and Economic Measures"]

[Text] The economy of socialist countries is planned. To effectively manage a planned economy, we must use both administrative and economic measures. Neither should be ignored. How can we correctly apply administrative and economic measures to manage economy? Our view is that administrative measures must be based on law of economy while economic measures must be aimed at achieving planned targets.

Administrative Measures Must Be Based on Law of Economy

Managing economy by administrative measures denotes that the leading administrative organs manage economy through economic decrees, mandatory economic plans, economic policies and by assigning tasks to the lower levels. In managing economy by administrative measures, it is necessary to make the economy thrive and to enliven it, not stifle it. Therefore, administrative measures must be based on law of economy. It must accord with the demands of objective law (that is, law of economy and law of nature). Taking the mandatory plans as an example, we must work them out on scientific bases. The scientific nature of plans originates from people's deep understanding (especially people in the administrative departments in charge of comprehensive economy) of the all-round development of the national economy and from our cognition, mastery and application of objective law. Otherwise, all mandatory indexes cannot be combined and will be divorced from one another. Thus, they cannot reflect the interconnection of socialist expanded reproduction. That is to say, to strengthen planning requires a good overall balance of the national economy. Lenin said: "Constantly and consciously keeping balance is actually good planning." ("Collected Works of Lenin," vol 3, p 566) Strictly speaking, an overall balance of national economy can actually be achieved usually during the middle stage of the 5-year plan. This is because the accumulation used in socialist expanded reproduction hardly can fully play its role in the first year of the plan, nor can it provide a corresponding increase in national income. On the other hand, the accumulation used in the last year of the 5-year plan will usually play its role and bring a new increase to national income in that 5-year plan. Such a jagged, interlocking pattern formed in the use of accumulation usually causes great difficulties in the realization of overall balance in the yearly plan of the national economy. In a yearly plan, overall balance can be achieved in some aspects of the national economy (for instance, balance between revenues and expenditures, balance between purchasing power and supply of good). However, judging from the angle of the investment made a big project usually takes about 5 years (some take 5 to 10 years) before it can be put into operation. Experience proves that if there is not a steady 5-year plan, scientific in nature, our national economy can hardly be carried out in a planned and proportionate manner. The 5-year plan is the basic and main form for achieving overall balance of the national economy. Through it, the continuity of economic activities can be guaranteed by linking each phase of the activities. Therefore, the key to making the 5-year plan more scientific lies in its overall balance. This is also the prerequisite to bringing the leading role of the yearly plan into play.

Managing economy by administrative means is, fundamentally speaking, to maintain a proper balance of material interests in the relationship between the state, the collective and the individual so as to ensure the national economy a sound development along with socialist orientation. For example, the production orientation of enterprises must be mainly fixed by the state through unanimous, administrative means. Enterprises should not seek profits without considering the needs of the state. Moreover, they should not do as they please or produce anything just to make profits. On the other hand, the state, on its side, should take all things into consideration. In profit sharing, it should reserve an appropriate proportion for enterprises. The state should also exercise strict control over the total sum of wages (including bonus) by mandatory plans so as to ensure a good balance between purchasing power and supply of goods, to maintain stability of commodity prices and to gradually improve the people's livelihood on the basis of promoting production and labor productivity. A grassroots unit can hardly see to all these complicated economic activities, clearly due to its own position and interests. On the contrary, the state has the advantage of taking a general view of the whole economy and not being limited to considering local interests. Hence, when local interests run counter to overall interests, the state is able to intervene by applying administrative measures in order to make local interests subordinate to overall interests, to being the major economic activities into line with the unified state plan and to coordinate all the activities of the nation like pieces in a chess game. This becomes more important during the period of economic readjustment.

It must be pointed out that managing economy by applying administrative measures does not mean that all measures, big or small, should run everything. This is because our economic activities are too complicated to be brought into the line with the state plan. Besides, it is not necessary to do so. If we insist on doing so, things usually do not turn out the way we want and no good results can be achieved. Therefore, when we manage economy through mandatory plans by applying administrative measures, we must do so according to the circumstances of time, locality and work. Imposing uniformity absolutely is not allowed. The scope of carrying out mandatory plans must be properly confined and adjusted in time according to the economic development and changes of market. Viewed from the relationship between supply and demand, products in short supply must, generally speaking, be put under mandatory plans and controlled by administrative measures. Judging from the importance of products, the state usually imposes plans on some important materials which have a bearing on the national economy, the people's livelihood and the tasks of national construction, and manages to control them by administrative means. And judging from the importance of enterprises in the national economy, mandatory plans should be strengthened over the economic activities of some large-scale state-run enterprises which relate to the whole development of economy. Therefore, the scope of imposing mandatory plans must be ascertained according to the situation of market supply and demand, the importance of products and the position of enterprises in the national economy. Stressing one aspect over another will harm the implementation of planned economy.

In summary, we can see that application of administrative measures must be fully based on law of economy, conform with the actual situation of economic development, and must be advantageous for maintaining a proper balance of economic interests of all respects. If this can be done, administrative measures will surely help enliven the economy. We should not negate the necessity and importance of managing economy by administrative measures only because of some shortcomings we atoned for in the past.

Economic Measures Must Be Aimed at Reaching Planned Targets

Application of administrative measures must be based on law of economy; application of economic measures must follow even further the law of economy. Economic measures principally refer to managing economy by using the relationship between commodity and currency and by using the law of value. Economic measures are mainly brought into play by economic levers such as prices, loans and tax revenues. In the past, we regarded these economic levers only as tools with which to regulate markets. In fact, making use of the relationship between commodity and currency in a planned way and conscientiously making use of the law of value are also characteristic of planned management of economy. Probably, we still are not familiar with the two methods and are unable to make use of them. This is only a question of improvement. However, we should not rule them out in our planned management of economy. We must learn to make good use of the relationship between commodity and currency so as to ensure the fulfillment of planned targets. The following must be done:

1. Application of economic measures must be helpful for the attainment of the overall balance of the national economy. The ratio between accumulation and consumption and the balance between accumulation and national income are the key links in the chain of the overall balance of the national economy. In order to establish a proper ratio between accumulation and consumption and to achieve an overall balance of the national economy in production, distribution and utilization, it is necessary to readjust the formation of accumulation funds and consumption funds by the application of economic measures so that accumulation funds and consumption funds can complement each other. Namely, accumulation funds can complement the supply of means of production, and consumption funds can complement the production of means of consumption. If we fail to readjust the formation of accumulation funds and consumption funds by the application of economic measures, then an imbalance will occur often between accumulation and consumption, and national income in the concrete economic activities though a balance is always arranged in a plan.

2. Application of economic measures must help promote economic results. For a long time, inadequate attention has been paid to improving economic returns in the work of planned economy so that up to now there has been not a fairly comprehensive system concerning technical and economic indices. Under these circumstances, we still must resort to economic measures to attain the instructive indexes of economic results to be assigned by the state in the near future. Through economic measures the state can make comparisons between the labor force and yielded results in order to assess the professional and managerial levels of an enterprise so that a correct assessment can be made. Applying economic measures can help enterprises to link their products with their material interests so as to encourage them to lower costs, improve labor productivity, produce more products needed in society and improve economic results in an all-round way.

3. Application of economic measures must help ensure an attainable rate of economic growth. At present, we must seriously solve the problem of exaggerated rate of economic development. As for some products, their rate of production does rise quickly, but they are not suitable for marketing, are kept long in stock, or are unsalable in markets. These kinds of products usually take up much funds, waste energy and do not benefit the nation and the people. As to the products which are not suitable for marketing, we must reduce or stop their production by means of economic levers. As for the products which are in short supply and urgently needed in society, we must give priority to their production by means of economic levers and encourage enterprises to increase their output. Planned managment of economy in China is still at a low level. Market forecasting (especially long-range forecasting) is not yet fully developed. There is no accurate way to acquire information in a timely manner. Under such circumstances, if we manage to attain a planned fixed rate of economic growth, and want to ensure an attainable rate of economic growth, we must, apart from administrative measures, give rein to economic measures.

It is not easy to coordinate administrative measures with economic ones. To achieve this, must be an appropriate improvement in the current system of planned management. And it is necessary to implement a system of making use of both mandatory plans and guidance ones. In accordance with the different tasks and specific conditions of the economy and social development, the state mandatory plans must be applied to those tasks which have a bearing on the national economy as a whole, such as: requisition by purchase, monopoly purchase, or the imposed levy, allocation and transfer of major farm products by the state; the production, purchase, distribution, allocation and transfer of major industrial products by the state; total investment of fixed assets; large- and medium-sized construction projects; volume of transporting major goods; total volume of import and export trades; state revenues and expenditures; credit receipts and payments; total number of staff and workers in state-run enterprises and the total amount of their wages; the prices of major products, and so forth and so on. Principally, these mandatory plans should be carried out by applying administrative measures. At the same time, guidance plans are applied to tasks which are relatively important in the development of the national economy. These guidance plans are to be used to guide the orientation of economic development of enterprises. They are an important basis for enterprises to work out their own plans. However, these guidance plans are not compulsory and restrictive. They are mainly carried out through economic measures. The general tasks in the national economy can be arranged by grassroot units themselves within the scope of state policies and decrees and according to social needs. These economic activities should be controlled by economic measures. Thus, through mandatory and guidance plans and uncontrolled arrangements of certain economic activities, administrative and economic measures can be well coordinated with one another for the smooth implementation of planned management.

WU FUSHAN CONFERS HONOR TITLE ON AIR FORCE GROUP

[Text] Jinan, 10 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee has conferred the honor title "Red Banner Independent Flight Safety Group" on the independent group of a certain air force flight division. A meeting on conferring the title was ceremoniously held in Jinan on 10 June.

Entrusted by the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, Wu Fushan, deputy commander of the air force, read the Military Commission's order and presented a silk banner to the "Red Banner Independent Flight Safety Group."

Present at the meeting to extend greetings were Su Yiran, secretary of the Shandong Provincial CCP Committee and governor of Shandong; and Xiong Zuofang, deputy commander of the Jinan Pla units. In their speeches, they warmly praised the achievements of the "Red Banner Independent Flight Safety Group" in the past 27 years.

Zhang Yonggeng, political commissar of the air force of the Jinan PLA units, read a decision by the party committee of the air force on learning from the group.

Wnag Zixiang, commander of the air force of the Jinan PLA units, delivered a speech in which he called on his subordinate units to warmly respond to the call of the Military Commission of the CCP Central Committee, modestly learn from the "Red Banner Independent Flight Safety Group" and contribute to the acceleration of revolutionization, modernization and regularization of the air force.

Zu Guangyuan, commander of the "Red Banner Independent Flight Safety Group," pledged in his speech to take the honor as a motive for going forward and working still harder to build the group into an outfit which has ideals, good working style and strong fighting quality, stresses morality, observes discipline, keeps the red banner of safety and serves as a vanguard in both combat and training missions.

The meeting was attended by responsible persons of Shandong Province, the Jinan PLA units and Jinan municipality and some 1,000 air force commanders and fighters.

NAVY PERSONNEL BUILD HARBOR IN XISHA ISLANDS

OW121401 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0730 GMT 12 Jun 82

[Newsletter by XINHUA correspondent Wu Kehe and XINHUA reporter Wang Jinzhong: "A Song of Pioneering on Territorial Seas -- on Deeds of the Engineering Ship Group of a Certain Naval Unit"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- In the motherland's territorial waters of the vast South China Sea, fighters and commanders of the engineer ship group of a certain unit of the people's navy have sailed across the sea and combated winds and waves all year round to promote construction. They have built wharves, dredged sealanes and built lighthouses, displaying the heroic and undaunted spirit of dedication.

One day, the No 609 dredger of the engineering ship group was ordered to sail to Zhongjian Island of the Xisha Islands, far away from the mainland, to excavate a harbor. Zhongjian Island is situated at the southernmost tip of the motherland, where temperatures are often as high as 30-40 degress centigrade. The commanders and fighters, with the hot sun over their heads and the burning deck under their feet, worked over 10 hours on end. Their skins peeled off again and again. After continuous efforts for dozens of days, a wide harbor finally appeared off Zhongjian Island.

STATE COUNCIL APPROVES URBAN CONSTRUCTION PLANS

OW160955 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0715 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently approved the general plan for the urban construction of Wuhan, Hefei and Nanning municipalities. It has, in principle, agreed with the plans submitted by the three cities in nature, scale and layout.

In a letter approving the general plan for urban construction submitted by Wuhan municipality, the State Council pointed out: Wuhan is Hubei's political, economic and cultural center, one of China's important water and ground transportation junctures and an industrial city. It has already become an extremely large city. From now on, we must strictly control urban population and the scale for the use of its land. We must not approve any more new building or expansion projects in the city or the suburban areas. The city's layout must be worked out on the basis of the present city area by proceeding from the principle of readjustment, dividing the city into districts and making them coordinate with each other.

Wuhan is extremely hot in summer. Efforts must be made to strengthen the work of afforestation in the city. It is necessary to bring into full play the predominant role of the Yangtze River's navigation, protect lakes in order to regulate surface runoffs and achieve an ecological balance. It is essential to mark off the boundaries for the east lake scenic district. No unit is allowed to seize land or water surface area within this district. Firm measures must be adopted to guard against water pollution.

In a letter approving the general plan for urban construction submitted by Hefei and Nanning municipalities, the State Council pointed out: Hefei municipality must carry out rational transformation and construction according to the approved general plan. It should discontinue the development of industry that requires large amounts of water and causes serious pollution for the city. It must not build many large public buildings in the old city proper in order to alleviate the traffic congestion at the center of the city.

Nanning city's urban construction must be carried out according to the characteristics of the minority nationalities. Industry must be developed according to local natural resources by making readjustments and tapping the potential of and transforming the existing enterprises. The city must not carry out large, new construction or expansion projects in the city proper. The general plan for urban construction must be carried out in accordance with present conditions and the terrain. Attention must be paid to dividing the city into districts, working out a compact layout and building basic city facilities.

The State Council called on the three cities to pay attention to flood prevention measures. It is also called on them to adopt effective measures to guard against industrial pollution and to strengthen urban environmental protection. It said: All three cities must strengthen their efforts to work out detailed plans for those construction projects which will soon be carried out in their cities. They must make arrangements for such construction projects according to their own financial resources and capabilities while strengthening their management over urban construction.

Prior to this, the State Council also approved the general plans for urban construction submitted by Tangshan, Hohhot, Lanzhou, Changsha and Shenyang municipalities.

STATE STATISTICAL BUREAU ON HOUSING CONSTRUCTION

OW161003 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0059 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- An investigation conducted by the State Statistical Bureau of 18,529 commune members families in 568 counties in China's 28 provinces, municipalities and autonomous regions (except Xizang) revealed that during 1981 an average of 1.2 households in every 10 had new houses. In general, all these newly built houses are spacious, bright and beautiful in style. New houses constructed of bricks and lumber account for 54.4 percent of the total number of new houses. A small number of houses are made of reinforced concrete. In Beijing, Shanghai, Tianjin, Hebei, Liaoning, Jiangsu, Zhejiang, Guangdong and other provinces and municipalities, over 80 percent of the new houses are made of bricks and lumber or reinforced concrete.

The investigation also revealed that in developing rural housing projects, it is necessary to solve the following problems:

1. In developing rural housing projects, it is necessary to strengthen leadership and build houses under a unified plan. There is neither a strict management system nor a unified plan in some localities where commune members often make use of arable land and wantonly fell trees to build houses.

2. The supply of building materials fell far short of the demand. The supply of building materials such as lumber, glass and cement is particularly short.

3. In some localities, commune members must pay excessively high entertainment expenses in the course of building houses.

RURAL WORKSHOPS TO BOOST FOODSTUFFS PROCESSING

OW161708 Beijing XINHUA in English 1511 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- China's rural workshops are to boost foodstuff processing in the next few years in order to make better use of farm products to meet the needs of both city and rural people. This was disclosed by a leading official in charge of the general bureau of commune- and brigade-run enterprises under the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery.

In an interview with the publication ECONOMIC INFORMATION appearing today, the official said the output value of the foodstuff processing industry of the rural communes and their subdivisions, which amounted to 4,360 million yuan in 1981, is planned to double by 1985.

There is great potential for expanding rural foodstuff industry, he said. Workshops run by people's communes and their sub-divisions now process part of the 175 million tons of food grain that has to be processed every year in the countryside. The rest is processed by state-run factories or by peasants themselves. More grain processing mills, therefore, should be built.

With the improvement of their living standard, the official said, peasants will eat less maize and sweet potatoes, the annual output of which now stands at 60 million and 25 million tons, respectively. Rural enterprises can process maize and sweet potatoes into starch, noodles, gourmet powder, amino acid and alcohol, leaving the residue as fodder.

The workshops run by people's communes and their sub-divisions are also encouraged to produce edible oil, soy sauce, vinegar, bean curd, pastry, wine and other drinks.

The official said that rural enterprises should process such perishables as fruit, meat, fish and milk where they are produced.

In 1981, SECONOMIC INFORMATION reports, Henan Province harvested 1.54 million tons of soybeans, 250,000 tons more than the previous record level. The peasants there now still have 250,000 tons of soybeans laid in store in their homes after selling large quantities to state granaries.

The paper calls for building soybean processing factories and asks peasants to process bean products.

In the last few years, the rural foodstuff industry has grown rapidly following the all-round development of agricultural production. At the end of 1981, China's rural people's communes and their sub-divisions had nearly 200,000 foodstuff processing factories, with an annual output value accounting for 6.8 percent of the country's foodstuff industry. This was far from enough for meeting the people's needs, according to ECONOMIC INFORMATION.

Local authorities are urged to support rural foodstuff processing factories in supply of funds, credit, equipment and raw materials and in sales of products.

FUJIAN RIBAO PRAISES ANTISMUGGLING EFFORTS

OW170737 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 9 Jun 82 p 1

[Unattributed commentary: "Be Determined and Grasp the Work to the End]

[Text] The communes and production brigades along the coast that were seriously corrupted by capitalist ideas have now basically checked smuggling, selling of contraband goods, speculation and so forth since work began to rectify these unhealthy trends, and they have begun to take on a new outlook. This is a good beginning. We must be determined to carry the work through to the end and must not relax our efforts.

Our determination to deal blows at serious criminal activities in the economic field is firm. This is a powerful support for the cadres and masses who uphold principle and dare to struggle, giving them stronger backing and enabling them to work more boldly. It loudly sounds the alarm for those who have confused ideas and are hesitating at the crossroads, thus playing a rule in saving them. It undoubtedly is a head-on blow to those who take part in illegal and criminal activities. In the beginning, when the unhealthy trends of smuggling, selling contraband goods, speculation and so forth were rampant in some places along the coast, did not some comrades feel that it was a headache, a tough problem, and were they not worried that the unhealthy trends could not be checked? However, when the party committees at various levels made up their minds, dispatched work teams to tackle the problem at the grassroots level, widely conduct the "four-three-two" education [education on "four uphold's, three considerations and two oppositions," namely, uphold the four fundamental principles, give consideration to the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, and oppose smuggling and speculation on the one hand and unhealthy trends and evil practices on the other] and seriously investigate and handle cases, the unhealthy trends were basically checked. The comrades of the work teams reported that when many people realized that this time the higher authorities were really determined to tackle the problem, their wait-and-see attitude toward the struggle turned into a positive and active one, and their doubts about the work teams turned into trust and support. The facts show that the determination to grasp the rectification of key communes and brigades along the coast has won popular support. The provincial party committee's plan for implementing the central guidelines is in keeping with the realities in Fujian. Conversely, if we fail to make up our minds, are weak and incompetent, irresolute and hesitant, we will lose popular support and will bring irreparable losses to our cause.

Firm determination is not just words but, more important, it should be expressed in actions. This is exactly what the comrades in these places have been doing. The party committees at various levels strengthened leadership; the various departments cooperated closely and fought in coordination; and the comrades of the work teams worked hard. They went among the masses to give wide publicity to the central "decision" and conduct investigation and study; they helped cadres and the masses draw a distinction between getting rich through labor and making a profit by smuggling, conducted education in the light of the actual conditions on giving consideration to the interests of the state, the collective and the individual, and paid close attention to production; they did thoroughgoing and painstaking ideological education on those who were questionable; and so forth. As a result, they educated and united the cadres and masses and isolated the criminals. It is also from this that the masses have seen our determination. Quite a number of cadres said that whether we are determined to tackle the problem makes a big difference. What they said is true.

Dealing blows at serious criminal activites in the economic field is a long and constant struggle. Therefore, we must be determined to carry it through and must not waver.

Through rectification, many strong party branch leading cores like those of the Meilin, Dongsheng, Haixing and Shima production brigades should be built to conscientiously implement the party's line, principles and policies, uphold the four fundamental principles, consciously identify themselves politically with the party Central Committee, lead the cadres and masses to combat smuggling and resist corruption, develop production, adhere to the socialist road and build a great wall of steel against smuggling and corruption. With a large number of such party branches, we will successfully implement the policy of opening up to the outside world and reinvigorating the domestic economy and promote our material and cultural development. Let us be determined, grasp the work to the end and win still greater victories in this struggle.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN ON BECOMING WELL-TO-DO

["Xiang Nan, secretary [as received] of the Fujian Provincial CCP Committee, said to snake-raising expert Chen Mingtong: The Party Will Always Allow People To Become Well-To-Do Through Their Own Labor; Peasants Should Have Nothing To Worry About in this Regard" -- XINHUA headlined]

[Excerpts] Fuzhou, 11 Jun (XINHUA) -- Leading comrades of the Fujian Provincial CCP Committee including Xiang Nan and Wen Xiushan came to the Linnei production brigade in suburban Zhangzhou municipality on 11 June to call on snake-raising expert Chen Mingtong and his family. They asked Chen Mingtong to dispel his worries and boldly raise snakes. They said that the party's policy to allow peasants to work hard to become well-to-do will remain unchanged.

Chen Mingtong's family has been raising snakes for three generations. People often call his family the "snake-raising" family. He raises snakes in his family mainly for the snake gallbladder and bile which are used in traditional Chinese medicine. Chen also sells snake meat and skin on the market.

At a time when Chen Mingtong was prepared to expand his business, some people stirred up some cold winds, saying: "Fame portends trouble for men just as a tree is afraid to grow high." The activities to strike at economic crimes will soon hit those who become too conspicuous." It was at that time that Xiang Nan and other leading comrades came to see Chen Mingtong, making Chen's whole family very happy.

Comrade Xiang Nan said: The party forever allows people to become well-to-do by working hard in proper ways. There should be no worry whatsoever. The economic crimes that prevail at present have nothing to do with the practice of working hard to become well-to-do. There should be no confusion at all. Hearing Xiang Nan's remarks, Chen Mingtong said with feeling: Now, I have nothing to worry about any more. He expressed his determination to make even greater contributions to the state.

NANFENG RIBAO URGES VIGILANCE AGAINST CORRUPTION

[Commentator's article: "It Is Necessary To Be Vigilant Against Corruption by Capitalist Ideology in the Field of Ideology and Culture"]

[Text] The struggle against serious crimes in the economic field is going on in depth in the whole province. This is a serious struggle against corruption. The practice of the struggle has taught us that while carrying out struggle against economic crimes, it is necessary to earnestly grasp the struggle against corruption in the ideological and cultural field and conduct education for the masses and cadres in vigilance against capitalist spiritual sugar-coated bullets.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, along with the constant development in the economic construction of our province, the situation in the ideological and cultural field has become better and better. The "five stresses and four beauties" drive is in full swing. Socialist culture is flourishing, with gradual prosperity in the garden of literature and art and the constant improvement of the cultural life of the masses. In recent years, a special policy has been adopted and flexible measures have been taken in our province. Great achievements have been made in importing and introducing advanced science and technology from capitalist countries and in cultural exchange with people of various countries. However, some decadent capitalist ideology and culture have also wormed their way in. This is a fact we are not going to conceal. Some of our comrades on the front of ideology and culture, influenced by the anarchist trend of thought advocated by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the period of 10-year chaos, cannot distinguish fragrance from stink and lose vigilance against the attack of capitalist spiritual sugar-coated bullets. Not only are they unable to spontaneously wage a struggle against decadent capitalist ideology and culture; their proletarian stand too is shaken, hence they consciously or unconsciously act as voluntary propagandists. Their main performances are as follows:

First, the tendency of bourgeois liberalization. Since studying and carrying out the relevant instructions of the Central Committee, some achievements have already been scored in opposing the tendency of bourgeois liberalization all over the province. Some units have strengthened party leadership and upheld the four basic principles. They are praised by the masses for achieving good results. But this should not be overestimated. There has been little improvement in some other units where the tendency of bourgeois liberalization still prevails. For instance, some works conspicuously corrupted by bourgeois ideology have been published in some magazines. Not long ago, some picture-story books adopted from foreign films were published in some small newspapers, against the regulations of the Central Committee and the provincial party committee. These foreign films have not yet been censored by the relevant department and have as yet not been shown in public. Some troupes, heedless of instructions from the higher authorities, continue to play dramas depicting feudal superstition and pornography.

Second, blind worship of foreign things. We have always advocated learning and applying the good elements in the culture of the capitalist countries for our reference. These good elements are useful in the development of our socialist culture. Nevertheless, some people have, without making concrete analysis or discerning good from bad, imitated and parroted novels, songs, films and TV shows from capitalist countries and Hong Kong, in content and form. Others have "imported" novels of martial arts, detective and love stories, which are filled with either murder, horror or the doctrine of love above all. They have regarded these decadent things as fashionable and spread their poison.

Third, the capitalist tendency of regarding everything as a commodity. The production of spiritual products in socialist society must meet the spiritual requirements of all the people. Therefore, our spiritual production departments must pay attention to the quality of the products. It is our demand that every product must be full of patriotic, revolutionary and healthy ideology, providing aesthetic enjoyment in spirit and supplying courageous strength to march forward.

Although most spiritual products have to be circulated and popularized through the channels of circulation, they should not be regarded as pure commodities, and for making money only. Nowadays, however, bent solely on profit for the purpose of making more money and getting more remuneration, some comrades have published in the newspapers many novels concerning martial arts and detective stories. They have introduced anecdotes about private lives of film stars at home and abroad so as to lure readers. They broadcast pornographic and vulgar music in cabarets and ballrooms so as to make them popular.

All these things have yielded bad results. They make society dirty and poison the cadres and masses, especially the younger generation, and are harmful to the construction of socialist spiritual civilization.

There are two kinds of bourgeois sugar-coated bullets. One is the material sugar-coated bullet. Lured by money and property, one will proceed on the capitalist road and become deeply corrupted and degenerate. The other is the spiritual sugar-coated bullet. The bourgeoisie has, through decadent capitalist ideology and culture, preached the decadent and rotten capitalist world-outlook, outlook on life and life-style, so as to make us relax our will to fight and confuse our thought, and shake our political stand and faith. In this way, it infiltrates, corrupts and disintegrates the ideological field. We must have a clear mind and fully realize the seriousness of the corruption done by the capitalist ideology in the cultural and ideological field of our province, so as to incessantly and purposefully carry out education for the masses and cadres against the attack of the spiritual sugar-coated bullet of the bourgeoisie. Only thus can we carry through the struggle against corruption in the economic field deeply and help to strengthen the construction of socialist spiritual civilization.

Therefore, ideological education in patriotism and communism must be strengthened on the front of ideology and culture, especially for party members and cadres. It is necessary that we should be organized to study again the relevant teaching of Marx, Lenin and Comrade Mao Zedong and study "the decision of the CCP Central Committee and the State Council on fighting against serious crimes in the economic field." We should heighten our socialist awareness and strengthen our ability to distinguish and boycott the influence of decadent capitalist ideology. Communist Party members must enhance party spirit, maintain communist purity and be sober and staunch revolutionaries.

We must sum up experiences since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, especially since the forum on problems on the ideological front held by the party Central Committee last year. We must check on the situation in carrying out the Central Committee's instructions, and sum up experiences and lessons in connection with reality so as to find out and accumulate experience for doing better in ideological and cultural work in the new period. We must firmly and steadily adhere to the orientation of serving the people and socialism. We must further carry out the "double hundred" policy and adhere to the four basic principles so as to make the ideological and cultural work serve better the four modernizations drive.

The party's leadership at various levels on the ideological and cultural front should be strengthened and improved. The party's leadership is the basic guarantee for doing well in ideological and cultural work in the new period. It should be strengthened and improved in a steady and practical way. In our work we must oppose both the simple and rude attitude and the attitude of laissez-faire. We strongly advocate the fine custom of going deep into the masses and practice, and solving problems in a solid way. We must strengthen ideological and political work, praise good people, good deeds and good ideology in our own units, and dare to criticize wrong ideological tendencies. We must strengthen control over importing, producing, broadcasting and selling audio and videotapes and the control of newspapers and magazines, books and pictures, films and television. Also we must strengthen control of the repertoire and the advertisements of the performing groups. In the management work, we must oppose both the tendency of liberalization and also the tendency of oversimplification. It is not correct to open up or forbid everything without considering whether it is good or bad. We must treat different cases differently. We must realize that the strengthening of controls is aimed at making our ideological and cultural work more healthy, more prosperous and more active. It absolutely is not aimed at stifling things.

BEIJING'S HAN YING ATTENDS CYL CONGRESS OPENING

HKJ51227 Beijing City Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Summary] The Seventh Beijing Municipal CYL Congress opened in the municipal exhibition hall on the afternoon of 9 June. Some 900 delegates from all fronts in the municipaltiy are attending the congress on behalf of the 760,000 CYL members throughout the municipality. The sixth municipal CYL congress was held in 1973. Leading comrades of the CYL Central Committee, the Beijing Municipal CCP Committee, the municipal people's congress standing committee, the municipal government and the municipal CPPCC committee, including Han Ying, Liu Weiming, Keyum Bawudun, Duan Junyi, Jiao Ruoyu, Jia Tingsan, Chen Xitong, Ye Lin, Zhao Pengfei and Liu Daosheng, attended the opening ceremony. Responsible comrades of all departments, committees and offices of the municipal CCP committee and all districts, counties, bureaus and mass organizations also attended the opening ceremony. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, (Wei Kepeng), deputy secretary of the municipal CYL committee, announced the opening of the congress. Municipal CYL Committee Secretary Jin Jian delivered the opening speech, saying: "In the great struggle to implement the four instructions of the Secretariat of the CCP Central Committee and to build the capital, uniting and leading all young people throughout the municipality building a socialist modernized capital is a supreme mission which history has entrusted to the Beijing CYL organizations. The young people of our generation in the capital must live up to the earnest expectations of the party and the people and, with our hard-working hands and the sweat of our youth, build a socialist modernized, fine and clean capital with a high degree of democracy and a high degree of civilization. With our practical actions, we must show that we are worthy of the party's cultivation, the people's trust and the great times."

In conclusion, Jin Jian said: "We hope that, as masters of our own affairs, we will justify the great trust placed in us by all CYL members throughout the municipality. We must concentrate our energy, unite as one, carry forward democracy, pool the wisdom and efforts of everyone and make this congress a success. We believe that under the leadership of the municipal CCP committee and the CYL Central Committee and with the concerted efforts of everyone, this of everyone, this congress will be a congress of holding high the communist banner, a congress of unity and inspiring revolutionary enthusiasm and a congress of fostering communist morality and customs. We congratulate the success of the congress in advance."

CYL Central Committee First Secretary Han Ying and Jiao Ruoyu, municipal CCP committee second secretary and mayor, spoke. On behalf of the CYL Central Committee and the municipal CCP committee, they extended warm greetings to the congress. Municipal CYL Committee First Deputy Secretary (Jia Chunwang) made a work report entitled, "Unite and Lead All Young People Throughout the Municipality To Be a Brave Shock Force in Building a Socialist Modernized Capital."

BEIJING PLA WRITERS, ARTISTS HOLD FORUM

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jun (XINHUA) -- Writers and artists of PLA units stationed in Beijing held a forum on 7 June to study Comrade Mao Zedong's 15 letters to literary and art circles, Comrade Chen Yun's speech "Questions on the Two Trends Among the Party's Literary and Art Workers," and the note written by the Propaganda Department of the CCP Central Committee in publishing Comrade Chen Yun's speech. In the course of discussion, the participants held that writers and artists in army units must be good communists and revolutionary armymen first, arm themselves with Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and impose strict demands on themselves, with the criteria set for party members and revolutionary armymen.

Comrades at the forum spoke of the concern shown by the proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation like Mao Zedong, Zhou Enlai, Liu Shaoqi and Zhu De and by the central leading comrades in recent years toward writers and artists. Looking back on how each of them had grown from a young student, a folk artist and a painter to be a party literary and art worker, they credited their present upbringing to training by the party and the people and nurturing by Mao Zedong's Thought. Many comrades pledged themselves to work more cautiously and diligently for the party and to serve socialism and the people in the new historical period.

Touching on the vital realistic significance of studying these documents, participating comrades said: Achievements of the literary and art front in recent years are enormous and the situation among literary and art rank and file is basically good. However, some problems still exist. Just as the propaganda department's note pointed out, party spirit among a handful of people is very poor. Individual writers, contaminated by evil influence, are not behaving as communists should. All this, indeed, is well worth guarding against. One of the causes giving rise to these erroneous trends and bringing about the mistakes committed by a small number of comrades is the problems of "being special" and "self-important" as noted by Comrade Chen Yun 39 years ago.

Regarding the duties of party literary and art workers, the participants said that we must first of all be worthy communists and revolutionary armymen. We must abide by discipline, study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, plunge ourselves into the thick of life and become closer to the masses in thought as well as in feeling. They pointed out emphatically: Only by truly and wholeheartedly upholding communist ideals can we justly and forcefully inspire the people to make progress.

At the forum, the participants mentioned specifically that correctly developing criticism and self-criticism is an important way to enhance the party spirit among literary and art workers and to do away with evil influence. In conducting criticism and self-criticism, we should tell the truth and not save face. In this respect, we have emulated the brilliant examples set by the proletarian revolutionaries of the older generation.

This forum was called by the cultural department of the General Political Department. Liu Baiyu presided over the meeting and spoke. Among those who also spoke were Li Wei, Zhang Shaoting, Yao Yuanfang, Wei Wei, Wang Xingang, Ma Yutao, Chang Boahua, Li Shuangjiang, Su Shenglan, Dong Chensheng, Xu Huaizhong, Ding Yisan, Suo Yunping, Li Jun, Jing Mukui, Hu Defeng and Li Binkui.

PREFECTURE IN HEBEI SOLVES IDEOLOGICAL PROBLEMS

HK151312 Shijiazhuang Hebei Provincial Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 9 Jun 82

[Text] Tangshan Prefecture has seriously solved the ideological and practical problems arising among rural grassroots cadres, strengthened the building of rural grassroots leadership groups, promoted the further stability and perfection of the agrocultural production responsibility system and impelled the development of current agricultural production and all aspects of rural work.

In the course of implementing the agricultural production responsibility system, grassroots cadres of some rural areas in Tangshan Prefecture once had three unsuitable characteristics: They did not understand this reform, had this idea confused with another idea and were resentful and ideologically unsuitable; groups were large and not highly trained, with low efficiency and unsuitable organization; and grassroots cadres did not know management, were not familiar with the job and were methodically unsuitable.

In light of these problems, Tangshan Prefecture has regarded strengthening the building of rural grassroots organizations as an important factor in stabilizing and prefecting the agricultural production responsibility system. It has laid stress on grasping the following four aspects of work:

First, it has done well in grasping ideological education. It has helped grassroots cadres heighten their spontaneity for implementing the principles and policies of the party. Since last year, in conjunction with the implementation of the resolutions of the 6th Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee and the relevant documents on rural work, the whole prefecture has universally trained some 180,000 party members and cadres at the grassroots level and some 14,000 secretaries and deputy secretaries of brigade party branches. Through training, grassroots cadres' understanding of the responsibility system has been enhanced and an ideological foundation for stabilizing and perfecting the production responsibility system has been laid.

Second, it has done well in organizational readjustment. It has first done well in the election of brigade party branches. From winter last year to spring this year, some 90 percent of brigade leadership groups throughout the prefecture have conducted democratic elections. After the elections, the leadership groups have cut the number of personnel to a minimum, raised efficiency and lightened peasants' burdens. Leaders at two levels -- prefectural and county -- have also organized forces and sent them deep into some 400 brigades with problems to help them with their work and the readjustment of their organizations so that the backward situation of these units has improved to varying degrees.

Third, it has strengthened professional training. Since last year, the whole prefecture has trained 120,000 grassroots cadres so that a large number of grassroots cadres have raised their management level.

Fourth, it has improved work conditions. The whole prefecture has given prominence to grasping the work of formulating village codes and conventions and of improving the general mood of society. At present, some 80 percent of brigades have formulated village codes and conventions. The launching of this campaign has promoted people's moral standards and their concept of the legal system.

This provides a basis for cadres to deal with problems and prompts them to work. Leaders at all levels throughout the prefecture persist in politically supporting grassroots cadres who are dealt blows and persecuted because they are responsible for work and act justly. The former also rationally compensate the latter for their economic losses. People who persecute and strike blows at cadres must be severely dealt with to protect grassroots cadres' enthusiasm for work.

NEI MONGGOL CADRES ENJOINED NOT TO ALTER POLICY

SK141120 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 13 Jun 82 SK

[Station commentary: "Do Not Impose New Ideas or Tricks on Policy"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CCP Central Committee, rural and pastoral areas in the region have implemented the production responsibility system in various forms and readjusted production relations to make them suitable to the level of productive forces. At present, the problem with regard to food and clothing of the peasants and herdsmen has been virtually solved. The region is developing rapidly agriculturally and the situation is an inspiring one.

However, influenced by leftist ideology and becoming inveterate lefthanders," some cadres, well-fed and at loose ends, are trying to play new tricks on policy. Still some cadres, deprived of their authority over what to plant and how to distribute in favor of the peasants following the introduction of the production responsibility system, are unable to [words indistinct] and want to revert to the former state. What the masses of peasants are worrying about most is none other than this reversion. They fear a reversal of policy. Comrades who conducted field investigations have universally reported that people in almost all areas where the production responsibility system is smoothly implemented are in a stable mood and enthusiastic toward production. People in areas which deviate from the party's policy and impose new ideas and play new tricks on policy are in low spirits and apathetic. Peasants in these areas agree that the production responsibility system is a good way of eliminating poverty. [words indistinct] Therefore, they are unwilling to put in hard labor on the land and would rather live one day at a time. They reluctantly have the land sown to crops and leave it at that and [words indistinct]. They also lack interest in developing forestry, livestock raising, sideline production and a diversified economy and, when they have cash in hand, do not want to purchase livestock or farm tools and expand production, fearing a reoccurrence of communist wind. All in all, the biggest worry of the peasant is a reversion to the former state and they just cannot rest with peace of mind.

In view of this situation, we must repeatedly explain things to the masses. Leading comrades of the central authorities have on more than one occasion explained to the masses that the production responsibility system as it is implemented in various localities will be here to stay for as long as the masses desire. The duration of this system is subject to the masses' wishes. On his recent inspection tour of rural areas, Comrade Zhou Hui, first secretary of the Nei Monggol Autonomous Regional CCP Committee, also pointed out: The central task in rural and pastoral areas at present and for a time to come is to continue to implement the party's principles and policies adopted since the third plenary session. We must improve and stabilize the responsibility system in agricultural and livestock production in a down-to-earth manner. Peasants and herdsmen in rural and pastoral areas may put their minds at ease. Their rights of being masters of their own affairs, the principle of closely combining authority, responsibility and profits and their authority over the adoption of the production responsibility system in line with local conditions will never be altered.

NEI MONGGOL CIRCULAR ON PREVENTING GRASS BORERS

SK161004 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Summary] "The regional people's government issued an emergency circular on 14 June urging all localities to do a good job in preventing and controlling grass borers. The circular states: Since late May, a large number of grown grass borers have appeared in our region's rural and pastoral areas and at present they are spreading throughout the region, posing a threat to the production of agriculture and animal husbandry. The emergency circular of the regional people's government states:

1. The governments at all levels must immediately strengthen leadership, pay close attention to the trend of development of the insect pest situation and make preparations for preventing and controlling them effectively."

2. Extensively mobilize communes and brigades to take strict precautions against grown grass borers and adopt effective measures to control them.

3. Manage and use insecticide wisely and safely. Efforts must be made to organize manpower to repair insect-killing instruments. Agricultural and livestock technological departments in all localities must provide technical guidance in utilizing insecticide. It is not permitted to use highly poisonous insecticide to kill grass borers.

4. Financial, commercial and supply and marketing departments must cooperate with one another to combat grass borers and support this work in terms of financial and material resources. It is necessary to make over-all planning and proper arrangements in using the special funds allocated for controlling insect pests, practice economy, pay attention to economic results and improve the quality of the work.

SHANXI RIBAO ON READJUSTING MILITIA ORGANIZATIONS

[Report by SHANXI RIBAO reporters Yin Jidong [1438 4949 2639], Zhang Silian [1728 1835 6647]: "Readjustment of Militia Organizations Throughout Shanxi Completed Ahead of Schedule"]

[Text] The readjustment of militia organizations in our province was completed 8 months ahead of schedule under the leadership of the provincial CCP committee and the provincial government. This is due to the fact that the CCP committee of the provincial military region attached great importance to this work and the departments concerned coordinated closely. The readjusted militia organizations possess the following characteristics:

1. The militia organizations were reduced both in their scope of construction and in size. After the readjustment, the scope of construction by militia organizations was reduced by 13 percent and the number of personnel was reduced by 58 percent. This is more in keeping with the needs of the four modernizations as well as for the recuperation of the people.

2. The militia became a crack unit with high capacity. In order to cope with the preparations against war and to facilitate the activity, small, incapable "baby soldiers", old, infirm "bearded soldiers" and "mommy soldiers" with children to look after were excluded from the militia organizations. The new militiamen have passed the eye test and they are carefully investigated. Politically, they are reliable and physically, they are strong and of good performance. They have acquired a certain level of cultural and military knowledge. The provincial military region has carried out investigations in over 30 counties and districts, 90 communes (factories and mines), and 120 militia companies or professional subgroups with a total number of 2,983 militia, 94 percent of which have met the requirement.

3. The militiamen have raised their political and ideological consciousness. During the readjustment, 4,575 assistant political instructors were prepared from various regions. The militiamen have acquired the education concerning the militia's character and task, the present situation and war preparedness as well as the concept of people's war through radio broadcasts, newspapers and other mass media. An investigation of 270 militia companies and 7,553 basic militiamen and visits to 389 families have shown that those who well understand the situation, nature and task of the militia and are well acquainted with each other constituted 97 percent and the parents who know what militia unit their sons and daughters have joined constitute 98 percent.

4. The young militia cadres have been reinforced. Care was taken in the readjustment to pick up the excellent and mass-based militiamen who adhered to the four basic principles and possessed the military and political qualifications, then they were transferred to the post of militia cadres. The average age of a militia cadre has dropped from 30-odd to 27.3.

5. The problem of the treatment of professional militia cadres and the compensation for wages lost due to militia service was resolved. The position of the commune armed forces director was clarified as being equivalent to the rank of commune subdirector, and furthermore was admitted into the party committee at the same rank. Generally, militia company cadres participate in the party branch. At the same time, the problem of compensation for wages lost was duly resolved in various places according to their own specific conditions.

6. Party committees and branches at all levels have improved their knowledge of the strategic position of the militia and made militia work an important part of the agenda. A new situation has appeared whereby the whole party has grasped military and secretarial work and is concerned about the militia. Now the CCP committees at all levels are generous in spending their time to study, to lend their men to help the militia in their work and even to spend money for militia expenses. This has forcefully promoted putting militia work on "a sound basis in three aspects."

TIANJIN'S CHEN WEIDA RECEIVES HONG KONG GUESTS

SK151232 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] According to TIANJIN RIBAO, an international technical-exchange exhibition on educational and scientific research instruments was opened yesterday morning at the Tianjin industrial exhibition hall. Wang Guangying, deputy mayor of Tianjin, and (Feng Bingyu), chairman of the Hong Kong (Xinhongji) stock group, cut the ribbon at the opening of the exhibition. Speaking at the opening ceremony were (Zhang Pingzhao), director of the import and export office under the Ministry of Education, and (Cai Junyu), general manager of the Hong Kong (Xinhongji) International Service Limited Company. Over 800 people of departments concerned also attended the opening ceremony.

After the opening ceremony, Deputy Mayor Wang Guangying visited the exhibition hall in the company of (Feng Bingyu) and (Cai Junyu).

This exhibition is sponsored by the Hong Kong (Xinhongji) International Service Limited Company and the Tianjin Cultural Committee under the Ministry of Education. On display are advanced telegraph instruments, computers for laboratory use, chemical analyzing instruments, radiation instruments, measuring instruments and radio surveying instruments, which were made by more than 70 firms in 13 countries and regions. This exhibition will help institutions of higher learning and scientific research units in China in understanding the advanced instruments made by foreign countries and in exchanging data and operating experiences on these instruments.

During the exhibition period, a forum on 29 technical items will be held. Representatives from 36 key universities and colleges will attend this forum. Also attending the forum will be technicians of departments concerned in Tianjin and representatives from institutions of higher learning and scientific research units in various localities.

The Tianjin Cultural Committee under the Ministry of Education gave a banquet on the evening of 13 June in honor of visitors from various circles. On the evening of 14 June, the (Xinhongji) International Service Limited Company gave a return banquet at the Youyi Club. The exhibition will last 7 days and conclude on 20 June.

On the afternoon of 14 June, Chen Weida, first secretary of the Tianjin CCP Committee, received and feted Mr (Feng Bingyu), chairman and general manager of the Hong Kong (Xinhongji) Stock group. TIANJIN BUREAU IMPROVES INTELLECTUAL POLICY WORK

[Excerpts] Tianjin, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- XINHUA editor's note: The following report involves an important issue: The current work of implementing the party's policy on intellectuals is still hampered by certain "leftist" ideas. While studying problems found in implementing the policy on intellectuals, comrades of the leading party group of the Nankai District urban construction bureau in Tianjin used the party Central Committee's instruction on examining the work concerning intellectuals as a weapon, earnestly carried out criticism and self-criticism among themselves and solved the problems found in the course of examining their work. What they have done provides some valuable lessons in eliminating certain "leftist" ideas which obstruct the implementation of the policy on intellectuals. [end of editor's note]

Xue Guangxin, deputy director and engineer of the Nankai District urban construction bureau in Tianjin, recently came back to work after submitting a request for retirement and more than 1 year of absence from work. The first day he returned, he worked energetically at a basic-level unit, supervising the planning of urgan afforestation and the development of a public park.

Xue Guangxin is one of the few specialists in garden engineering in Tianjin. He was appointed deputy director of the Nankai District urban construction bureau in February 1980. But 2 months later he submitted a request for retirement on the ground that he was unable to work normally because of poor health. Although his request was not approved, he refused to set foot in the bureau again. However, he took part in social activities as usual and was never absent from the academic activities sponsored by the society of garden engineering. He even went on an inspection trip to the Ranshan scenic area in Jixian County at his own expense and provided certain units free service in park development.

Obviously Xue's request to retire was not because of poor health. Why did he want to retire then? It was learned that several things happened before he requested to retire:

Xue Guangxin once had a difference of opinion with a subordinate unit regarding certain technical problems. Later Xue's opinion was rejected by a responsible member of the unit on the ground that "a decision had already been made by the party branch."

On one occasion when Xue Guangxin, as supervising engineer, refused to put his signature of approval on a project for building a new park wall because he thought the design was improper, the bureau's secretary at that time signed Xue's name without Xue's consent.

At a meeting to review the bureau's work, a leading cadre of the bureau remarked: "Whether or not we have engineers makes no difference; in fact, it is better if we do not have engineers."

Under these circumstances, Xue Guangxin, being a deputy bureau director and engineer but not a party member, reluctantly submitted a request for retirement because he felt he could hardly work in such a situation.

Recently the leading party group of the Nankai District urban construction bureau held two meetings in connection with Xue Guangxin's case. At the meeting, members of the leading party group studied the party Central Committee's instruction on examining the work concerning intellectuals and earnestly carried out criticism and self-criticism among themselves. They also examined the leading party group's work and maintained that it was a dereliction of duty on the part of the party members if they could not work together with nonparty members as demanded by the party.

During the meeting the leading party group also set forth five requirements for its members regarding the question of implementing the party's policy on intellectuals. It said that all party members and cadres, particularly leading cadres, must regard intellectuals as part of the working class and treat them as fellow comrades; that leading party groups at all levels must humbly listen to and prudently handle any different opinions presented by engineers and technicians; that when a unified opinion cannot be reached in a short time, a decision should be deferred; that by no means should the intellectuals' opinions be ignored by taking organizational measures; that members of the leading party group must have regular heart-to-heart talks with the intellectuals; and that the leading party group must periodically review its work concerning intellectuals.

NEI MONGGOL ELECTRICITY CONSUMPTION -- The Nei Monggol Autonomous Regional People's Government recently issued a circular urging localities to improve management of rural electricity consumption. The circular points out: With the development of the economy, rural power consumption has increased year after year. In 1981 electricity used for agriculture and by banner- and commune-run industry accounted for one-third of the total electricity consumption by urban and rural areas. Under the present strained power supply situation, the region will ration out power supply to agriculture, light industry and heavy industry, in that order, to support agricultural production. Given the strained power supply, efforts should be made to improve rural power consumption. Waste, tapping of electricity and line losses are serious problems and require immediate attention to solve them. [Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 11 Jun 82 SK]

TIANJIN PEOPLE'S CONGRESS MEETING -- The Standing Committee of the 9th Tianjin Municipal People's Congress held its 19th meeting on 15 June to hear and approve the report delivered by the director of the municipal public security bureau on preparatory work for propagating and implementing the new traffic rules. The meeting also granted approval to establish a leading group for studying and discussing the draft of the revised constitution. The leading group is composed of Yan Dakai, Chen Bing, Lu Da, Yang Jianbai and Zhu Ziqiang. Yan Dakai, chairman of the municipal people's congress standing committee, presided over the meeting. Attending the meeting were Wu Zhen, deputy mayor of Tianjin, and Chen Fu, president of the municipal higher people's court. [Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 16 Jun 82 SK]

TIANJIN PUBLIC SECURITY -- Tianjin scored remarkable achevements in consolidating public security. The incidence of criminal cases in Tianjin in the latter half of 1981 dropped by 34.9 percent from the first half of the same year. In the first 5 months of this year, the incidence of criminal cases dropped by 34.7 percent from the corresponding 1981 period. The incidence of general and major criminal cases also decreased by a large margin. In the first 5 months of this year, the crime rate for delinquents was the lowest in the past 10 years or so. SHAANXI: SYMPOSIUM ON STUDENT EYESIGHT PROBLEMS

[Excerpt] A Shaanxi provincial symposium on preventing and curing shortsightedness in secondary and primary students, which concluded on 11 June, demanded that the whole of society be concerned about and protect students' eyesight, so as to cultivate talented people with all-round moral, intellectual and physical development for the four modernizations.

The incidence of shortsightedness among students has increased in recent years, while their eyesight has deteriorated. This is because their study burdens are too heavy and they are using their eyes too long every day. This problem has already had a serious effect on the selection of talented people. In recent years only about one-third of students attaining high marks in college entrance examinations have been completely up to standard in the physical examinations. Some 40 to 50 percent of these students are limited in their selected specializations due to health problems such as poor eyesight. Last year over 400 of these students were disqualified for failing the physical examinations.

This year, when the PLA was recruiting flying personnel among senior secondary students in Shaanxi, 24.5 percent of those selected to take the physical examinations in Xian municipality and Xianyang and Weinan Prefectures were failed on account of eyesight problems.

At present the incidence of shortsightedness among secondary and primary students in most schools and most places in the province is continuing to increase. Generally speaking, the problem is more serious in the towns than the rural areas, more serious in the secondary than the primary schools, more serious in senior secondary than junior secondary schools, and more serious in key schools that in ordinary schools.

Speaking at the meeting, Vice Governors Song Youtian and Tan Weixu said: The poor health standard of the students and the deterioration in their eyesight are rather serious problems. Preventing and curing shortsightedness is a major affair related to implementing the party's education principle in an all-round way. It is also a major affair related to the four modernizations and the quality of the nation. They demanded that all sectors of society step up propaganda, resolutely implement the methods for protecting students' eyesight jointly stipulated by 10 central ministries and commissions, and take effective steps to prevent and cure shortsightedness among secondary and primary students.

SHAANXI RIBAO ON AUTUMN GRAIN PRODUCTION WORK

HK070935 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 0500 GMT 6 Jun 82

[SHAANXI RIBAO short commentary: "It Is Necessary To Grasp Autumn Grain -- A Major Matter" -- date not given]

[Text] The short commentary says: A bumper harvest of summer grain in our province this year is in sight. However, it is not yet in our hands. We have not yet fulfilled our quotas for grain production for the whole year. A major matter of grain production hinges on autumn. Particularly, in a situation in which the early autumn grain-sown areas throughout the province this year are some 2 million mu less than in previous years, to fulfill our quotas for autumn grain production, we must firmly grasp the season and make proper arrangements for cultivating more late fall crops.

Now, as a result of good growth of summer grain, grassroots cadres in some rural areas have tended to relax the grasping of autumn production. They have not carried out the plans for cultivating autumn grain vigorously enough. This is obviously incorrect.

Our country has a population of 1 billion. When we consider a problem and carry out work, we must proceed from this point and spontaneously arrange for the crop-sown areas in accordance with the state plan. We must by no means relax the grasping of autumn grain production because we ourselves have wheat. This will affect the fulfillment of the province's plan for grain production.

The short commentary says: To cultivate late fall crops sufficiently and well, we have many specific problems which need to be solved. Therefore, strengthening the work of organizational leadership is very important. In light of the new situation and the new problems which have occurred this year, leaders at all levels must do ideological and political work for the cadres and the masses, take such measures as are suitable to local conditions to fulfill the quotas for cultivating late fall crops on all fields and strive for a good harvest of autumn grain.

XINJIANG'S PLA COMMANDER ON MINORITY RELATIONS

HK100157 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 8 Jun 82

[Summary] On 7 June, the Urumqi PLA units called a rally to convey the spirit of the conference of the whole army on the work of reinforcing discipline and education and to make arrangements for the subsequent work of putting the spirit into action.

After Deputy Commander Li Changlin of the Urumqi PLA units conveyed the spirit of the conference, Commander Xiao Quanfu took the floor and called on his men to apply the spirit in their actions.

In his speech, Commander Xiao Quanfu emphatically pointed out: "Our units are stationed in multinational areas and they are mixing with the people of all nationalities day and night. Hence, all units should pay attention to strengthening the unity between the army and civilians in the border areas and improving their relations with the masses of the minority people. Therefore, they must place this above all in the work of reinforcing discipline and education. All units should also educate their ranks and ratings to patiently learn from the people of minorities, to consciously respect their customs and traditions, to vigorously help them develop production and enliven the economy, to improve their livelihood and to wholeheartedly work for the benefit of all nationalities. We should make our units good examples in uniting the people of all nationalities and in abiding by discipline so as to tighten their ties with the masses of the people."

XINJIANG'S WANG ENMAO MEETS TARIM SURVEY TEAM

HK081203 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 7 Jun 82

[Summary] The middle and lower reaches of the Tarim River comprehensive investigation team of Xinjiang region left Urumqi today for the Tarim Basin to conduct scientific investigation. To scientifically harness and exploit the Tarim Basin, the regional CCP committee and the regional people's government have decided that the provincial CCP committee and the regional scientific and technological committee should organize the comprehensive investigation of the middle and lower reaches of the Tarim River. Since last October, relevant units have organized personnel to conduct a survey of its course for investigation and to formulate the main points of the plan for comprehensive investigation.

"Leading comrades of the party and the government in the region, including Wang Enmao, Tomur Dawamat, Li Jiayu, Janabil and Simayi Yashengnuofu; and responsible comrades of the regional agricultural committee and the regional scientific and technological committee recently received the members of the investigation team. Comrade Wang Enmao encouraged the members of the comprehensive investigation team to carry forward the spirit of arduous struggle and strive to complete their task. They all declared: We must unite as one and despite strong wind, sand and the intense heat of summer, overcome difficulties, work hard and successfully complete the task of investigating the Tarim Basin.

XIAO QUANFU WRITES ON XINJIANG PRODUCTION CORPS

HK160229 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Radio article by Urumqi PLA Units Commander Xiao Quanfu: "Carry Forward the Revolutionary Traditions and Defend and Build the Motherland's Border"]

[Excerpts] The revival of the Xinjiang production and construction corps is a joyous event for the party, government and army, the people of all nationalities, and the military reclamation cadres and workers in Xinjiang. The CCP committee of the Urumqi PLA units and the commanders and fighters of the units stationed in Xinjiang extend fervent greetings on the revival of the production and construction corps.

The decision of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council and the Central Military Commission to revive the Xinjiang production and construction corps is extremely important for eliminating the serious sabotage done to the corps by the Lin Biao and Jiang Qing counterrevolutionary cliques during the 10 years of turmoil of the Great Cultural Revolution, reclaiming wasteland, defending the border and developing military reclamation work, developing the economic and cultural construction of people of all nationalities in the autonomous region, guarding against hegemonist aggression and defending the motherland's border. Under the leadership of the CCP Central Committee, the State Council, and the regional CCP committee, the production and construction corps is bound to play an ever greater role on the struggle to build and defend an affluent and civilized new socialist Xinjiang.

The Xinjiang production and construction corps and the PLA stationed in the region have formed a profound friendship of mutual concern, help, support and coordination and in uniting to face the enemy. We believe that, following its revival, the production and construction corps will certainly maintain and carry forward the fine revolutionary traditions, uphold the four basic principles and, guided by the line, principles and policies laid down since the third plenary session, continue to bring into play the revolutionary spirit of arduous struggle, build a high degree of socialist spiritual civilization, work hard to promote the all-round development of agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupations and fisheries, institute comprehensive management of agriculture, industry and commerce, and speed up the development of Xinjiang's economic and cultural construction. The corps will certainly win new and still greater victories and make still greater contributions in the region's socialist revolution and construction.

We believe that the military reclamation cadres and fighters of the corps and the PLA stationed in Xinjiang will unite still more closely with the people of all nationalities in the region, put militia work on a sound basis in three aspects, strengthen joint defense by army and people, maintain high vigilance against and be ready at all times to smash hegemonist conspiracies of aggression and subversion and the sabotage activities of a very few counterrevolutionaries, strive to consolidate and develop the region's excellent situation of stability and unity, and strive to build and defend an affluent and civilized new socialist Xinjiang.

URUMQI PLA LEADERS PROMOTE ARMY-PEOPLE UNITY

HK120315 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1650 GMT 11 Jun 82

[Text] In the last three weeks of May, Urumqi PLA units Commander Xiao Quanfu and Political Commissar Tan Youlin visited units in south Xinjiang to personally promote army-government and army-people unity and the unity of nationalities. They visited government at all levels to publicize the notions that, in Xinjiang, Han and minority-nationality cadres cannot do without each other and the people's army and the people of all nationalities are interdependent.

When inspecting work in the units, they solved problems affecting army-people unity and the unity of nationalities. They also brought together the leading cadres of local governments concerned and the PLA units to study measures for strengthening army-people unity in border defense. The local governments concerned also enthusiastically helped the PLA units to solve difficulties in daily life. Thus, army-people relations have been brought closer and the unity of nationalities strengthened.

XINJIANG LEADERS WATCH TANK DEMONSTRATION

HK160249 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Summary] A certain tank regiment of the Urumqi PLA units staged a training demonstration on 15 June. Leading comrades of the Urumqi PLA units, including Xiao Quanfu, Wang Enmao, Tan Youlin, Ismail Amat, Wei Youzhu, and Wang Fuzhi, watched the display. They also listened to reports on how the unit has stepped up political and ideological work, promoted military training and carried forward the revolutionary tradition of supporting the government and cherishing the people in recent years.

XINJIANG TO CONDUCT EDUCATION ON NATIONAL UNITY

[Text] Urumqi, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Xinjiang Uygur autonomous regional party committee recently decided to conduct education on nationality policy and national unity throughout the region in the next 2 months or so in order to further consolidate and develop the excellent situation of stability and unity in the region.

While activities of the "all-people decorum and courtesy month" were carried out last March, the new socialist practice of treasuring and promoting national unity emerged. Now the regional party committee has decided to strengthen national unity as an important aspect in deepening the "five stresses and four beauties" activities and building socialist ethics. This is aimed at making the party's nationality policy and its concept of national unity known to all so that they will find their way ever deeper into the hearts of the people. It is also aimed at encouraging leading cadres and Communist Party and CYL members of various nationalities to set examples in concientiously implementing the party's nationality policy and upholding national unity.

The regional party committee's decision calls for carrying out the following educational activities:

1. It is necessary to organize cadres of various nationalities throughout the region to study the Marxist theory on the question of nationality and the party's nationality policy. Through the study, cadres of various nationalities should be able to make a clear distinction ideologically and theoretically between the Marxist concept of nationality and the bourgeois concept of nationality and to overcome and prevent the two erroneous tendencies of big-nationality chauvinism and local nationalism. It is essential to further strengthen the unity between cadres of Han nationality and those of minority nationalities and that among cadres of various minority nationalities so that they will really treat one another as equals, live in harmony, trust, respect, support, understand and learn from one another. They should not say and do anything that is harmful to national unity.

2. It is necessary to successfully conduct propaganda and education among the masses of various nationalities, with the stress on those living in cities and towns. Various localities should compile teaching materials on nationality policy and national unity and organize propaganda teams. After a short period of training, these propaganda teams, led by principal responsible comrades of local party and government organizations, should give specific and lively lectures on nationality policy and national unity according to the actual conditions in their areas or department. Party committees at various levels of the production and construction corps should systematically conduct education on nationality policy and national unity among the workers and staff members on reclamation farms so that they firmly adopt the idea of loving, building, defending and taking root in Xinjiang and vigorously doing good turns for people of various nationalities in the region.

According to their own distinct features, the press, radio and television stations and other journalist units should begin special columns or special programs to carry articles on the new socialist relations among various nationalities. They should publicize that safeguarding the unification of the motherland and strengthening national unity are in the fundamental interests of the people of all nationalities and that the four modernizations are the common goal of struggle for the people of all nationalities. They should propagate the great achievements of the party's nationality policy over the past 32 years as well as stirring deeds in upholding national unity.

Literary and art units should pay attention to creating works on themes of national unity. They should vigorously produce films, perform dramas and dances and sing ballads and other musical pieces on such themes. Theorists and historical researchers should write articles expounding the Marxist theory of nationality and the party's nationality policy and publicizing the history of various nationalities working together to make progress and defend the frontiers of the motherland, the mainstream in the history of national unity and the brilliant cultures and arts of various nationalities. Publication departments should vigorously compile and publish various reading materials on nationality policy and national unity.

3. It is necessary to combine education on nationality policy with the checkup on the implementation of the nationality policy and the solution of practical problems. Through the study and checkup, all industrial and mining enterprises, people's communes, farms, livestock farms, regimental farms and residential districts should conscientiously implement the "Rules on Strengthening National Unity" issued by the regional party committee in 1980, or formulate a "pledge on national unity" according to the actual conditions of their own units, with a view to turning the results of the education into regular action of the cadres and masses. After checking up on the implementation of the nationality policy, a conference should be held in the latter half of this year to commend good persons and good deeds in promoting national unity, to set up units and individuals as advanced collectives or exemplary persons and to popularize fine experiences in strengthening national unity.

XINJIANG VIEWS ON REFORMING SECONDARY EDUCATION

[Text] The Xinjiang regional people's government recently approved a draft of views on the trial-restructuring of secondary education. The views pointed out: It is necessary to gradually attain 3 "50 percents" in the region's higher education structure. In the urban areas, ordinary senior secondary schools, and secondary vocational and technical schools, that is, professional and technical schools and secondary vocational schools, should each account for 50 percent; in the county seats, ordinary secondary schools and vocational schools should each account for 50 percent; and in the agricultural and pastoral areas, ordinary secondary schools and agriculture and animal husbandry secondary schools should each account for 50 percent.

The views emphasized: There are some 60,000 senior secondary graduates in Xinjiang each year, but the institutes of higher education can only enroll about 4,000 of them. There are more than 50,000 others who need employment. Due to their lack of professional knowledge and ability, these students are unable to meet the needs of industrial and agricultural production. The four modernizations drive needs large numbers of laborers with specialized knowledge and skills. However, the new workers accepted from among graduates of ordinary secondary school have to undergo training as apprentices. This adversely affects the raising of labor productivity. By developing vocational and technical education, we can cultivate qualified laborers for the state's economic departments and also train talent for all sectors and trades of the collective and individual economy. It is therefore essential to restructure the region's secondary education.

The views pointed out: The restructuring of secondary education mainly involves the restructuring of the senior secondary stage. To ensure that education in this stage meets the needs of the socialist modernization drive, it is essential to walk on two legs and adopt various ways in running schools. We should simultaneously develop ordinary education and professional and technical education, all-day schools and work-study part-time schools, and state-run schools and schools run by professional departments, factories, mines and other enterprises and the people's communes. In the future, except for some places where there are not many ordinary secondary schools for minority nationalities, where we should appropriately develop senior secondary education, we should mainly concentrate on developing professional and technical schools, secondary vocational schoolds, and agriculture and animal husbandry middle schools.

The views explained: The state will not assign the graduates of professional and technical schools, secondary vocational schools and agriculture and animal husbandry schools. These graduates will be recommended by the labor departments, examined by the recruiting units, and employed according to their specialities. They can also be mobilized to get organized to find their own employment. Graduates of professional and technical schools, secondary vocational schools and agriculture and animal husbandry secondary schools can apply for the entrance examination for institutes of higher education [word indistinct].

The views also make specific stipulations on the training and appointment of teachers in professional and technical schools, secondary vocational schools and agriculture and animal husbandry schools, the specialities taught in these schools, [words indistinct], expenditures, and school premises and equipment.

BRIEFS

GANSU INDUSTRIAL ACHIEVEMENTS -- Industrial enterprises throughout Gansu Province set a production record in May. They had 659 million yuan of monthly output value, a 4.7 increase over the April figure. In the January-May period, they fulfilled 42 percent of the annual production plan, surpassing the figure of the corresponding 1981 period by 8.5 percent. LIEN HO PAO ON ECONOMIC REVITALIZATION MEASURES

[Text] The session of the Executive Yuan yesterday adopted the five measures submitted by the council for economic planning and development, saying that the Central Bank of China should continue to pursue a flexible monetary policy to lower the bank interest rate and actively promote the plan for investments in public utilities for 1983. The Executive Yuan pointed out that all units concerned should carry out the measures firmly in order to bring about an early revitalization of the national economy.

Sun Chen, vice chairman of the council for economic planning and development under the Executive Yuan, delivered a report at the session describing how the "plan to improve the environment for investments and to encourage investments" and the "plan for followup measures to minimize present difficulties in commerce and industry" are being implemented. He also discussed the successes and failures. He said: There are 27 measures in these two plans. Four of them, including one which encourage investments for tax exemptions and reductions, are the most important ones in stimulating investment willingness. However, because the world economy is still stagnant, the council for economic planning and development, following the instructions issued by President Chiang and Premier Sun, has submitted, after due deliberation, the following five measures in an effort to stimulate investment willingness.

1. On the basis of article 3 of the regulations to encourage investments, the scope of tax exemptions and reductions by making investments will be expanded to include all civilian "production enterprises" that have purchased locally made machinery and equipment.

2. Strategic industries and those industries supported by the council for economic planning and development may apply for long-term, low-interest plans in purchasing machinery and equipment at home and abroad. Loans for importing equipment will be extended in the new Taiwan currency.

3. The plans for investments in public utilities made by the units at the central, provincial and municipal levels within the 1983 budget should be given impetus with the coordination of the council for economic planning and development and put into practice at an early date.

4. The Central Bank of China should continue to uphold the flexible monetary policy so as to arouse enthusiasm in making investments, to revitalize economy and to help lower the bank interest rate.

5. It is necessary to adhere to the principle of simplification and effectiveness in implementing all other measures in the above-mentioned two plans and to conduct discussions and make improvements from time to time.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION CONFERENCE WITH ROK ENDS

OW161103 Taipei CHINA POST in English 13 Jun 82 p 8

[Text] Minister of Economic Affairs Chao Yao-tung and Korean Minister of Finance Na Ung-pae yesterday issued a joint statement pledging closer cooperation in trade and economic matters in general during the closing session of the three-day ministerial level meetings of the 16th Sino-Korean economic cooperation conference.

The joint statement, which was signed by both ministers in a ceremony immediately following the close of the conference, calls for appropriate measures to ensure cooperation in selected industries, such as machinery and textiles, as well as increased cooperation between small and medium enterprises in both countries. The statement further called for the exchange of information between the two countries on economic and fiscal policies.

New Measures

A number of specific areas for cooperation were outlined in the statement, including the establishment of bilateral workshops and exchange programs for the purpose of enhancing scientific and technological cooperation in such fields as agriculture, industry and telecommunications. Measures aimed at the further expansion of trade between the two nations were also agreed upon, including the removal of trade barriers, reduction of import duties and strengthened cooperation and coordination in dealings in the international market.

Old Business Resolved

One matter of old business seems to have been settled concerning the import of Korean-made motorcars by the ROC. The Chinese side has agreed to continue the importation of the Korean-made automobiles in return for an agreement from the Koreans that they will import auto parts produced in the ROC. The Koreans added, however, that it would be 1986 before the Koreans would consider the importation of foreign cars. While the car issue seems to have been settled, no agreement was reached during the three-day officer-level meetings and the three-day minister-level meetings regarding shipping disputes. The matter will be taken up again when the second Sino-Korean shipping conference meets later this year. Next year's economic conference will be held in Seoul.

NEW HIGH-PERFORMANCE JET FIGHTERS TO BE BUILT

OW170221 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] The Chinese language UNITED DAILY NEWS in Taipei reported today that the Republic of China is actively studying the feasibility of manufacturing a high-performance jet fighter which will replace the F-5E and will ultimately become the mainstay of the Republic of China's Air Force.

According to the report, the National Chung Shan Institute of Science and the Center of Aeronautical Development are actively studying the manufacture of a high-performance fighter which they have tentatively called the XF. A ranking researcher said the U.S. refusal to sell high-performance fighters to the Republic of China has hastened the pace of the research program for the new XF fighter.

According to the daily, in the development of the new plane many state of the art technologies have been employed which have greatly reduced the time needed for research. The paper says a number of qualified foreign experts have visited the aeronautic development center to see the work and have shown their approval, giving the researchers great confidence in their ability to complete the project. Meanwhile, it is understood that the work has reached the body design stage and machinery is being tooled up to manufacture the high thrust jet engine which will be used in the plane.

EXECUTIVE YUAN SAYS NO NUCLEAR WEAPONS PLANNED

OW160919 Taipei International Service in English 0100 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] The Executive Yuan declared that although the Republic of China is capable of developing nuclear weapons, it will not produce such weapons. Following repeated statements from President Chiang Ching-kuo to this effect, it said: Our future policy of nuclear research and study will be directed towards peaceful use of nuclear energy. In a written reply to a question by Legislator (Sun Yuan-shen), the Executive Yuan noted that although nuclear weaponry is a powerful deterrent force, what the country wants is to destroy the communist regime, not to build weapons that can be used against our brothers on the Chinese mainland.

HSIN WAN PAO CONDEMNS U.S. FALKLANDS MOTIVES

HK161453 Hong Kong HSIN WAN PAO in Chinese 16 Jun 82 p 8

["Evening Talk" column: "A Dirty Experiment of War"]

[Text] Is It Truly Great?

"Britain is truly great!" Is this so? When Britain was a country where "the sun never set," it was big, but it was not great. Later, its own people have sighed that it had become a "small England," but this is not necessarily insignificant.

Those Who Pursue Dreams

Since World War II, some former colonialist countries have given away their colonies one after another. This was done against their will under the pressure of the situation, but after all this was a good choice.

However, people differ in their values. Some people are not willing to understand the problem in this manner and are willing to live in the dreams of the past that will never come true. This, in fact, is very deplorable and so is their temporary excitement.

An Experiment

This war on the Falkland Islands has been a war in which the United States and the United Kingdom jointly fight against Argentina. The military base of the United States and the United Kingdom on Ascension Island, the American tanker planes, the U.S. spy satellites, the U.S. spies in Argentina and the new type of U.S. missiles have all been serving the United Kingdom.

Why are the Americans so eager to help? Apart from other motives, they want to use the blood and lives of the British and Argentine people to carry out a special experiment in modern conventional warfare.

Being Made Use Of

Some U.S. publications, including U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT, have mentioned that the Falklands war is of special significance for the United States. For the United States has formed a "Rapid Deployment Force" (contingency force) to deal with "regional crises" and it needs the experience in carrying out long-range raids, organizing logistics for such raids and coordinating the use of the new methods of warfare. For all this, they can refer to the experience the British task force has gained in the Falklands war. Some publications have even pointed out that it is just the same for the British force to leave its country to fight on the Falklands as it is for the U.S. force to leave its country to fight in the Persian gulf. The position of the military base on Ascension Island in the Falklands war is just the same as that of the military base on Diego Garcia Island in the Indian Ocean in the Middle and Near East wars.

Doing Too Many Evil Deeds

After meddling in the Falklands disputes, the Reagan administration is now colluding with the Begin regime, trying to expel the Syrian troops, eliminate the PLO and occupy Lebanon. Its features have been completely laid bare.

Those who have done too many evil deeds are doomed to death. This Chinese saying has been proved true, because it is an inevitable law. Yankees are no exception to this rule!

WEN WEI PO REBUTS SUN YUN-HSUAN ON UNIFICATION

[Editorial: "Rebutting Sun Yun-hsuan's 'View on Reunification'"]

[Text] A "Symposium on problems related to the Chinese mainland" is being held in Taipei, and Sun Yun-hsuan attended the symposium and gave a speech there, in which he talked glibly about the "China question and the reunification of China."

What is different in his speech from the anticommunist hackneyed tunes of some high-ranking Taipei officials is that he has adopted the attitude of thirsting for the reunification of China. Moreover, throughout the speech, he refrained from advocating launching a counterattack on the mainland to cooperate with the forces acting from inside and he has put forward the suggestion that a peaceful choice between the three people's principles and communism should be included in the scheme for the reunification of China. The smell of gunpowder has been reduced, the tone has become more gentle and it seems that he has been conscientiously discussing the problem. If he is really exploring a way to peacefully reunify the motherland, we will certainly welcome him no matter what peaceful unification scheme he advocates. However, if the speech was aimed at arousing confusion in the discussion of the problem in order to cheat the scholars both at home and abroad, he will be refuted by the research results of these scholars and his true ugly colors will be exposed by them.

Naturally, Sun Yun-hsuan upholds unifying China by the three people's principles. In order to justify his view, he has put forth the following three reasons.

1. The CCP once declared: "Doctor Sun Yat-sen's three people's principles are what is demanded in today's China and our party is willing to fight for the thorough implementation of these principles." These words were correct, but they cannot be used to support Sun Yun-hsuan's view. The reason is very simple. The promise we made more than 40 years ago has long been carried out by us. We have already achieved our national independence, our people have already obtained democracy and our advocation for "giving land to those who work on it" and for "controlling capitalism" has not only been realized, but many better things have also been achieved by us. China today has already made the transition from the three people's principles to socialism. The "today" we talked about in the past has already become the past. How can we force China to return to its past?

2. Communism is not suited to China's national conditions and is not the demand of the people. This is the repetition of what they said long ago and is not worth refuting. In fact, if we make a careful study of the evolution of the ideology in the history of China, we can always find the obscure longing for communism. We can find it in Confucius' advocation for "a world that belongs to all the people" in The Book of Rites. We can find it in the advocation of "dividing the wealth between the poor and the rich equally and making the noble and the humble equal" during the peasant upsurge at the beginning of the Song Dynasty. We can find it in the ideal of "everywhere there is no unfairness and everywhere there is no one who does not have enough food and clothes" that Hong Xiuquan upheld in his "land system of the heavenly kingdom" and we can also find it in Kang Youwei's "on the society that belongs to all the people." How can communism be unsuited to our national conditions? How can it not be the demand of the people? The 32 years' practice of socialism has turned a backward and chaotic old China into an initially prosperous and powerful new China. This is a fact that no eloquence can deny.

3. Taiwan has already become a paradise of the three people's principles. This is obviously a lie that has been said by shutting one's eyes to the facts. The infiltration of foreign strength shows that true national independence has not yet been achieved; the enforcement of a curfew and the measures that have been adopted to guard against and suppress the people shows that democracy is only empty talk; and furthermore, the wide gap between the rich and the poor is against the principle of people's livelihood. What the Taiwan authorities boast about is the so-called "taking off of the economy." The truth behind it is that this is only a false prosperity that has been brought on Taiwan by foreign capital. If all the foreign capital withdraws, there will be nothing left for Taiwan except cheap labor. How can there be anything to boast about in this false prosperity? Relying mainly on ourselves and soundly opening up economic prospects is the only way that we Chinese should take.

In fact, it is not time now to debate the problem of which social system, the one on the mainland or the one in Taiwan, is better. We should solve this problem through peaceful competition between the two systems. It cannot be accepted by the people, if one party forces its system onto the other. However, the reunification of the motherland is the common demand of the people of both areas. Forcefully linking the unification of the motherland to the reform of the social system will only create obstacles to and harm the cause of reunification. This is against the demand of the people.

The actual situation in China and the people's demand is very clear. We should separate the problem of the unification of the motherland from the problem of the social system and handle the two problems separately. Realizing the unification of the motherland by peaceful means and then letting the people decide which social system they will choose after a prolonged economic competition is the only feasible scheme.

SEMINAR ON CHINESE MANAGEMENT OPENS IN HONG KONG

[Report: 'Seminar on Chinese Enterprise Management Opens"]

[Text] The seminar on Chinese enterprise management, which is being jointly sponsored by the faculty of business administration of the Chinese University of Hong Kong and the Industrial Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and which will last for 6 days, opened yesterday in the Chinese University of Hong Kong. During the seminar, some academic treatises and reports will be given on the question of enterprise management in China and academic discussions will be held. Those giving reports include Yu Guangyuan, vice president of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences; Jiang Yiwei, deputy director of the Industrial Economics Institute; and Min Jianshu, Jin Yaoji, Xue Tiandong, Rao Meijiao and Deng Longwei, professors and lecturers in the Chinese University of Hong Kong. Several hundred people will participate in this seminar.

This seminar, which is being cosponsored by the Chinese University of Hong Kong and the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences for the first time, is aimed at promoting academic exchanges between Hong Kong and the mainland and promoting the development of China through research and discussions. It is expected that such seminars will be held every year in the future alternately in Beijing and in Hong Kong.

REAGAN SPEAKS TO UN SESSION ON DISARMAMENT

OW171954 Beijing XINHUA in English 1940 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Text] United Nations, June 17 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan launched a strong counter-attack at the Soviet Union today by accusing it of carrying out global aggression and expansion. In his half-hour speech to the special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament today, the U.S. President played down the Soviet promise "not to be the first to use nuclear weapons" as "empty" and asserted that "we need deeds, not words, to convince us of Soviet sincerity."

He said that in the nuclear era, the major powers bear a special responsibility to ease the sources of conflict and to refrain from aggression. "That is why we are so deeply concerned by Soviet conduct." He accused the Soviet Union of aggressions against Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan. "The decade of so-called detente witnessed the most massive Soviet buildup of military power in history. They increased their defense spending by 40 percent while American defense spending actually declined in the same real terms. Soviet aggression and support for violence around the world have eroded the confidence needed for arms negotiations," he added.

Reagan stated, "While we exercised unilateral restraint they forged ahead and today possess nuclear and conventional forces far in excess of an adequate deterrent capability."

He said that the Soviet promises "are in deep contrast to their performance". "So we have embarked on an effort to renew our strength that had fallen dangerously low. We refuse to become weaker while our potential adversaries remain committed to their imperialist adventures," he added.

He declared, "We stand ready to take the next steps down the road of cooperation through verifiable arms reduction. Agreements on arms control and disarmament can be useful in reinforcing peace; but they are not magic. We should not confuse the signing of agreements with the solving of problems. Simply collecting agreements will not bring peace. Agreements genuinely reinforce peace only when they are kept. Otherwise we are building a paper castle that will be blown away by the winds of war."

President Reagan said: "Let me stress that for agreements to work, both sides must be able to verify compliance. The building of mutual confidence in compliance can only be achieved through greater openness. I encourage the special session on disarmament to endorse the importance of these principles in arms control agreements."

He also accused the Soviet Union of using chemical weapons in Afghanistan, Laos and Kampuchea. He said: "There is conclusive evidence that the Soviet Government has provided toxins for use in Laos and Kampuchea, and are themselves using chemical weapons against freedom fighters in Afghanistan."

He went on to say: "We have repeatedly protested to the Soviet Government, as well as the Governments of Laos and Vietnam, their use of chemical and toxin weapons. We call upon them now to grant full and free access to their countries or to territories they control so that United Nations experts can conduct an effective, independent investigation to verify cessation of these horrors."

U.S. SAID TO DISMISS USSR PLEDGE ON ARMS USE

OW171222 Beijing XINHUA in English 1208 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Text] Washington, Jun 16 (XINHUA) -- The United States today shrugged off the Soviet pledge not to be the first to use nuclear weapons as "unverifiable and unenforceable", and "not an effective way to reduce the danger of nuclear war".

Referring to Brezhnev's pledge read by Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko to the U.N. disarmament conference yesterday, State Department Spokesman Dean Fischer said, "A simple pledge gives no assurance that an aggressor would not in fact resort to the first use of nuclear weapons during a conflict or crisis." "A pledge of this sort is unverifiable and unenforceable," he said.

He added, "The United States aims both to deter war -- either nuclear or conventional -- and to achieve balanced and verifiable agreements providing for substantial reductions in the level of armaments." "We believe this is a more effective and credible means of reducing the danger of war than a promise not to use nuclear weapons first," Fischer said.

The spokesman reaffirmed President Reagan's position contained in a speech on last November 18 that "no NATO weapons, conventional or nuclear, will ever be used, except in response to attack."

The U.S. insists that given the Soviet Union's enormous conventional forces, a pledge on non-first use of nuclear weapons on the part of NATO, as Secretary Haig noted in his April 6 speech, "would be tantamount to making Europe safe for conventional aggression".

The long-standing U.S. policy has been to hold out the threat of nuclear retaliation against an overwhelming attack by conventional forces, especially in Europe where the Warsaw Pact maintains a major edge in non-nuclear forces.

Fischer announced that Haig and Gromyko will "continue their ongoing series of discussions" Friday at the U.S. mission to the United Nations.

ZHAO ZIYANG MEETS UN INDUSTRIAL OFFICIAL

OW161336 Beijing XINHUA in English 1257 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, Jun 16 (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, met at Zhongnanhai here today with 'Abd al-Rahman Khane, executive director of the United Nations Industrial Development Organization, and Mrs. Khane. Cooperation between China and the U.N.I.D.O. has rapidly developed in recent years.

During the conversation, Premier Zhao expressed his appreciation of U.N.I.D.O.'s efforts to promote the development of the Third-World countries' industries. He said China will continue to support the U.N.I.D.O.'s work. He also said he was satisfied with the cooperation between China and the organization and said China will enhance its cooperation with the organization.

Dr. Khane briefed Zhao on the U.N.I.D.O.'s work and plans. He thanked China for its support of the organization.

Present at the meeting were Lu Xuejian, vice-minister of foreign economic relations and trade, and Nessim Shallon, resident coordinator of the United Nations system's operational activities for development.

ACTIVITIES HELD FOR VISITING FOREIGN ATHLETES

Meeting With Wan U

OW171328 Beijing XINHUA in English 1313 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Wan Li met with the teams from 10 countries that are here for the 1982 Beijing international track and field invitational tournament at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon. The 10 teams represent Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, India, Japan, Romania, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago, the Soviet Union and China. Also attending the meeting were J.B. Holt, general secretary of the International Amateur Athletics Federation, and Mrs. Holt, who have come here on invitation to watch the tournament. On behalf of the Chinese Government, Vice-Premier Wan Li welcomed the participating teams to China for the tournament. He said: "We will learn from your good techniques through the tournament and hope to strengthen the friendship between the people and athletes of China and other countries."

J.B. Holt, on behalf of the teams of the various countries, expressed thanks for China's invitation and warm hospitality.

Present at the meeting were Li Menghua, minister in charge of the Chinese Physical Culture and Sports Commission; Rong Gaotang, the commission's adviser; Xu Yinsheng and Lu Jindong, the commission's vice ministers; Zhong Shihtong, president of the Chinese Olympic Committee; and Li Wenyao, chairman of the tournament's organizing committee. The tournament will open at the Beijing Workers Stadium tomorrow and last three days.

Athletic Association Banquet

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- The organizing committee of the 1982 Beijing international track and field tournament and the Chinese Athletic Association gave a banquet this evening in the Great Hall of the People in honor of the participants in the meet scheduled for June 18-20.

Li Wenyao, chairman of the organizing committee and president of the C.A.A. extended a warm welcome to the participants from Czechoslovakia, Finland, the German Democratic Republic, India, Japan, Romania, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago and the Soviet Union.

He said the purpose of the tournament is to exchange experience and promote friendship among the athletes. With world famous athletes coming to the tournament, the meet provides a good chance for the Chinese athletes to learn, Li said. "With the common efforts of us all, the tournament, we hope, will contribute to the friendship between the people and athletes of all countries and help raise the level of the athletics," he said.

J.B. Holt, general secretary of the International Amateur Athletics Federation, also spoke at the banquet.

Attending the banquet were Li Menghua, minister in charge of the Chinese Physical Culture and Sports Commission; Rong Gaotang, adviser to the Commission; Xu Yinsheng and Lu Jindong, vice-ministers of the commission; Zong Shitong, president of the Chinese Olympic Committee; and representatives of the Chinese coaches and athletes.

INTERNATIONAL HEARING ON HUMAN ENVIRONMENT ENDS

[Text] London, June 16 (XINHUA) -- "Action or disaster" is the slogan of a two-day international public hearing on the human environment which ended here today. More than 100 environmental experts from 39 countries took part in the discussions and debate, the aim of which is to provide the world community with information on the environmental challenges likely to face the world during the next ten years and to exchange views on how to halt environmental degradation.

Many famous scientists made speeches at the two-day hearing. According to their views, the main cause of the changes in the atmosphere is the burning of fossil fuel, including oil and coal. They called on all governments to take measures to control pollution in the atmosphere, including more efficient use of energy, increased use of non-fossil fuels and installation of the best available pollution control technologies at large industrial facilities using fossil fuels.

Many scientists pointed out that soil erosion will be a very serious problem in the human environment during the next ten years if no protecting measure is taken. According to data presented at the hearing, land in tropical regions is more susceptible to erosion than in temperate regions. More than half of India's land suffers from soil degradation as a result of floods, salinity and alkalinity. More than 22 percent of the crop land in Africa is currently at risk from unchecked soil erosion.

It was revealed at the discussions that deforestation is giving rise to various damage in the human environment, especially in tropical moist forests. Some scientists estimated that if deforestation of the tropical moist forests continues at the present rate, one million species could become extinct by the end of this century. One speaker pointed out that more than a quarter of all Central American tropical moist forests has been destroyed since 1960 for the production of beef.

All the participants agreed that the dramatic growth in population and poor management of land and forests are the principal causes of deforestation and soil erosion. They called for closer international cooperation to push the protection of the human environment to a new stage and urged the world community to attach more importance to the environmental issue and mobilize the whole society for environmental protection.

PRC-JAPAN-U.S. CHEMISTRY SEMINAR HELD

OW151306 Beijing XINHUA in English 1201 GMT 15 Jun 82

[Text] Shanghai, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Ninety-nine scientists from China, Japan and the United States of America have convened the second trilateral seminar on organometallic and inorganic chemistry. The organometallic chemistry is closely related with energy, environmental protection, petrochemistry, pharmaceutical industry and organic synthesis. Research of this subject has a significant bearing upon economic construction and the people's livelihood. The first such seminar was held in Beijing in June of 1980.

At the seminar, which began yesterday and will run through June 18, a total of 90 papers on the latest research in organometallic chemistry will be read.

The Shanghai municipal government and the Chinese Academy of Sciences jointly gave a banquet here yesterday evening in honor of all participating scientists. Lu Jiaxi, president of the Chinese Academy of Sciences and one of China's outstanding chemists, attended the banquet.

After the seminar, the foreign participants will tour Beijing, Guangzhou and Xian.

RENMIN RIBAO ON U.S. TIES WITH ASEAN STATES

HK171144 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jun 82 p 7

[Article by Li Chang [7812 1603] and Han Yan [7281 3508]: "United States Develops Its Relations With ASEAN States"]

[Text] The United States is paying more and more attention to its relations with the ASEAN countries. Starting last year, U.S. Vice President Bush, Secretary of State Haig and Secretary of Defense Weinberger visited one after another the Philippines and Singapore. In the meantime, the U.S. Government's contacts with other ASEAN countries have also been strengthened. The frequent visits of U.S. Government officials to the ASEAN countries have strongly demonstrated U.S. concerns for this region.

There are two main reasons why the United States has to pay close attention to its relations with the ASEAN countries. First, the ASEAN countries have rich resources and their economic development has been relatively rapid. They provide many essential raw materials to the United States as well as important markets for U.S. products. According to reports, U.S. investments in the five ASEAN countries increased from $3.5 billion in 1975 to more than $5 billion last year. This investment growth was higher than the U.S. investment growth in any other region. Moreover, the total value of loans and guarantees which the United States has provided to the ASEAN countries through its import-export banks in the last 5 years has amounted to $2.2 billion. At the same time, the United States has also promised to continue to provide vast loans to the ASEAN countries to assist them in developing their economies and increasing their military strength. The volume of trade between the United States and the ASEAN countries increased from $11 billion in 1977 to $22 billion in 1981. Last year, as the U.S. export value to the ASEAN countries amounted to $8.8 billion, ASEAN was the fifth largest trade partner of the United States in the world. Most of the tin and rubber needed by the United States is imported from the ASEAN countries -- 89 percent of the rubber, 68 percent of the tin, 28 percent of the hardwood, and 6 percent of the petroleum imported into the United States are supplied by the ASEAN countries. On the other side, 20-30 percent of the total export commodities of the ASEAN countries went to the United States. This makes the United States the second largest trade partner of the ASEAN countries.

Second, the ASEAN countries are situated in a position of strategic importance where the Pacific Ocean meets the Indian Ocean. The Straits of Malacca lying between the Malay Peninsula and Sumatra is the "strategic passageway" between the Indian Ocean and the Pacific Ocean. Subic Bay Naval Base and Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines are serving as the "pivotal midway stations" of the United States to provide logistics services to its military forces sent to the western Pacific Ocean and the Indian Ocean. U.S. newspapers have pointed out that Southeast Asia is very important to the United States for maintaining its naval forces and safeguarding its economic interests in the western Pacific Ocean, the Indian Ocean, the Arabian Sea, and the Persian Gulf.

Contending with the Soviet Union for hegemony is another reason for the United States to develop its economic ties and trade relations with the ASEAN countries and to increase its military strength in this region. The Soviet Union has not only backed Vietnam in invading Kampuchea and menacing the safety of the ASEAN countries, but has also turned Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam into its own military base. Since Cam Ranh Bay is just a short distance away from the Straits of Malacca, the Soviet Union can easily strike a heavy blow at the United States by blockading the Straits of Malacca. Armitage, U.S. deputy assistant secretary of defense, said on 8 June, "This region is facing a more and more serious latent menace, the USSR, which shows no sign of subsiding." He pointed out that these moves by the Soviet Union pose a threat to the transport channel linking the Indian Ocean and the Straits of Malacca which are of life-and-death importance to the United States and its allies.

When paying a visit to Singapore in April this year, Bush announced, "The United States will maintain a strong and stable force in the Pacific region." It is reported that the U.S. Armed Forces and Thailand have recently carried out a joint sea and amphibious manoeuver. The Thai military sources said that this was a joint military operation between the United States and Thailand which was unprecedented in scale. In addition, according to reports by Western media from Pattaya, Thailand, a spokesman of the U.S. 7th Fleet said that the fleet is stepping up war preparations in response to the USSR Navy's large-scale concentration in the Indian Ocean and the Pacific Ocean.

GU MU MEETS NOTED AMERICAN CHEMIST 17 JUN

OW171314 Beijing XINHUA in English 1258 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- State Councillor Gu Mu met with noted American chemist, Professor W. Doering, at the Great Hall of the People here today.

Professor Doering, who enjoys much prestige among the world chemists, is a member of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences and director of the Department of Chemistry at Harvard University. He has lectured at Fudan University during his three visits to China since 1980 and is an honorary professor of chemistry at Fudan University.

In their conversation, Councillor Gu praised Professor Doering for his efforts in the training of chemists for China. Vice-Minister of Education Huang Xinbai attended the meeting.

REASONS FOR PROPOSED SOVIET GOLD SALES VIEWED

HK170921 Harbin HEILONGJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 29 May 82 p 1

[Article by Zhong He [0022 0735]: "Why Does the Soviet Union Want To Sell Large Amounts of Gold?"]

[Text] According to a report by the U.S. BUSINESS WEEK of 3 May, in 1981 the Soviet Union was estimated to have sold 275 to 325 tons of gold abroad. This year the Soviet Union will probably sell another 400 tons of gold.

Why does the Soviet Union want to sell so much gold?

In 1981 the Soviet Union had a poor harvest for the third consecutive year and its grain output was short of the target by 60 million tons. According to a Western estimate, the Soviet grain harvest this year will still be very poor. A poor agricultural harvest makes it necessary for the Soviet Union to import grain in greater quantitites. Over the past few years, the Soviet deposits of foreign exchange in Western banks have dropped drastically. It originally had deposits of $9 billion in Western banks, but now there is only $2 billion left. In the coming year, it will have to spend some $10 billion on the import of grain. This is one of the reasons why the Soviet Union has to sell gold in great amounts.

According to foreign news agencies, the Soviet bloc may owe a total of $86 billion to the West. In order to pay off the principal plus interest of the loans, it is also necessary to have a large amount of U.S. dollars. This is probably another reason why the Soviet Union has to sell gold in great amounts.

The burden of the Soviet Union is getting heavier. It has to spend several billion dollars annually to groom its two thugs, Cuba and Vietnam; it has fallen into hopeless straits in its aggression in Afghanistan has to spend as much as $1 million every day; in order to maintain stability in its "backyard," it has to make some "sacrifices"; and, in order to prop up its forces in the strategic areas of the world, it also has to spend some money. Adding up these amounts, the depressed Soviet economy is in a more difficult position and its state treasury is in more straitened circumstances.

In its attempt to dominate the world, the Soviet Union makes every effort to expand armaments and has to spend as much as $100 billion on armaments annually. How can the Soviet Union's income cope with such a large amount of expenditure?

At its peak, the price of gold in the world gold bullion market was $850 an ounce. Recently the price of gold has dropped drastically to $364 an ounce. Gold traders have predicted that the price of gold may continue to drop. In order to obtain the foreign exchange it needs, the Soviet Union's selling its gold regardless of the price. We can thus see the great trouble the Soviet Union is now confronted with.

IENG SARY ACCUSES SRV OF CHEMICAL WEAPON USE

OW171639 Beijing XINHUA in English 1625 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Text] United Nations, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Democratic Kampuchean Deputy Prime Minister Ieng Sary today accused Vietnam of using Soviet-made chemical weapons to kill innocent Kampucheans. Addressing the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament, Ieng Sary said chemical weapons supplied by the Soviet Union have killed "thousands" of Kampucheans.

Between October 1981 and April 1982 alone, he added, about 1,200 people were killed by chemical weapons and 400 others have suffered from serious poisoning. The chemical weapons are an added scourge as large quantities of Soviet-supplied conventional arms have killed several hundred thousand Kampuchean people, he noted.

Ieng Sary said, "Vietnamese forces began to use chemical weapons several weeks after the beginning of their invasion of Kampuchea.... And recently, they have been applying them in remote mountain regions. They even have expanded their use to cities and other places where international inspectors could go," he said.

Ieng Sary said Vietnamese forces have used planes to introduce toxic materials into water systems. The Vietnamese also have used artillery to launch gas-filled shells, he said. "Kampuchea is actually a vast experimental camp for Soviet chemical and bacteriological weapons," he said.

Ieng Sary demanded strict observation by Vietnamese forces of the 1925 Geneva protocol prohibiting the use of chemical and bacteriological weapons and of a 1972 treaty banning the production and stockpiling of bacteriological and toxic weapons. "It is imperative to take effective measures to stop the chemical warfare carried out by Vietnamese and Soviet expansionists against the people of Kampuchea, Laos and Afghanistan," he said. An international meeting on chemical warfare should be held at the earliest possible date.

Ieng Sary said foreign invasions have "kindled war in Kampuchea and other parts of the world." These invasions "have violated U.N. Charter principles and internal law, accelerated arms races and disturbed the international society," he stressed.

He is now going to Luxembourg, Portugal and Spain for official visits at the invitations of the three governments.

West German Vice Chancellor and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, West German Ambassador to China, Guenther Schoedel and Chinese Ambassador to West Germany, Zhang Tong saw Huang Hua off at the airport in Bonn.

Huang Hua arrived in Bonn, June 14 and had talks with President Karl Carstens, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Foreign Minister Genscher about international issues and the further development of bilateral relations between China and West Germany.

YE JIANYING MEETS 'BRITISH FRIEND' 17 JUN

OW180605 Beijing XINHUA in English 1318 GMT 17 Jun 82

[Text] Beijing, Jun 17 (XINHUA) -- Ye Jianying, vice-chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China and chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, met and had a conversation at his residence here today with British friend Eric Hotung.

Hotung's family and Dr. Sun Yat-sen shared a deep friendship. Sun Yat-sen lodged at Hotung's home on two occasions when he passed through Hong Kong on trips.

During the meeting, Hotung presented Chairman Ye with a photograph of a rally in Hong Kong to welcome Dr. Sun Yat-sen, which was presided over by Hotung's father.

Expressing thanks for the photo, Chairman Ye said that it will be displayed in the former residence of Soong Ching Ling, honorary president of the People's Republic of China.

Wang Bingnan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, was present at the meeting.

FRIENDSHIP DELEGATION ENDS FRENCH VISIT

OW161932 Beijing XINHUA in English 1906 GMT 16 Jun 82

[Text] Paris, Jun 16 (XINHUA) -- A delegation of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries left here for home today with the impression that Sino-French friendship is rooted deep in the hearts of the French people.

Xie Bangding, head of the delegation, told XINHUA before his departure after a 3-week visit that people of all strata in France attach high importance to China's achievements and role and the promotion of understanding and friendship between the peoples of the two countries.

Louis Bazin, executive chairman, and Mrs. Helene Marchisio, vice chairman of the France-China Friendship Society, saw the delegation off at the airport.

During its stay here, the Chinese delegation was received by Georges Fleche, chairman of the France-China amity group of the French National Assembly in the name of the president of the parliament, and Robert Laucour Net, chairman of the senator's group of France-China amity.

The delegation had been here at the invitation of the France-China Friendship Society on the occasion of the 30th anniversary of the founding of the society.

RENMIN RIBAO ON WAY TO SETTLE MALVINAS DISPUTE

HK181037 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 18 Jun 82 p 6

[Commentator's article: "The Correct Way To Solve the Malvinas Dispute"]

[Text] The commanders of the two belligerent parties on the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands reached a cease-fire agreement on the evening of 14 June. Under the British troops' strong pressure, the Argentine defending troops were forced to agree to retreat from the Malvinas Islands. Having paid a high price, the British expeditionary troops eventually managed to reoccupy the islands. And thus the 2 and 1/2 month fighting between the British and the Argentines in the Malvinas region came to an end. However, the cease-fire did not end the dispute between Britain and Argentina over the Malvinas Islands, and the sovereignty over the islands remains an unsolved issue. The Argentine President Galtieri said on 15 June in a televised speech to the whole country that the end of the Malvinas combat did not imply "the end of the national cause" for which Argentine was striving to resume its sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands; and that Argentina would carry on its fight for this goal. At the same time, the Argentine people also declared with one voice that Argentina never give up its sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands.

The dispute over the Malvinas Islands is an issue left over from the colonial days. Argentina's sovereignty claim, which reflects its national aspiration ever since its independence almost 200 years ago, has enjoyed the sympathy and support of the Third World countries, especially the nonaligned nations and the Latin American countries. After the outbreak of the armed conflict between Britain and Argentina over the Malvinas Islands, the nonaligned nations coordination committee twice issued communiques, reiterating the nonaligned nations' stand to support the Argentine claim for sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. The Organization of American States twice convened foreign ministers' meetings, denouncing the "unjust and bully offensive" waged by Britain and reiterating its support for Argentina's claim for sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands. The UN Security Council also twice adopted resolutions urging Argentina and Britain to halt their hostilities, withdraw their military forces and seek a peaceful settlement. Furthermore, the UN secretary-general carried out mediations under the mandate of the Security Council. All this is enough to show the international community's strong demand for a reasonable settlement of the Malvinas dispute.

Regrettably, all peace efforts to solve the dispute failed and the armed conflict escalated. This eventually inflicted heavy losses on both parties. From the very beginning, Britain was determined to regain the islands by force. It did not hesitate to dispatch a large fleet on an expedition with large numbers of aircraft and troops, and mounted repeated offensives, resulting in aggravation of the conflict. By putting higher and higher demands, Britain placed one stumbling block after another in front of the mediation efforts of the United Nations and other nations. It vetoed Security Council Resolutions 502 and 505. All this points to its lack of sincerity toward a peaceful solution of the dispute and its resolve to reoccupy the islands by military means. This attitude of Britain has met with extensive world criticism. A temporary military success, far from resolving the Malvinas dispute, would hurt the national feelings of Argentina and other Latin American nations and bring grave consequences on Britain itself.

The U.S. stand toward the Malvinas dispute was condemned by Argentina, the Latin American nations and some Third World nations. As an ally of Britain and Argentina, the United States carried out mediations after the Malvinas dispute broke out. However, the U.S. proposal was not only partial to the British, but also created conditions for the United States to directly meddle in the Malvinas Islands which are important strategic points.

Therefore, it was rejected by Argentina. After its mediation efforts had failed, the United States declared open support for Britain, followed by sanctions against Argentina, to the opposition of most Latin American nations. The United States also provided Britain with huge military aid, vetoed the calls of most Security Council member nations and ignored relevant resolutions of the Organization of American States. These U.S. moves have hampered the peace efforts of the international community, deepened the rift between itself and the Latin American nations and left a scar in its relations with Argentina.

It is the consistent stand of the Chinese people to firmly oppose imperialism, colonialism and hegemonism and to support all Third World nations and people in their just struggle to defend state sovereignty and territorial integrity. The relevant resolution of the nonaligned countries and the Organization of American States' support for Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Malvinas Islands should be respected and implemented. Only then will this dispute left over by history be justly and rationally solved. This is the correct way to solve the Malvinas dispute. This not only conforms to the interests of the British and Argentine peoples, but is also beneficial to safeguarding peace in the South Atlantic Ocean and in the world.

VENEZUELA PRESIDENT MEETS PRC WOMEN'S DELEGATION

[Text] Caracas, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Venezuelan President Luis Herrera Campins said here today that he hoped to see closer exchanges between the official and civilian organizations and associations of Venezuela and China. The president expressed this hope when he received at his residence a delegation of the Chinese National Women's Federation. The delegation is paying a visit at the invitation of the women's front of the Venezuelan ruling Christian Socialist Party.

Since its arrival here on June 7, the Chinese delegation has paid calls on the wife of the president, Mrs Herrera, and Mercedes Pulido de Briceno, minister of state for women's participation in development. The hosts and guests exchanged experiences in work for the welfare of women and children. The Chinese delegation also visited the Venezuelan children's fund and toured the states of Lara and Guayana.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES STRIVING FOR BUMPER HARVEST

[Editorial: "Get Mobilized, Seize a Bumper Autumn Harvest"]

[Text] What is the situation of summer production in our rural areas? How is the work of summer harvesting, summer sowing and summer field management progressing? These questions about agricultural production are the common concern of people throughout the country. Messages from everywhere have showed us that hundreds of millions of peasants have already been mobilized to ensure that a good job is done in the summer harvest and to strive to seize a bumper autumn harvest by speeding up summer sowing and summer field management.

Along with the implementation of various rural policies, especially the gradual establishment and improvement of the various forms of the production responsibility system, the superiority of the collective economy has been given full play and the peasants' initiative in taking responsibility for the assigned land and in improving working conditions has been unprecedentedly high. Despite the relative increase in droughts, spring cold waves, and hot drought winds since the winter wheat was sown last year, thanks to careful field management and the great efforts we have made to fight natural calamities, we have only suffered losses in output in the middle and lower basins of the Huang He. However, we have achieved a bumper harvest in all the basin areas of the Chang Jiang and are expecting a good harvest in most parts of southwest and northwest China. We expect that the total output of summer food grain will be the same as last year and that of rapeseed will be increased. At present, the early rice is growing better than last year, the middle-season rice is growing well and the situation of the production of cotton, soybeans, sesame and other industrial crops is greatly improved. However, we also should soberly realize the following unfavorable conditions: Because of the frequent occurrences of natural disasters, we may not be able to fulfill this year's target of increasing summer grain output, and the output of some crops sown in spring May also be affected to a certain degree by these natural disasters; and the prolonged drought and flood in some areas has become a serious threat to summer production. Therefore, seizing a bumper autumn harvest is a very arduous task, and we should never relax our efforts or slacken our vigilance. Leading groups at all levels should make a comprehensive analysis of all favorable and unfavorable conditions and factors and guide the pesasants in avoiding the unfavorable factors while employing the favorable factors in order to soundly and satisfactorily carry out production for the whole year.

The autumn grain output constitutes a major part of the grain output of the whole year in our country. Furthermore, most of the industrial crops are also harvested in autumn. This year, as the summer grain production may not reach the planned targets, the fulfillment of the task of increasing the grain output of the whole year will depend on the autumn production. Thus, we must produce 80 percent of the total grain output of the whole year this autumn. This percentage is higher than we have ever achieved in the past; therefore, the task is very arduous. At present we should vigorously do the following two things: on the one hand, we should fully and satisfactorily sow grain and industrial crops this summer. This is especially important for those areas where there was a reduction in their summer grain output. These areas should make a proper readjustment of their original cultivation plans and strive to plant more late-autumn grain crops. They should also make full use of all their land, including the small stretches of land by the side of rivers, lakes, roads and houses that can be used for planting crops. All localities should proceed from their actual conditions, avoid unfavorable conditions, give play to their favorable conditions and strong points and tap their potential. In giving play to their local favorable conditions, they should follow the rational planning of the upper level which has taken into account the whole situation. In carrying out their cultivation plans, they should follow the guidance of the state plan and ensure that enough land is allocated for growing grain. On the other hand, we should pay special attention to scientific farming. We should raise the output per unit of land to increase the total output by sowing at the proper time, strengthening scientific field management, and popularizing fine strains of crops and good methods of farming.

Practice over many years has proved that sowing at the proper time can increase output. This is an important measure to increase autumn grain output. As conditions differ in different areas, so does the proper time for sowing. Generally speaking, ensuring sufficient time for the growth of the crops sown in summer will not only raise output, but also ensure an early harvest of the crops so as to facilitate autumn plowing and sowing. A saying among masses goes: "In spring every day counts, in summer every hour." The experience of the masses has also proved that "to ensure 100 percent of the harvest, 30 percent depends on sowing and 70 percent depends on field management." We should carry out scientific field management in a timely manner for the crops that are sown in spring and reaped in summer, and make efforts to create conditions for increasing output and to reduce the factors that result in losses. In this way we will be able to ensure a sound high output.

Summer production is pressed for time and therefore the task is very heavy. The rural CCP organizations and government departments at all levels should strengthen their leadership, intensify their ideological and political education and fully mobilize and organize the basic-level rural cadres and the broad masses of peasants in order to heighten their sense of responsibility and give play to their initiative in autumn production. At the same time, they should actually help them to solve difficult problems related to their livelihood and production. They should proceed from the fact that in most communes and in production, farming is being carried out on a household basis. Therefore, they should encourage peasants to purchase plowing, threshing, processing and transportation apparatus on their own and to continuously improve their production conditions. Most of the original farming machinery and water conservation facilities that belong to the collective economy have already become a part of the productive force and we should give full play to their role.

Natural disasters often occur during the autumn crop production period and we should always be resolute and persist in fighting natural disasters and striving to achieve a bumper harvest. We should adopt measures to prevent natural disasters and fight against disasters when they occur. According to weather forecasting departments, quite a few natural disasters may occur this summer and autumn. All areas should maintain sharp vigilance and make adequate estimates of possible difficulties in order to make earlier preparations to overcome these difficulties, thus ensuring success.

Leading cadres at all levels should go deep in the frontline of production in order to conduct investigations and study, sum up experience, implement policies and perfect the production responsibility system. They should pay special attention to developing the agricultural productive force, better satisfying the personal interests of the peasants and further mobilizing and protecting the labor initiative of the cadres and masses in the rural areas. All trades and professions should fully support agricultural production by supplying seeds, fertilizer, farming tools, farm chemicals, electric power and fuel, and by providing funds and technology and facilitating the purchases, storing, transportation and contributions to the struggle to achieve a bumper autumn harvest.

RAILWAYS MINISTER DECRIES LAX SAFETY MEASURES

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Railways called a railway-wide telephone conference this afternoon to transmit the State Council's instructions on a report by the Ministry of Railways about a major accident involving the overturning of the No 193 passenger express train and to relay comments by leading comrades of the State Council on this accident. The telephone conference asked all railway workers and staff members to earnestly draw a lesson from this accident, to quickly improve current railway transportation safety and to see to it that the trains are operated safely and on time in a down-to-earth way.

Railways Minister Chen Puru made a self-criticism at the telephone conference. He said: Leading cadres of the Ministry of Railways, who did not exercise effective leadership in ensuring safety and operations, assumed a lax attitude, failed to impose strict demands and lacked thoroughness in their work style, should bear principal responsibility for the successive serious accidents reported recently. We feel in particular that the major accident involving the Jinzhou railway bureau with an overturned passenger express train was a disgrace to the railway departments. This accident has brought about a very bad impact at home and abroad and caused tremendous economic losses. I, in particular, should assume this serious responsibility. Although the State Council exempted me from punishment to see how I behave, yet my responsibility cannot be alleviated to the slightest extent.
